A NEW YEAR'S PRAYER

FOR a closer walk with man,
A bright and cheery face,
A heart to feel, a brain to plan
The weal of our lost race!

Help me, O Lord, to do my part,
My brother's load to bear;
With ready hands and tender heart
His cares and woes to share.

Walk with me, Lord, and fill my heart
So full of love divine,
That lonely cot and busy mart
May hear Thy voice in mine.

So may I seek through life's fierce strife
To hearten those who fight,
To lift man up, yet all my life
To lean on Thy sure might.

Editorial Comment Upon Current Topics of the Day

France seems strangely inclined to persist in her anti-biblical tendencies. Her Council of State, in allowing all stores to keep open on the Sabbath on condition that employes are granted one rest day in seven, may live to regret its action, when it sees the ruinous fruitage of this defiance of God's law.

The new Baptist Bible, producing translations by Baptist scholars, modernized and indicating the Baptist interpretations of Scripture, will hardly prove popular, even in the Baptist denomination. The precedent is not commendable, and the time is not yet when denominational Bibles can serve to propagate Christianity effectively.

Certain natural wells in western Australia which fill with water at night, become dry during the day. How characteristic of the experiences of some professed Christians!

The policy of substituting "dollars for bullets," as formulated by President Taft, is likely to prove a valuable slogan in the advocacy of world peace and arbitration. While it would be vastly better to establish a policy of "love for bullets," it will be a great day for the world when commercial diplomacy is able to convince the nations that war is stupid and impractical for business reasons. Commercialism may properly contribute to the moral uplift of nations and the world, while at the same time ministering to its own selfishness, and the President has rendered a service in pointing out this possibility.

The question of better marriage and divorce laws was prominently before the recent meeting of the Federal Council of Churches in Chicago, and is being forced upon the attention of the British Government. The weakness of the movement thus far is the failure to agree upon a plan of legislation that is comprehensive and satisfactory. Possibly this defect arises from a lack of expert investigation of the entire subject. The time is coming probably when the Federal Council of Churches should name a Commission of experts to study this problem in its every detail, providing the Commission with the necessary income and allowing it the fullest time in which to make its investigations, in order to insure conclusions which when laid before our law making bodies, will appeal strongly to them for favorable action.

It is announced that Chile and Peru have settled their long standing estrangement, which has led them often to the brink of war. They have set an example for others of our South American countries. The United States could not undertake a more important task than that of devising plans for the amicable adjustment of all South American disturbances.

The Archbald impeachment case, now being conducted before the United States Senate, has served to emphasize the fact that the needs of a vast country like ours have outgrown this form of procedure. Important legislation is at a standstill, because for three weeks already, practically four hours out of a six hour session each day, have been devoted to this case. And the end is not yet. Some other method should be devised for the hearing of such matters. At a time when the recall of judges is being advocated, it is more than probable that a closer scrutiny of judicial action will result in an increased number of impeachment trials. Probably a non-partisan Commission, created by Congress, or at least by the Senate, will be the remedy for such matters. At least a Commission could be authorized to take all the evidence for presentation in concrete form to the Senate, thus saving much valuable time for the highest branch of our law making body.

The recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, in the case involving the merger of the Union Pacific and the Southern Pacific Railroads, is of more than ordinary importance. It is to the effect that the purchase outright of one railroad by another is a combination which violates the provisions of the Sherman anti-trust act. There are so many ways of evading the direct consequences of a decision like this in such matters, that it is probable the public will receive little direct and immediate benefit, but the decision itself will have a tendency to safeguard the interests of legitimate competition, which in the last analysis can hardly fail to result in benefits to the people as a whole.

The newspapers continue to indicate the purpose of certain elements in the party of the incoming national administration, to nullify recent orders of the President extending the scope of the civil service requirements to about 56,000 additional employes and appointees of the government. These efforts will be watched by the country with increasing interest. The Nation has outgrown the spoils system, and the new heads of government will hardly care to invite popular wrath unnecessarily by turning back the dial of progress. Efficiency and character above all else should characterize all branches of the government service.

During the week of December 16th, a notable gathering assembled in Washington City in the interests of the Kenyon-Sheppard inter-State liquor shipment bill, designed to relieve the intolerable conditions which have developed in prohibition territory as the result of the indiscriminate inter-State traffic in intoxicants. Not the least important feature of the event was the assembling of four hundred men and women, representing every phase of temperance faith, business men, including several of great wealth, public officials, leaders in every department of moral reform, with a common purpose to advance the interests of the pending measure. Men like Colonel Maus of the U. S. Army; Brigadier-General A. S. Daggett, retired; Major J. B. Merwin, intimate friend of Lincoln; W. F. Cochran, a consecrated millionaire business man of Baltimore; Hon. Joshua Levering; Senator Wm. S. Kenyon of Iowa; Senator J. L. Sanders of Tennessee; Congressman M. L. Sheppard (Senator-to-be) of Texas; Attorney-General Cossett of Iowa; former Congressman J. M. Miller of Kansas; Bishops Luther B. Wilson and Earle Cranston of the M. E. Church; A. J. Barton of Texas, Secretary of the Board of Education of the Southern Baptist Church; women like Lillian M. N. Stevens, President of the National W. C. T. U.; Mary Harris Armor of Georgia, together with the leading spirits in practically all the great national temperance and reform movements, were heard in the conference, and all spoke a common message in support of the proposed law. VOL. I. No. 1.

Greetings from the New Board on Publication.

This paper enters its field under conditions that give great promise. The deep impression made by the Five Years Meeting and extending by means of its echoes, gives evidence of a broadening vision, a new consciousness of unity, and the conviction of a call to more effective service.

A new day has come for American Friends, and this paper has been chosen as the voice of the day.

The Publication Board stands unitedly for an aggressive, constructive policy, clearly and strongly evangelistic. As a servant of the entire body of Friends in America, this new publication will discourage and avoid controversy, and seek to promote unity, energy, and direction of purpose. It will endeavor to discover, enlist, and develop, the talents of our members, and in this way, conserve them for our own denominational use. It will bring reports from all departments of work to each reader, making its columns windows through which the whole field may be seen; but its duty in this respect is more than that of an impartial reporter. It will be partial to the work, and as a servant of Friends, press its interests, seeking to bring to all a sense of responsibility and of the urgency of a great demand.

The expressions of good will and offers of assistance that are reaching the Board from all quarters, are most encouraging and greatly appreciated. Not only will such offers be accepted, but we feel that we can with propriety expect the free service of Friends everywhere. Each member will be asked to maintain a permanent subscription, and to keep himself in touch with the activities of the denomination by constant reading.

As this paper enters its field contemporary with a new Young People's movement, it will naturally look to the young people for enthusiastic assistance. Young Friends are saying, "Give us something to do." One of the immediate results of this inspiring demand, should be a rapid increase in the circulation of the AMERICAN FRIEND, and freshness and vigor added to its pages.

Our editor, S. Edgar Nicholson, takes up his work as the first and the unanimous choice of the Board, and with their full confidence. We ask for him, and bespeak for him, the prayerful co-operation of all Friends.

FRIENDS PUBLICATION BOARD.

A Word of Salutation from the Editor.

It is no easy task to which the writer has been called as the editor of a denominational periodical. Conscious of the responsibility which such a position always imposes, heightened in this instance by virtue of the fact that the publication is to be the first product of official management upon the part of the church, the burden has been accepted with much trepidation and a profound solicitude for the undertaking.

This duty has come unsought. It would have been pleasant to have had the call directed to another, and to have escaped the obligations which the service will impose. It has been no light matter to sever the fellowship and associations of nearly two score years in a great movement designed to break the deadly grip of a monstrous evil upon our national life. But it is not always ours to choose the path of Christian service. When the church calls to duty, it is time to be about our Master's business. The call has been heard and the only alternative is to obey.

The future of Quakerism in America looms big with possibilities. A message of hope and cheer is in many hearts. A vision of a larger place in the up-building of the Kingdom of God in the earth has enveloped a multitude of our membership. The dawn of a wider outlook, wherein the tenets of our denominational faith, and the endeavors of our denominational activities will find fruitage in the enlargement of our borders, has gripped the attention of a host of our young people, who are more ready than hitherto to consecrate their lives to the cause of Christ and His Church.

There is work for all to do. Many of our problems still await solution. The best thought of the church, and the best endeavors of every life within the church should be called into action, that we may meet the obligations of present opportunities as loyal, efficient servants of Jesus Christ. If the AMERICAN FRIEND can be used as the instrument of the church to contribute to the realization of our denominational aims and anticipations, we shall feel that in large measure its purposes have been successful.

The management invokes the sympathy, the cooperation, the earnest prayers of all Friends in America, as it invokes the help and guidance of our Heavenly Father, in the efforts to produce a journal that in the highest sense will be worthy of our denominational name, and one which our membership will ultimately patronize, not from a sense of duty alone, but because they will come to realize they cannot afford to do without it.

THE EDITOR.

The New "American Friend."

With this issue the AMERICAN FRIEND, new series, goes out from its new home at Richmond, Indiana, as a messenger of the church to proclaim the gospel of a vital personal piety and consecrated Christian service as applied to our entire membership.

It is universally known, perhaps, that after full consideration, the recent Friends Five Years Meeting in session at Indianapolis decided to authorize the publication of a weekly periodical, and ultimately other literature, by a board of publication. This board, after proper organization and incorporation under the title of "Friends Publication Board" has acquired the property, subscription list and good will of the AMERICAN FRIEND, previously published at Philadelphia by the "American Friend Publishing Company," and this issue becomes Volume I, Number 1, new series, under the new management.

The action of the old Company, which went out of existence with the publication of last week's issue, in turning over the paper with all assets without cost to the church, was most magnanimous, and will be deeply appreciated by all our membership.

The new management, after the fullest consideration, has decided to retain the old name of the paper. It expresses exactly an appropriate title, characteristic of our continent-wide activities and responsibilities, and for the sake of the effect upon the old subscribers, was deemed most fitting. The form of the paper likewise has been retained, partly for the sake of uniformity in binding, and partly from inability as yet to determine upon any other form as being preferable for a permanent series.

The direct management of the periodical will fall upon the editor and manager, who is directly responsible to the publication board, which in turn is responsible to the Five Years Meeting which created it. That the management cannot hope to succeed is self-evident, unless it can have the sympathetic co-operation and support of practically the entire membership. The paper should soon find its way into every Friend's home in America. It needs this support in the first instance for its own sake, that it may become a source of profit and not a liability to the church. In the second instance, every home will need this weekly visitation of the messages which the church boards and committees, and interested contributors will be ready to send forth under the guidance of the Spirit.

Within a short while, the circulation should not only be doubled, but trebled, and ultimately quadrupled. It is the expectation of the management to increase the size of the paper to twenty pages just as soon as the patronage will warrant, and ultimately to twenty-four pages, which can be done if even one-half of Friends families will feel the responsibility of giving us their patronage.

The policy of the new management has been set forth in a recent circular, as follows:

The policy of the paper will be positive and constructive, in the endeavor to promote the highest interests of our denomination. Controversial utterances of a destructive tendency will be discouraged and avoided as far as possible, and it will be the steady aim to promote the unity and prosperity of Quakerism along helpful, constructive lines.

Probably it is not necessary to attempt further utterance at this time relative to policy. It is the feeling of the editor that in a denominational periodical, within proper bounds, limited only by the evident purpose to build up the church and advance the interests of the Kingdom, the columns of the paper should be open to all members who have a conviction upon live questions of concern to the church, and who have an intelligent opinion to express concerning it. This quite naturally cannot mean the liberty of unrestrained expression, which would only provoke controversy and schism. We are of the opinion that contributors can better afford for the sake of effectiveness in their own utterances and even more for the sake of the church as a whole, to err if necessary upon the side of conservatism in expression and tone, than to invite prolonged arguments upon non-essentials or upon matters which involve mere differences in terminology, by giving rein to extreme pronouncements.

These are matters to be worked out in detail, however, upon the merits of any particular case, but we cannot forbear to express the hope that all burdened minds will soon catch the spirit of unity and fraternal sympathy and co-operation, which so graciously characterized the recent Five Years Meeting. One thing should be made clear at the outset, that while the editor has the responsibility of guarding with zealous care the entire output of the paper, he cannot by any sort of interpretation be held to an endorsement of all contributions which are admitted to its columns. All Friends have equal responsibility with the editor of ministering to the welfare of the denomination and toning their utterances and activities, with this ultimate object in view.

We quote in conclusion again from the recent circular of the Board:

Certain important features will characterize the subject-matter of this paper:

1. It will be the aim to have a special message from two or more of the denominational boards each week, these to be supplemented frequently by substantial articles, which will bring an enlarged vision of our departmental work.
2. Special attention will be given to the activities of the Church, and Yearly Meeting news of interest to all.
3. A page or more will be devoted each week to the consideration of world-wide and nation-wide subjects of a moral, civic, economic and religious nature, that will be suitable in a religious journal.
4. The customary space will be given to contributed or selected articles, messages for the children, and other matters of a general and special nature, which should find place in a denominational periodical.

The New Year.

This is the season of good resolutions. For the most part they have to do with negatives. Men promise themselves that they will quit this, that or the other practice that is regarded as hurtful or inexpedient. We should have a reform in this particular. New Year resolutions should deal in positives as well as negatives. Men should not only cease to do ill, but they should acquire the equally important art of learning to do well. Many persons resolve to quit a bad habit, but because they have no vision of the abundant blessings of a positive good life, they have only the determination of an arbitrary decision of the will to hold them, and all too often they backslide to the old condition. Too often our public code of morals is negative. There are too many negative Christians. Too often the "Thou shalt nots" obstruct the vision of the all important and positive "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart." We wish for all our readers a glad new year, made possible not only by being kept from the evil of the world, but by the enjoyment of the fruition that comes from being and doing good.

Just a Little Patience.

This edition of the AMERICAN FRIEND has been produced under difficulties that are extremely embarrassing to the editor. All copy has had to be gathered and prepared far away from the place of publication, amid multitudinous other activities that have demanded attention. We implore, therefore, the indulgence and sympathy of all readers for the many imperfections of a "first effort" under such circumstances. This indulgence will have to be extended for a few weeks, until the new surroundings become somewhat normal. The editor and manager will be at Richmond, Indiana, permanently however after January first, and will get the whole work of the paper organized as speedily as possible.

A live, active, spirit-filled church in a community will not only point the way to a better life, but will actually lead men and women into the Kingdom. To be a guide post is important, but to be the instrumentality of impelling men and women into the path of righteousness is far better.

A vital piety in personal life is just as much a necessary part of religion as the vocal profession of salvation. The two are inseparable.

The problem of the church in the final analysis is the problem of glorifying God by ministering to the needs of humanity.

The heart experiences of redemption through Christ are worth more than all the philosophies of the theorists.

Christ's Presence Within.

Our immediate obligation is that of being witnesses for Jesus Christ. How many of us know him? How many of us have had a talk with him today? How many of us dare trust our future into his hands? How many are willing to take that pierced hand and walk by his side until he calls you up higher, going where he sends you, speaking what he gives you to speak, carrying the burden that he lays upon your shoulders, enduring the ache of heart if need be that should come, taking the providences of God as they come? "You are to be witnesses for me," he says. How many of us can certify in the presence of a congregation that there is such a person as Jesus Christ? When did he talk with you last? When did you realize, as the two disciples did who are spoken of in this story, that as you are walking in the pathway of life you have found that there was a silent person walking by your side, and you discovered that the Man of Sorrows, the Man of Galilee, was with you?

—Bishop Thoburn.

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America.

BY S. E. NICHOLSON.

The second quadrennial meeting of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, which was held in Chicago, December 4-9, 1912, has been described by the daily press as the greatest religious convocation which has ever assembled upon the American continent. This characterization is not greatly exaggerated.

The scope of the topics considered, the breadth of vision of the field to be possessed, the keen insight into the religious needs of the Nation as a whole, the conception of the world-wide mission of the Church of Christ, all combining with a determination to stand together in planning constructively for the up-building of the Kingdom of God in the earth, gave the impress of permanency and character and solidarity to the movement for Christian unity which no other attempt in this direction has ever possessed.

There is no apparent aim to establish an organic union of the churches. That is not a possibility, now at least; and probably there are not many who consider it desirable. That the thirty-two denominations, federated in the Council, may go far toward establishing and rendering practical the unity of Christian effort when applied to the common service of humanity, is already being demonstrated.

It has been said that the Council has been largely a paper organization thus far. This may be partially admitted as a fact, but without being regarded as a just criticism against the movement. It is not surprising that it has required time for these various denominations to ascertain their common points of agreement, while trying to relegate to the background somewhat their differences.

In a sense this effort to federate the churches in lines of practical Christian service, has had its counterpart in the efforts of our own denomination to establish the unity of all the Yearly Meetings in the Five Years Meeting. It has taken time for the Yearly Meetings to learn how to federate in spirit and in denominational activity, without losing too much of their identity, or sacrificing too much of their autonomy.

So it has been and still is in large degree with the Federal Council of Churches. Thirty-two religious bodies, many of which in past years have felt the call to occupy much of their time in pulling down some other body in order to establish more firmly their own footing, are now trying to learn that all are brethren in Christ Jesus. Quite naturally until they get their bearings, such a movement will have to be a federation more in name than in fact.

The recent session of the Federal Council, however, served to emphasize the miracle which has already taken place toward a vital, practical Christian unity that gives prophecy of great undertakings for the future of the church.

Through the efforts of Commissions and Committees, the constructive work of organizing for concrete results has already progressed far, and the fruitage is by no means insignificant.

Definition of the Council.

The following definition of the Council has been adopted by the Executive Committee, and is comprehensive of the meaning and scope of this movement:

The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America is a body of clerical and lay delegates, chosen by the national assemblies of the Christian Churches federated, and acts as the central congress of such churches under a constitution duly adopted, and thus manifests their essential oneness in Jesus Christ as their Divine Lord and Savior, and brings them into united service for Christ and the world.

Without in the least degree minimizing the marvelous progress of the church as being the soul of our national development and life, yet in the aggregate the efforts of the church to win America for Christ have been strangely of the haphazard sort that have lacked continuity, and in consequence have fallen short of covering the entire field effectively.

With no practical concert of action or understanding, each denomination has been left to devise and work out its own plans for the evangelization of the people. Under such conditions, it is only natural that some fields have not been covered at all, while others have felt the blight of over-attention, in which bitter rivalry has crushed out all opportunities for religious growth and development, or competition has weakened the power of each working unit in the community.

The spirit of the Federal Council is to change this abnormal relationship. "A new order of things is beginning," to use the words of the Executive Committee, "an order in which individuals shall do more, and not less; in which voluntary service shall secure more valuable results than in the past, because both individuals and denominations will concentrate the resources and energies of all in an increasingly systematic and united endeavor for the winning of the nation and of the world for Christ."

There are tasks too big for any one denomination to accomplish alone. The relief of human suffering, the cleansing of our cities and communities, the promotion of saloon suppression, the establishment of Sabbath observance, the development of multitudinous lines of social service, the advocacy of world peace and international arbitration, the betterment of family life, the civilizing and Christianizing of the masses at home and abroad, the very preaching of the gospel "to every creature," all these need to feel the touch of an intelligent cooperation that is commensurate with the needs to be supplied.

The vision of the Council was a wide one. A message of cheer was sent to the distressed Christians in far-away Turkey. The new Republic in China was given recognition as offering new possibilities for Christianity in that eastern land. It was agreed to prepare for the celebration in 1917 of the 400th anniversary of the beginning of the Reformation. The aid of great scientific societies was invoked in the destruction of the dread hook worm peril. The sanctity and purity of the family life were the objects of serious and earnest attention. Gambling and lynching were condemned. The need of unity on the part of the forces fighting the liquor traffic was strongly emphasized. Fraternal reciprocal relations between churches in certain communities were urged. The right of both employes and employers to organize for adequate means of conciliation and arbitration in industrial disputes was declared. A declaration for an equitable division of the products of industry was elaborated by emphasizing the application of the Christian principle to the acquisition and use of property. The need of unity of effort in both the Home and Foreign mission field was affirmed. Proper methods of an aggressive evangelism among all the churches were set forth as the means of bringing regeneration to the Republic.

To use the words of a great daily newspaper, the Indianapolis News:

The delegates to the Council addressed themselves to the solution of problems that all recognized—intemperance, social justice, care of immigrants, international peace through conciliation and arbitration, the rights of the laboring man, proper housing, uniform divorce laws, child labor, the conservation of health, the removal of vice from the daily surroundings of the poor, equality of treatment under the law; in brief, practical Christianity.

It is encouraging to know that Friends are a part of this movement, contributing their full share of responsibility to its success. Much of the activities planned is in harmony with our own denominational policies and mechanism. That we will be greatly benefitted as a church in turn will not be questioned. The inspiration of united action always brings added strength to each component part.

There are some difficulties yet to be overcome. The wisest plans have not yet been determined. Experience will be an invaluable teacher in pointing the way for more efficient service. Caution will have to be exercised in more directions than one. The movement will have to guard against becoming top heavy with organization machinery, and unconscious tendencies to become unbalanced by over emphasizing certain lines of work to the exclusion of others.

Upon the whole, the movement is a wholesome one. A great American daily summed up its importance in the following words:

It was the greatest interdenominational church conference ever held in this country and its declarations were the most radical ever adopted by any great church body in America. The demand for efficiency of service and for working unity were very strong and the machinery has been provided to put these declarations into effect.

The Five Years Meeting as Interpreted by Some Leading Friends.

STATEMENT BY JAMES WOOD.

Several highly important things were accomplished at the recent Five Years Meeting.

I. The Society of Friends in America found itself; and it found a live vigorous body, with a mission in the world and a purpose to accomplish it. Friends in America have not had such an experience since their early days. This was not all accomplished by the meeting itself. The time was ripe for it, the very air triumphant, the church was vibrating with a sense of approaching day-break, hundreds of anxious, waiting souls were filled with eager expectation, and the way had for months been prepared by earnest prayer, full of faith. The church had been made to hear the call "to arise and shine." The Five Years Meeting was merely the instrument to formulate the methods by which the desired end might be obtained. We make a most serious mistake if we think the work is accomplished by what was done at Indianapolis. As well might the farmer say that his harvests were gathered when he had decided to have so many teams of horses, and the best types of wagons, and the most approved reapers and a good efficient threshing machine. All these must be paid for and put in operation, and there must be careful oversight and good management and a lot of hard work. But it is all worth while. Will American Friends continue to think it is worth while? There is the rub. There have been many schemes as good as those of the Five Years Meeting which have come to naught because of deficient zeal and energy and a lack of self-denial, steady application and good staying powers. The Society is now on trial as never before in our day. Will it prove that as its day is so shall its strength be? This rests with itself.

II. The Five Years Meeting demonstrated that with all our differences we are one united body. Of course we have differences, there can be no body of independent thinkers who do not have differences; differences of points of view; differences of opinions on the same statement of facts; differences of judgment as to their relation to each other; differences in conclusions. It is a poor body that is otherwise, because they let others do their thinking for them and they simply say "me, too." With the utmost freedom of expression we found that we loved one another, and we found too, that we loved one another better when the meeting adjourned than when it convened.

III. The young people took the direction of the meeting. At the moment when "all seemed lost," when it seemed that all the hoped-for practical results would come to naught, one of the youngest delegates in a few simple words changed the day. Then there was a splendid demonstration that young men and young women are needed for action. From that moment the Meeting was an uninterrupted success.

All the Boards and Committees thereafter appointed were largely made up of young people. Their bright faces are turned toward the morning, filled with hope and determination.

Boyd Carpenter, the Canon of Westminster, and formerly Bishop of Ripon, in a recent address said, "The Church of Jesus Christ is revising its methods of work because it has revised its study of human nature." So the Society of Friends in America is wisely revising its methods, and overhauling its machinery, and re-determining its place in the world and re-examining the work it has to do. May God help it to do this work to His own glory!

Mt. Kisco, N. Y.

STATEMENT BY DAVID HADLEY.

The recent Five Years Meeting marked an epoch in the history of the Friends' Church in America. It was the most significant and hopeful of any session that has yet been held by that body.

An intense individuality in the Church, accompanied by the distinguishing teaching of the immediate guidance of the Spirit, has left an impress upon the general membership of the church, that when interpreted in the light of human infirmities leaves grounds for widely divergent views and interpretations of fundamental doctrines and usages. Then too, the cast of widely separated distances and consequent differences of viewpoint have produced an original and independent line of thought and action, so that in consequence, it has seemed almost a hopeless task to fuse and unify all these elements into an organic union.

Having attended as a member all the meetings of this body from its inception, I regard the one recently held at Indianapolis, both from the general as well as the specific character of its deliberations and conclusions, as marking an encouraging outlook for the future work of the church, in the development of its various activities, and in the presentation of clear and well enunciated essential doctrines relative to the development of a true Spiritual experience, so important in a permanent organic union.

Uniformity is not demanded, or specially desired, but no adhesive organism can be successfully secured, unless as a church we are baptized by one Spirit into one body, "that they all may be one."

The candor and freedom of the discussions, the kindly atmosphere and the personal bearing of those who took part in the deliberations at the various sessions, indicated humility and brotherly condescension and consideration. With our unique form of organization, with the Yearly Meeting the essential unit where all members have a voice in its deliberations, the Five Years Meeting as a delegate body will exercise a wide and wholesome service in shaping the policy of the church at large, and creating a balancing force against local irregularities in doctrine or usage.

The most important and far reaching enterprise sanctioned and put in active form by the Five Years Meeting, was the establishing of a Publication Board, through which the church may be supplied with a periodical and Sabbath-school literature, which should have the loyal support of the church.

A care should be taken not to enforce and execute too many plans of work marked out in the conclusions of the Five Years Meeting, in order to have time for the full development of each.

Danville, Indiana.

STATEMENT BY JOHN R. CARY.

I do not think that anyone who was a member of the recent Five Years Meeting has any doubt that its sessions marked the beginning of a new era in American Quakerism. This confidence is due in part to the very remarkable unity of spirit and purpose by which the members were animated, and this is good ground for optimism. But in addition to this there were a great many who were impressed by the new machinery which was set up, giving the appearance of activity. A very intelligent report of the Meeting in The Continent spoke of our having adopted the Presbyterian plan of working by boards and drew the contrast with the past in favor of modern efficiency.

It seems to me that right here is the point where the new and the old may part company, and where we must be careful to hold fast that which is good in the past, while we put all the force we can into the new. The power that Quakerism has had at any period when it had power was the force of individual character controlled by the Spirit of God, and it has never been the result of organization. Of course, this is in a measure true of other Protestant churches, but peculiarly true of Friends. The Quaker who is remembered, who made his mark on his age, was the one who walked with God, and not the one who was a strong executive.

It may be that we need a better organization, but it is a very significant fact that our sister churches are not perfecting their organization. They are seeking out ways to develop the activities of individual members. This should teach us that whatever it was in the old Quakerism that made strong units must be preserved while we are learning how to work together; we must leave opportunity for the personal following of the Divine call while we are strengthening our organization.

I do not see any particular difficulty in doing this provided we recognize the wisdom of it, and so I am hopeful as to the outcome. The people who were at Indianapolis were too intelligent and experienced to be deceived into thinking that organization was the end. They knew it was the beginning, and they went home with the purpose fixed in their minds to get the Church "hitched up" to the machinery. They knew that power belongeth unto God, and that the power can only come to us as a church through the multitude of little channels scattered over the country. But it is a stimulus to each member to feel that his little contribution is working its way into the great current swelled by so many others, and that's one big thing we brought home in October.

STATEMENT BY DAVID M. EDWARDS.

It is the general opinion that no gathering of Friends in the history of Quakerism in America has been of equal import with the session of the Five Years Meeting recently held in Indianapolis, Indiana.

A gathering of this sort is great in proportion to the accuracy with which it interprets the spirit of the organization which it represents, and the precision with which it points the direction of future progress. That the last session of the Five Years Meeting was great in this meaning of the term is the confident belief of all.

In proof of the accuracy with which the spirit of Friends in America and even the whole world was interpreted, witness the unanimity of action which was the final outcome in almost every question which arose. True, marked differences of opinion appeared during the session, but when final action was taken everyone readily acquiesced. This harmony was further extended by the general sanction of fraternal delegates from London and Dublin Yearly Meetings and visiting Friends from Philadelphia and Ohio Yearly Meetings.

Still another evidence of this accuracy was the fact that the progressive element was the dominant one. Every measure was calculated to cause our Society to move out and help take the whole world for Christ in every phase of its complicated life.

That the direction of future action was accurately pointed out is evidenced by the fact that we found our tasks to be in common with all other Christian organizations. For the future, if we engage in the activities selected by the Five Years Meeting, we will be working shoulder to shoulder with all well-meaning people who desire the betterment of the world in which we live. In doing this the distinctive work which our Society is to do was not forgotten, but was fully appreciated.

Future generations will recognize the date of the sessions of the Five Years Meeting of 1912 as a dividing line between two epochs of the history of American Quakerism. It will be regarded as a time of liberation from fears and suspicions, and of the discovery of a common purpose and a common task.

The greatness of the 1912 Five Years Meeting will depend, however, upon the success with which its conclusions are carried out; and this success will depend upon the measure and quality of our cooperation.

STATEMENT BY EDMUND STANLEY.

The recent Five Years Meeting marks an epoch in the history of the Society of Friends. It is too early to attempt to foreshadow the trend of activities of the Church under the newly adjusted conditions that must be met and the new machinery that is to be put in motion. Whatever the outcome of the new and untried conditions may be, one thing seems conspicuously apparent and that is, the action of the meeting has fixed a common meeting ground, a base from which all advance movements can be directed. The Church was instituted for a purpose, and was given contact with the source of power and equipment necessary to accomplish that end.

The great Commission contains the message for action, and the Word of Truth abounds in instructions for those who enter the service of King Immanuel. With this authoritative basis we can know our objective point, and have a sure guide by which to direct our course and carry on our aggressive campaign for the advancement of His Kingdom.

Like an unerring compass placed in the hands of the pilot of a vessel drifting on a tempestuous sea in the darkness of a starless night, comes the message to the Church in the hour of anxious waiting: "It has ever been and still is the belief of the Society of Friends that the Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament were given by inspiration of God; that, therefore, there can be no appeal from them to any other authority whatsoever."

The Commissions have given to the Five Years Meeting food for thought as to our duties and opportunities toward the great problem of world evangelization. As these duties loom up before us we long to know more of the way to accomplish this service; and as we turn to our fellow-workers, we are greeted with words of encouragement, with helpful suggestions, with hearty cooperation from those about us who are enlisted in like service. There may be a diversity of opinion as to the best way to accomplish certain desired results, but when the mission—the salvation of a soul—has been fulfilled, the individual has become a disciple, a new creature in Christ Jesus, all differences are lost to sight and we rejoice in victory.

It is a blessed privilege to have the right to say on the authority of the Book to an inquiring world, "By Grace are ye saved through faith, and not of yourselves; it is the gift of God," and then to be able to enforce the declaration from the real heart experience, and to say, "I know whom I have believed."

The special lines of service are enlarging and multiplying. Larger preparation and more varied equipment become necessary. A new vision of the mission fields is before us. This new vision has warned the professing Christian world that victory can come only through a larger and better preparation for the conflict.

The men and religion movement in the homeland is the logical sequence; and the great on-march for world evangelization is waiting for re-enforcements and supplies to come out of this effort to awaken the Church to a sense of the magnitude of the mission in its hands.

As evidence of this response to the call for service, there can be seen the larger interest in Bible study, the increased activity in the Bible School, the organization of Gospel and Mission Bands; and, by no means the least in evidence, the growing liberality for the support and enlargement of Christian activities of every kind.

The attention of the Church must be kept steadily upon the mission before it, the heart must pulsate in unison with the Great Fountain of inexhaustible supply. And through consecrated will and purpose the army of the Lord's people have unprecedented victory already in sight. It is the time to lift up united voices in the shout of victory and to move forward. "Prove me herewith," and the world will see the fulfillment of the words of the Captain of the Lord's Hosts, "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

FROM THE BOARDS OF THE CHURCH.

Foreign Mission Department

OUTLOOK AND PLANS OF AMERICAN FRIENDS BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS FOR THE YEAR 1913.

I am asked for a brief statement for our Board of its outlook and plans for the coming year for the first issue of the AMERICAN FRIEND for 1913. The Church has committed to us as a sacred trust, the administrative care of her mission work in Mexico, Cuba, Africa and Jamaica. In these fields there are approximately 500,000 people who are dependent upon us for whatever knowledge of gospel truth they will receive.

One hundred thousand children are rapidly developing into the men and women who will soon have the destiny of those fields in their hands; and a large part of the education they will receive, that will give them a moral and religious basis for their lives, will come from us.

To have charge of this work on the field, we have a force of fifty-seven missionaries and seventy-nine native workers—preachers, teachers and Bible women to be supported in whole or in part. Several of these are worn with long and hard service. All are working at a task that should have many more helpers, and on a support barely sufficient for existence. The work this year will require an expenditure of $44,400 for its support, beside about $15,000 for building purposes.

For these funds we are entirely dependent upon the contributions of the home congregations. Equally important for the spiritual success of the work is its support through the "fervent effectual" prayers of the Friends in our home meetings. We earnestly appeal to Friends for the faithful stewardship of both their spiritual and temporal resources, that these fifty-seven workers may feel the power of our support, and these 500,000 people may be reached with the Gospel Message.

The Board feels that the future efficiency of the work depends upon a force of well trained native leaders, with both the spiritual and intellectual equipment needed for the task. For this training we must have schools where boys can be educated under healthy religious surroundings. Now that we have Jamaica, four such schools are absolutely necessary. We have made a beginning the past year in raising funds for this purpose, and the preparatory work has begun in Africa, Mexico and Jamaica. Elementary school work is being successfully carried on in each field. But we must have well equipped schools of advanced grade for boys. Something over $20,000 is in sight for this work of equipment. At least $30,000 more must be obtained, if the work goes on to success.

God has richly blessed us in the homeland with the light of His glorious Gospel, and abundance of material supplies. Our greatest danger, perhaps, is our great prosperity in material blessings. We owe it to these peoples of lesser privilege to pass on to them the Gospel light. God has given us the opportunity and responsibility. Will we measure up to it?

Beside the work mentioned above there are the Friends' mission fields in Japan, China, India, Palestine, Central America and Arctic Alaska, under the care of the five Yearly Meetings (two of which are outside the Five Years Meeting) that have not yet fully joined with our Board, in the union of our mission forces. Those fields are also of utmost importance and should have the heartiest support by the Friends of those Yearly Meetings.

May there not be an advance movement throughout our Yearly Meetings to meet our share of responsibility for the bringing in of the Kingdom of God for which we pray.

The Evangelistic and Church Extension Board

To the Readers of the AMERICAN FRIEND, Greeting:

The Evangelistic and Church Extension Board of the Five Years Meeting appointed in October last consists of thirty-four members representing thirteen yearly meetings. The following compose the executive committee: H. R. Keates, Chairman; Ellison R. Purdy, Vice-Chairman; Charlotte E. Vickers, Treasurer; Esther Cook, Secretary; Frank W. Dell, Truman C. Kenworthy and Robert E. Pretlow.

The stupendous task laid upon the body of men and women composing this Board is not generally appreciated. A study of the title, however, brings to the thoughtful and practical mind some suggestions as to what should be accomplished through its instrumentality. I believe I speak for every member of the Board when I say that we desire an aggressive policy, and to see our own denomination take her place among the sister churches who have outrun us in the work of discipling men and extending their borders. It cannot be denied that church extension is dependent upon evangelism, and if the latter is to produce the former it must be apostolic in character.

The territory to be covered, with its conditions and problems, demands undivided and concentrated effort, and what the Board needs is a man as its field officer who shall give his entire time to the work; nothing less than this will succeed. He must be a truly converted man who has a passion for souls, and who will gather reliable information and lay such before the Board for action. Another need is a Board of National Evangelists, wisely chosen, who can be sent out under direction of the Board and can be relied upon to do such pioneer work as will, under God's blessing, result in planting Friends' churches where today there are none.

We are morally obligated to assist the four churches which have been under the care of the Board, but our settled policy is that of gradually diminishing assistance and making all work, not only self supporting, but in some measure contributory to church extension.

The Board expects to affiliate with the National Council of Home Missions, and seeks to work in harmony with other denominations in entering new territory.

An endowment fund is an absolute necessity and must be an accomplished fact before we can expect to carry out a program of permanent and successful operations. There is a nucleus of such a fund reported this year, for which we are thankful, but we earnestly appeal for donations and bequests to raise at least $250,000 as a starting point. This may seem like a large sum, but if every member of the Friends Church would give but two cents a week for the next five years to this object, we should be well on the way toward making it twice the sum named, and part of this could be used as a building fund.

Our membership needs a deep awakening to the tremendous responsibility which is ours for making it possible to "lengthen our cords and strengthen our stakes."

The inheritance received from our fathers, purchased at the cost of unhesitating self-sacrifice, must not be allowed to diminish. It is ours today to pass it on to the next generation, enriched by the same spirit, and prove a blessing to the world.

On behalf of the Committee,

H. R. KEATES, Chairman.

Des Moines, Iowa, December 19, 1912.

The Young People's Board

The youngest Board of the Five Years Meeting is the one appointed to cooperate with, and assist in, any and all of the various activities of young Friends in our American Yearly Meetings. It is a Board of much importance in our entire scheme of work, for it will be dealing directly with the future leaders of our church.

If our young people are made to feel that they are a vital part of our Society, and if they once catch a vision of the work which they can do,—large, heroic, manly work,—in the Master's vineyard, the measure of what may be accomplished is beyond computing. It is to do something in achieving the appointed purpose of our Board that we have set our faces.

Policy of Work.

There is one definite policy to which the Board subscribes at the outset, viz.; to stand apart from any particular line of activity, or organization, and be ready to cooperate with any and all of the various associations and groups that are interesting and training young people for usefulness in the Society of Friends. We hope by adopting this policy to be able to bring together all young Friends into closer fellowship than we have known before. To do this, we hope there may be a free interchange of workers and speakers among all our young peoples' organizations. Much can be done by a free exchange of thought through the columns of our Five Years Meeting paper.

Field Worker.

It is the plan of the Board to provide a Secretary, who will devote his or her time to the work of extending the enthusiasm; to provide an office where letters may be received and answered and information filed for future reference; to collect information as to young Friends' activities, both in this country and abroad; to provide a speakers' bureau for conferences, and to assist group meetings and pilgrimages, inter-yearly meetings and educational offices for young Friends.

It is a source of gratitude that so many names have been submitted to the Board for consideration in selecting the Field Secretary. More than twenty-five persons have been suggested, any one of whom would be well suited to do excellent work if his services could be secured. It can readily be seen that the Board will need to exercise great care in selecting the right one for the work.

An Appeal.

The Board on young people's activities would appeal to the older members for their counsel and encouragement. It is not the purpose of the young Friends to become an organization apart from the body at large, but to become a useful member,—an arm or a foot,—to lift burdens or run on errands of love and mercy, which in youth we can do, when wisely guided.

We appeal to all young people of our Society to become volunteers in the work of the Friends Church where you are now. It may be that the very leader we are now needing is "hiding himself among the stuff" of carelessness or discouragement, whereas if he would but extricate himself, he would stand out head and shoulders above all the rest as a leader.

And further, we appeal to all our members, both young and old, to be ready to assist us in a financial way when an appeal is made for funds. It is with no sense of apology that we present the financial phase of our work, for we believe in our mission, and are taking the commission given us by the Five Years Meeting seriously. To accomplish the task to which we have set our hands, will cost something. It will cost some money which we believe will be forthcoming, but it will cost much more in service, nerve force and consecration.

WILLARD O. TRUEBLOOD, Chairman.
Indianapolis, Indiana.

A Call for Teachers.

From the Missionary field in Cuba comes an urgent call for three teachers. The opening in that country was never more promising than now. A new school building has been erected at Banés, and the school at Gibara is soon to have a new building, money having been appropriated by the American Friends Board for this purpose. Successful schools are also conducted by Friends at Puerto Padre and Holguín.

Just at this time several of the faithful teachers are obliged to come home, and the work of the mission is in danger of having to take a backward step. This ought not to be, and since on first arrival language study must occupy the teacher for several months, it is most important that volunteers for next year's work should proceed at once to Cuba.

Are there not some young women preparing for their life work as teachers ready to listen to this call? Cuba is an attractive field among a needy people ready to respond to the consecrated work of devoted teachers.

Friends are responsible for a large territory in the eastern end of the Island, and our equipment and work are both creditable to the Society and favorably regarded by the people. The work must not be allowed to retrograde.

Correspondence with James Carey, Jr., 838 Park Avenue, Baltimore, will secure all particulars.

Young Friend Needed.

There is an opening for a young man to engage in Christian service in South Baltimore, especially among boys and young men. There is a large building equipped with gymnasium and club rooms, as well as rooms for religious meetings and Bible school, and a good corps of volunteer workers. A young Friend who has had some Y. M. C. A. experience would be very useful here, and might have time in the evenings for special studies at the University. For further information inquire of John R. Cary, 240 North Howard Street, Baltimore, Maryland.

A Lesson in Humility.

I used to think that God's gifts were on shelves one above the other, and that the taller we grew in Christian character the easier we should reach them. I find now that God's gifts are on shelves one beneath the other, and that it is not a question of growing taller, but of stooping lower, and that we have to go down, always down, to get his best gifts.—F. B. Meyer.

Commit, Trust, Expect, Wait.

Seek entirely to depend on God for everything. Put yourself and your work into his hands. When thinking of any new undertaking, ask, "Is this agreeable to the mind of God? Is it for his glory?" If it is not for his glory, it is not for your good, and you must have nothing to do with it. Mind that! Having settled that a certain course is for the glory of God, begin it in his name, and continue it to the end. Undertake it in prayer and faith, and never give up! Pray, pray, pray! Do not regard iniquity in your heart. If you do, the Lord will not hear you. Keep that before you always. Then trust in God. Depend only on God. Wait on him. Believe on him. Expect great things from him. Faint not if the blessing tarries. Pray, pray, pray! And, above all, rely only on the merits of our ever-adorable Lord and Saviour, that according to his infinite merits, and not your own, the prayers you offer and the work you do will be accepted.—Geo. Muller.

A Mother's Love.

Rev. Sam P. Jones had the following peroration at the close of one of his lectures:

"An angel was sent down from heaven one day to bring back the most beautiful thing on earth. He hunted long and carefully, saw a bed of full blown American Beauty roses, lovely beyond compare, and he gathered an armful and started to return to his home above. As he soared into the air he saw a baby's smile, and filled with rapturous admiration at the sight, returned to take it, too. By its side he discovered a mother's love, and with all three in his arms, he mounted to the place beyond the skies. Just outside the pearly gates the spirit paused for a moment, and lo! the roses had withered and were dead, the baby's smile had vanished, but, strong as ever the mother's love remained, and he cast the others aside and took this and laid it at the Master's feet as the most lovely and lasting thing on earth."

The Law of the Kingdom.

"There are hours in every life and lives in every generation which belong to the common good. No life, indeed, belongs anywhere else except as by devoting it to the individual self it tends to make that self more fit for general service. We must get to give, we must climb that we may lift, we must be strong to aid the weak; that is the law of the kingdom."—Selected.

Faithfulness is Success.

Someone has said that he is glad God did not say, "Good and successful servant," for some of the most faithful have been failures from a worldly standpoint. In the truest sense, plain faithfulness is the highest success. It wins God's approval, and there are no limits to his power to use one that gives absolutely faithful service.—Laura Moore.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

We hope in a short while to be able to organize a system for the collection of information about Friends and their activities, that will prove to be one of the live features of the paper. Meanwhile we ask the indulgence of our readers while this is being worked out.

Arthur and Eliza Dann attended Baltimore meeting on December 29, and held an interesting and profitable service with Washington Friends the following evening.

Dr. Benjamin F. Trueblood preached an exceptionally able and inspiring Christmas sermon at the meeting in Washington City on December 22, taking as his text, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace and good will to men."

The Evangelical Friend which decided some weeks ago to vacate the weekly field of religious journalism, began the issue of a monthly publication on December 15.

On the evening of December 10, at Earlham College, Fred T. Hollowell was chosen to represent the institution at the State oratorical contest in the early spring. There were six other contestants.

Prof. Allen D. Hole of Earlham College has been named on a special committee of the Indiana Conservation Association to consider topographical mapping. The State geologist is chairman of the committee.

Jasper Cain recently conducted a series of meetings at Cane Creek, North Carolina, resulting in much good, and strengthening of the meeting.

David E. Sampson and Leanah Hobson recently joined in holding a series of meetings at Winston, North Carolina, and much interest in the religious life of the community was aroused.

Franklin Warden, assisted by T. W. Wooten and Wade Adams, recently held a series of meetings at Union Cross, Yadkin Valley Quarter, North Carolina. There were twelve professions of conversion, and seven additions to the membership.

A. Edward and Marion E. Kelsey whose marriage notice appears in this issue, sail from New York City on January 15 on the Austro-American liner "Oceania" for Ramallah, Palestine, where they will engage in missionary work. They have both worked at Ramallah formerly. They will be accompanied by Helen Crosman of Saco, Maine, who is going to Ramallah for a year of service.

L. Oscar Moon, secretary of the Evangelistic and Church Extension work of Baltimore Yearly Meeting, expects to go to England within a few days, for a sojourn of several weeks, in order to study the practical operations of church work and procedure among English Friends.

Herman Newman, who for several years has been editor of the AMERICAN FRIEND, will spend the first half of the new year in Chicago, engaged in study and in religious work, and among other duties will serve as pastor of the Chicago Friends Meeting. As is true in many other large cities, Chicago has many Friends widely scattered, who need to be hunted out and attached to the church.

Whittier College had a deficit the past year of less than $400.00. An effort has been recently made to lift a debt on the institution of about $15,000.00, by December 31, 1912. A new chemical laboratory has been installed, which is a valuable addition to the college. 110 students have been enrolled the past term.

Robert L. Kelly, Robert Pyle, Rufus M. Jones, Edith Winder, and Thomas Sykes are a committee to decide on scholarships from America to Woodbrooke School in England. One of the recent assignments is to Thomas E. Jones of the Earlham class of 1912, who is now attending Hartford Theological Seminary.

Earlham College has recently chosen her debating teams for this year, which will discuss both with Albion and Butler Colleges the question, "Resolved, that the President of the United States should be elected for a single term of six years." The men selected are H. P. Hull, '14; Howard Elliott, '15; Charles Semler, '15; R. T. Guyer, '13; F. R. Murray, '13; and Harry Wooley, '16.

The following will be of interest as coming from The Continent, the leading Presbyterian periodical of the country: "For a considerable period past there has been an acknowledged feeling of depression among old Quakers over the decline of their membership and the apparently lessening prospect of helping up a vigorous church. But at Indianapolis a different outlook was foreseen. The revival of hope principally sprung out of the extraordinary movement among the younger members of the denomination for perpetuating its historic life. For a generation the sons and daughters of Friends have largely been drifting away into other denominations, but a remarkable change has lately come over the spirit of Quaker youth, and new loyalty and enthusiasm among young Friends is being widely evidenced."

Bible School conferences are being planned by the Yearly Meeting on Bible Schools of North Carolina Yearly Meeting. A good outline offering helpful topics on "The Teacher and the Class" has been prepared. A few papers will be written to be loaned for use at these conferences; one member of the committee or perhaps two will attend some of the gatherings and help in all ways possible. But the plan is for interested Friends near the conference centers to prepare talks or papers, and to this end the committee has purchased a number of excellent books bearing directly on the subjects in the outline. These books may be borrowed by writing to the chairman, Prof. Raymond Binford, Guilford College. It is expected that those who want conferences will do all they can to arrange for the success of the program.—The Friends Messenger.

At the National Conference of the American Society for Judicial Settlement of International Disputes, held in Washington City, December 20 and 21, William C. Dennis gave an address on the subject, "The Necessity for an International Code of Arbitral Procedure." Thomas Raeburn White, of Philadelphia, was also on the program, discussing the subject, "The Immediate Establishment of an International Court of Arbitral Justice." Mr. Dennis in his address, pointed out the fact that international law is in peculiar need of unity, which is the greatest virtue of a code, but said that uniformity may be purchased at too great a cost. He said each nation must decide whether or not it can afford to sacrifice its own peculiar views in order to adopt an international code.

With the Children

Build Well

"We are building every day,
In a good or evil way,
And the structure as it grows
Will our inmost self disclose.

"Till in every arch and line
All our faults and failings shine.
It may grow a castle grand,
Or a wreck upon the sand.

"Build it well, whate'er you do,
Build it straight, and strong, and true;
Build it clean, and high, and broad;
Build it for the eye of God."

A Boy's Treasure

The other day I read a beautiful little story about a shepherd boy. He was keeping the sheep in a flowery meadow, and because his heart was happy he sang so loudly that the surrounding hills echoed his song. One morning the king, who was on a hunting-trip, spoke to him, and said: "Why are you so happy, my boy?"

"Why should I not be happy?" answered the boy. "Our king is not richer than I."

"Indeed!" said the king. "Pray tell me of your great possessions."

The shepherd boy answered: "The sun in the bright blue sky shines as brightly upon me as upon the king; the flowers upon the mountain and the grass in the valley grow and bloom to gladden my sight as well as his. I would not take one hundred thousand dollars for my hands; my eyes are of more value than all the precious stones in the world. I have food and clothing, too. Am I not as rich as the king?"

"You are right," said the king with a smile. "But your greatest treasure is your contented heart. Keep it so, and you will always be happy."

A Prayer That Was Answered

A worker in the Little Mothers' Mission in New York tells this incident of a little girl who lived in the West Side slums. The child had attended the Little Mothers' meetings, and had learned the temperance songs that are taught there. Her father kept a saloon, and he had been in the habit of using her to carry liquor where it was regularly wanted about the neighborhood. The little girl, without having had it suggested to her by anyone, began to think that this didn't agree with her temperance songs, and finally one day she protested. Her father insisted angrily. He demanded her reason. She gave it. He swore at her and told her he'd beat her if she didn't go. She pleaded with him; and when he grew angrier and raised his arm to strike her, she sank on her knees upon the floor of the saloon, and began praying. And this is what she said: "O Lord, A and B and C, A and B and C," just that over and over again. She told the mission worker afterward that she was too frightened to think of anything else to say, but she thought the Lord would understand.

He did. For the father, deeply touched, not only released the child from the duty of delivering drinks, but within a few months gave up his saloon.—Stella V. Roderick.

Hold Fast, Boys

Hold on to your tongue when you are just ready to swear, or speak harshly, or use an improper word.

Hold on to your hand when you are about to punch, strike, scratch or do any improper act.

Hold on to your foot when you are on the point of kicking, running off from study, pursuing the path of error, shame or crime.

Hold on to your temper when you are angry, excited or imposed upon, or others are angry with you.

Hold on to your heart when evil associates seek your company, and invite you to join in their mirth, games and revelry.—Selected.

A Sunbeam for Jesus

I knew a little girl who often made me think of a little sunbeam. She was always found with a cheerful, smiling face. She was always ready to do loving little deeds for those around her. When mamma was very busy she delighted in taking little brother out for a play, perhaps under some pretty shade tree in the garden. She did what she could to lighten the care of her dear mamma.

My dear little readers, do you know that there are many little things you can do to help others? I am sure Jesus is pleased with little boys and girls who try to do deeds of kindness to others and shine away the dark clouds by loving and tender words. Let us all try to be little sunbeams for Jesus.—Selected.

three States were represented. A movement was started to raise a fund of $500,000 for the work of the Anti-Saloon League of America, and the first contribution of $10,000 by a delegate toward this sum was announced. It was one of the important gatherings of the year and its impress has already been felt upon Congress and the country.

The prospects for Russian democracy do not seem to brighten rapidly. Recent sessions of the Duma are charged with giving sanction to everything insisted upon by the Ministry, while the electoral college, which elects the deputies to the Duma, is said to be packed with clergymen who are wholly dependent upon the government for their bread and butter, and will consequently vote as directed. It had been hoped that the Duma would exercise a restraining influence upon the government, but the experiment has not proved a success. The absolutism of Russian rule is proving superior to the forms of democracy in a country which apparently is not ready for self-government.

STEADY HAND

A Surgeon's Hand Should Be the Firmest of All.

"For fifteen years I have suffered from insomnia, indigestion and nervousness as a result of coffee drinking," said a surgeon the other day. (Tea is equally injurious because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.)

"The dyspepsia became so bad that I had to limit myself to one cup at breakfast. Even this caused me to lose my food soon after I ate it.

"All the attendant symptoms of indigestion, such as heart burn, palpitation, water brash, wakefulness or disturbed sleep, bad taste in the mouth, nervousness, etc., were present to such a degree as to incapacitate me for my practice as a surgeon.

"The result of leaving off coffee and drinking Postum was simply marvelous. The change was wrought forthwith, my hand steadied and my normal condition of health was restored." Name given upon request. Read the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Postum now comes in concentrated, powder form, called Instant Postum. It is prepared by stirring a level teaspoonful in a cup of hot water, adding sugar to taste, and enough cream to bring the color to golden brown.

Instant Postum is convenient; there's no waste; and the flavour is always uniform. Sold by grocers—50-cup tin 30 cts., 100-cup tin 50 cents.

A 5-cup trial tin mailed for grocer's name and 2-cent stamp for postage. Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

Anderson.—Mary Frances, wife of Clyde C. Anderson, and daughter of Albert and Amelia Townsend, in Portland, Oregon, Eleventh month 6, 1912, aged 36 years and 1 month, lacking one day. Her life and testimony gave evidence of her acceptance with Christ.

Sell.—Ann Hunt Bell, daughter of Nathan and Sarah Hunt, at the home of her grand-daughter near Bangor, Iowa, Tenth month 8, 1912, aged 91 years. She was a birthright member of Friends.

The December issue of the Oak Grove Seminary Bulletin is largely devoted to their $100,000 endowment campaign. With five months of the year's campaign passed, $35,000 of the fund has been definitely pledged. V. D. Nicholson, manager of the campaign, states that results thus far are eminently satisfactory considering the nature of the territory canvassed. A deep interest in the school is developing among all New England Friends and practically all of the above amount has come from them. About half of New England Yearly Meeting remains yet to be canvassed, and an appeal is to be made to other New England people and to some Friends in other Yearly Meetings. The $35,000 has come from 230 people, making an average of about $150 per pledge.

THE SUBJECT MATTER

Certain important features will characterize the subject matter of this paper:

1. It will be the aim to have a special message from two or more of the denominational boards each week, these to be supplemented frequently by substantial articles, which will bring an enlarged vision of our departmental work.
2. Special attention will be given to the activities of the Church, and Yearly Meeting news of interest to all.
3. A page or more will be devoted each week to the consideration of world-wide and nation-wide subjects of a moral, civic, economic and religious nature, that will be suitable in a religious journal.

Prayer.

MORE things are wrought by prayer
Than the world dreams of—wherefore let thy voice Rise like a fountain for me night and day,
For what are men better than sheep or goats
That nourish a blind life within the brain
If, knowing God, they lift not hands in prayer,
Both for themselves and those they call their friend!
For so the whole round world is every way
Bound by gold chains about the feet of God.

Editorial Comment Upon Current Topics of the Day

An anonymous donor has announced a contribution of $100,000 to endow a chair of missions in the Yale Divinity School, upon condition that the friends of the institution raise $200,000 additional. In such manner the cause of "preaching the gospel to every creature" is taking deep root in the thought and activities of this age.

The Christmas spirit of giving as a substitute for receiving seems to be on the increase. The benefactions of those who have learned the literal truth that "it is more blessed to give than to receive," have fallen like a holy benediction upon thousands of homes. Let this spirit grow by leaps and by bounds with the passing of the years. "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these, my brethren, ye have done it unto Me."

* * *

The old flogging system as applied to certain classes of criminality seems destined to be revived. The House of Commons has voted that white-slavers shall receive the lash. For a first offense, flogging is optional with the magistrate, but for a second offense, the punishment is mandatory. It seems like a step backward in the realm of criminology, yet all will agree that if this form of punishment is ever justifiable, it will be more applicable to this particular form of crime than to any other.

The world-wide character of the Y. M. C. A. movement is being again emphasized. The sixth triennial session of the world's convention of this association convened in Peking, China, on December 12th, with three hundred and forty Chinese delegates present, thirty American and European secretaries of Chinese Y. M. C. A.'s, together with representatives from all parts of the world. The president of the new Chinese republic gave an address of welcome, which emphasizes the fact that the "old order changeth" in the erstwhile Celestial kingdom.

It is announced by the commission in charge that the Nobel Peace prize is withheld this year, the reason being assigned that "there has been no work deserving of the prize." Considering the fact that despite the Turko-Balkan war, the cause of peace has received more world-wide attention than in any previous year, it is not easy to understand the decision of the commission. This is all the more true by reason of the fact that the prizes have not always been awarded upon the basis of things actually done.

One of the remarkable events of the year was the long drawn out trial of the dynamiters in the Federal Court at Indianapolis, resulting in the conviction of thirty-eight of the accused on December 28th. That these men were guilty of the conspiracy charged against them was proved beyond a reasonable doubt. In the end the outcome will benefit labor. Temporarily labor as a whole will feel unjustly the effect of the startling disclosures. A distinction should be made between the lawlessness of the condemned officers of labor and the thousands of law abiding private in the ranks, who knew nothing of the outrages, or knowing, would have condemned.

According to recent reports New York City is coining the lives of children into dollars upon a scale that is startling. It is calculated that ten million dollars' worth of work is done in the poor homes of that city by 125,000 home workers, of whom sixty per cent. are children under sixteen years of age. Forty-five per cent. of these home working children are between the ages of five and fourteen. Children without the happy years of childhood! Babies being fed into the machinery of mad commercialism. Youth robbed of its birthright! What a problem for the social service spirit of this age! In such a soil neither Christianity nor patriotism can live, much less flourish. What a pity that greedy industry withholds a living wage from the grown-up workmen, that makes this slaughter of childhood possible. Either the state or the church, or the two together, should find a speedy remedy for such intolerable conditions.

In many of our large cities a spirited crusade is on against organized vice. This in part is the out-growth of the Men and Religion forward movement. Too frequently however, the effort is being met with opposition on the part of the municipal officers, who are unable to see beyond a system of periodical arrests and fines. To argue, as some high officials do, that evil cannot be suppressed, but can only be regulated, is an indictment of the fundamentals of popular government. If in the last analysis popular rule shall be required to mean the sanction of vice, then will democracy be put to a test that has not yet been revealed. The public official who winks at the violation of law designed to conserve public morals is not only an enemy of the people, but is doing much to undermine popular government. There should be harmony between the heads of government and every form of Christian philanthropy in all efforts that seek to eradicate vice and public iniquity.

A new Industrial Commission has been named by the President to consider the general condition of labor throughout the country. It is to be hoped that the Commission will deal with facts and not theories. Such an investigation, if conducted in the spirit of honest inquiry, cannot fail to accomplish good. That labor is often oppressed is self-evident. That it itself becomes autocratic sometimes can hardly be denied. Labor and capital should have no controversy. Each is the complement of the other. The disparity, however, in the fruitage which both reap from their investment is generally the occasion of differences, which are only aggravated by any show of a spirit of injustice. The labor problem is not alone an economic one. It touches the field of civics as well as of morals. Just as the law of the land is for the good of all, so should legislation be just to labor, contributing and exacting no more, no less, than the law of justice and right demands. The moral law, which ever reverts to the divine law for its authority, is the standard by which labor, no less than capital, should be measured. If the new Commission will only escape the tendency to prepare a homily upon the general subject matter of its consideration, and hunt out the men who know the facts about labor, and will then be brave enough to present a true picture of industrial conditions to the public, a flood of light will be thrown upon more than one great department of our national life.

Achieving the Victory of Faith

"Now faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen."

That eleventh chapter of Hebrews is the honor roll of God's heroes. No one can read it without feeling a mighty pull Godward. It is the record triumphant of the faithful and obedient sons of men. By faith the impossible has been achieved.

As it was in the morning of history, so it has ever been. Men who catch a vision of better things and labor for their achievement with no thought of failure, are the ones who wear the laurels. It is the earnest soul who sees victory beyond the sky-line of difficulty and even defeat, that will wear the crown of triumph.

David foresaw the downfall of the giant before he started into the valley; he tasted victory before the stone had left the sling, so great was his faith in Jehovah. The woman who touched the hem of Jesus' garment felt the healing before the moment of contact, for her faith was supreme. The martyrs of the Reformation saw the deliverance that was to be and rejoiced, while bound in chains and tortured to the death. Faith leaped all barriers and persecutions, and gave them peace.

The faithful church will win souls for its hire. When days are darkest and all seems lost, the eye of faith will ever brighten as it sees the end of the race beyond the clouds. This is the faith that will overcome the world.

With faith at the helm, no tired soul need despair; no Friends meeting need be discouraged; no struggling Sabbath-school or young people's organization need give up. When the hope and determination of man are linked with the infinite power of Jehovah, then are we "more than conquerors."

Faith is not blind; it is not the fanatical reliance upon a mere visionary hope. Rather it is the intelligent grasp of realities not yet visible, but which become certainties, because right is right and God is God. It is the evidence already comprehended and realized of things which God's economy and man's persistency are bound to accomplish.

What an outlook for the Society of Friends! Faith is at our door bidding us to behold and possess the land of promise. We may not see all the future has in store, but we know that faithfulness will be rewarded. By faith let us go forward.

A Denomination Communing with God

The year upon which we have just entered ought to mean much to American Quakerism. We believe that the spirit of the recent Five Years Meeting has struck into the soul of the church, and that a new era has begun for our denomination. Whether it will be long continued and be pregnant with an enrichment of blessing for our entire membership, will depend largely upon the developments of the next few months.

We are facing tremendous possibilities as a denomination. We are standing at the place of decision, which will mean on the one hand leanness of soul and narrowness of vision if we fail to go forward, and on the other hand, the quickening of our spiritual energies, the development of our organized activities and the enlargement of our influence in the up-building of our Master's Kingdom, if we are faithful to the trust which has been committed unto us.

In the consciousness of this responsibility which is upon the church, we are constrained with all the force of a genuine Quaker concern, to suggest that during the early weeks of this new year, our membership should be much in earnest prayer for the guidance of the Holy Spirit and the manifestation of the power of God upon our individual and denominational life and activities. Communion with the Father will endow any consecrated soul with new life, new purpose and new inspiration, not alone from the reflex benefit that comes from contact with infinite goodness and knowledge, but from the direct bestowal of blessing, which is God's answer to the cry of faith on the part of his children.

"And all things whatsoever ye shall ask in prayer, believing, ye shall receive." Who can measure the reach of our influence as a church, if only our entire membership could be brought into the spirit of abiding, earnest, sympathetic prayer during the next few weeks? We are not concerned now about prayer for its own sake, although the psychology of prayer and the symphony of prayer are important studies in themselves. We are not talking about the aimless prayer of sentimentalism, that wastes its energies in generalities or in selfish petition.

Our concern is about the prayer of faith which, conscious of a great need, lays hold with determination upon God, and like Jacob wrestling with the angel, declares with profound earnestness, "I will not let thee go except thou bless me." Cannot such a prayer possess and engulf the very soul of the Society of Friends during the coming days, until we are melted into oneness with Jesus Christ, our Lord? If this be sentiment, so let it be, but to us it is the embodiment of a profound purpose to equip our denominational life with the power of enlargement and fruition.

For what shall we pray, and to what purpose shall our petitions be directed?

1. "That they all may be one; as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us." Not only should we be one in name and in organism, but we should be one in spirit, in sympathy, in toleration, in brotherly affection, in fraternal cooperation, doing team work to the glory of God, and for the salvation of men. We know of nothing that is so unifying as the spirit and reality of prayer. Communion with God will not only reveal our own error and shortcomings and create the disposition to get rid of them, but it will envelop us with an abundant love for our fellows. Let us pray for that vital unity of purpose and spirit that will raise us above suspicion and schism and impel us as one family in Christ to labor for His coming into the hearts of all men.

2. Let us pray not only for a revival of Quakerism, but for a genuine religious revival in Quakerdom. It is the evangelistic church that has the capacity for winning souls. Life cannot spring from the dead soil of formalism. Nature produces a revival in the spring time. A business revival is the joy of every household. Because now and then a boom proves to be abnormal and bursts, is no discredit to the real worth of industrial revivals. The stock exchange is not the true measure of a nation's prosperity, no more than is the abnormal excitement of some man-made religious revivals, the true measure of the methods which establish heart relationship with God. Could we but have a time of revival in every Friends congregation in America, in which the natural workings of God's spirit would inflame our entire membership with a holy zeal to testify in word and in life for Him, what might we not accomplish in another twelve months? Let us pray for a revival that will make our church the messenger of salvation to the multitudes all about us.

3. Finally, let us pray that wisdom and power may be given our boards and committees, that together they may labor efficiently in the lines of service to which they have been called. These are the working machinery of the church. They may exist in name only, and consume their energies upon themselves, either for lack of proper planning or for lack of proper support; or they may become veritable storage batteries of power. Let the prayers of the church be directed in their behalf earnestly and unitedly, for in their keeping is largely the weal or woe of the denomination for the coming years.

The recent Five Years Meeting was the product of an evolution which has been working in the church since the earliest revival days forty years ago and more. Let us not block the march of progress now through an unwillingness to measure up fully to our opportunities. Rather let us pray, all together, that God will lead us yet more into the light and into a more abundant denominational life. Despite our smallness in numbers, in the light of our present possibilities, "We can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth us."

Many people lose months and years of their lives by putting off their response to God's call until a "more convenient season." God's time is now, and every good deed ought to be bearing dividends for the enrichment of humanity, instead of being deferred until its freshness has been destroyed.

God can never use a soul that is discouraged. Faint heart never won a victory. Salvation is God's message of hope to the world. It is the growing life that will count in the final reckoning. The star of promise is forward not backward. "Let us go on unto perfection."

Christ is the best interpreter of His own life to the consciousness of an earnest, sincere soul. There are many helps all along the way, but when Christ is actually found by the seeker after truth, He becomes the great teacher.

Constancy in the Christian life is the great need of every age. Dress parade religion is neither pleasing to God nor satisfying to men. He that overcometh and endureth to the end will receive the crown of life.

A life without Christ is hopeless; a home without Christ is barren of real joy; a nation without Christ is in darkness; a world without Christ is lost. In the final analysis, it is Christ or chaos.

The problem of a local meeting is largely the problem of team work on the part of the membership. It is where everyone lends a hand, that tasks are sure to be well done.

The Five Years Meeting as Interpreted by Some Leading Friends.

STATEMENT BY ROBERT L. KELLY.

The invisible, intangible results of the Five Years Meeting were of greater significance than the results we have heard most about. 'It is true that many recommendations of various sorts were approved, that several resolutions were passed, that numerous Boards and Secretaries were appointed or provided for, some of them highly empowered; in short, that the Meeting built up an elaborate and rather compact machine. But the thing of deepest significance was the spirit behind it all.

It was a spirit of concession, of tolerance, of adaptability, of unity in the midst of diversity. It was the corporate spirit at work at last. We felt more profoundly than ever before that after all we are brethren of the same household of faith, not only with a rich and common heritage, but with a remarkable opportunity and a definite and worthy, if difficult task. It was a call to arms, a call to place the standard of spiritual religion a little higher among men weary and heavy laden, than human hands have placed it heretofore. Now let us display the intelligence of the athlete or the warrior by concentrating our corporate energy on the spot that will count the most in our onward and forward movements.

We are in practical unity in matters of belief, for not a single vote was cast by any delegate against the proposition to approve the Richmond Declaration of Faith and Fox's Letter. We are of reasonably sound constitution, for haven't there been endless diagnoses, with thumping of chests, feeling of pulses, examining of tongues, and reading of temperature thermometers? If our assimilation is a little below normal, perhaps we need more fresh air and exercise. Let us learn to do the Master's will and redder blood will course through our veins.

For as a church we have crossed the Rubicon: we have entered upon an aggressive campaign. The various lines of attack have been marked out. Our various captains are being chosen. Some of the ammunition has been collected. We have an official organ for reporting from time to time the plans and the progress of the several divisions. We have adopted a new war cry—Consecrated, Co-ordinated Service of Humanity—and we are carrying forward the old and always victorious banner with the inscription, "Jesus Christ, the Son of God and Savior of Men."

It is the business of every Friend, old and young, East and West, conservative and progressive, to make this a notable and a victorious campaign. It has in it the most of promise of any movement in the recent history of our branch of the Church. Woe to him who stops to quibble over non-essentials, who strives to stir up dissensions, who engages in cross-firing! He will be swept aside by the onward rush of this mighty army of God, as it steadily marches forward into the enemies' country to do valiant service for the Lord of Hosts, who has assured us we shall conquer, not by might nor power, but by His Spirit.

Earlham College, Ind., December 30, 1912.

STATEMENT BY L. L. HOBBS.

I presume nothing new is hardly expected to be said at this time about the work of the Friends who assembled in Indianapolis in October last. Yet the spirit of the meeting was such that it cannot all be put into words and set forth to those who were not present. The principal result, I should say, is to be sought for in the unity of effort that is almost sure to follow the conclusions reached, and the very great encouragement to younger members on the ground that American Friends will certainly have a fresh opportunity to act as a body, feeling that if one yearly meeting is suffering from any cause, the rest of the meetings will suffer with it, and will help apply the remedy for relief. In other words, I do not see how after the spirit of united effort has thus been infused into us, we can any longer give place to jealousy or criticism in the sense of condemnation. This does not mean that we are every one henceforth sure to be free from error. It ought to mean that American Friends, indeed all Friends, for Friends of London and Dublin Yearly Meetings never seemed quite so near to us before, have been brought closer together in sympathy, that a larger love for our branch of the church is being awakened, and that in this love we shall all find a place to work, as never before, to spread the Gospel both at home and abroad. We shall find also that this Gospel of Christ is calling us into avenues that we have not clearly seen before, and that the importance of these somewhat new phases of community life is so vital, and the results which can be effected are so desirable and inviting that our members, younger and older, will be glad to give more freely their time and their means to enlarge our membership and our usefulness to all the people whom we can in any way reach.

To me the call seems to renew my allegiance to the Society of Friends, and to give every possible support to the various departments of work which we have now more definitely assumed. The field is larger than we thought it was; and the possibilities before us as a denomination of Christian people are beyond comprehension and expression. Now as never before, on account of the new and broader vision, we should pull together, praying and expecting the work of our hands to be established.

Guilford College, N. C., Twelfth month 27, 1912.

STATEMENT BY MORTON C. PEARSON.

Throughout its history, the Society of Friends has had a very illuminating vision and comprehension of the Truth. However great the weaknesses of the Society may have been in many particulars, it has triumphed mightily in determining the doctrinal view and ethical practice of the religious world. The Five Years Meeting did well to reiterate its endorsement of our historical statements of faith and practice. The Richmond Declaration is perhaps the most comprehensive document of its kind ever issued by our church, and we do well to revere and appreciate it. This act of hearty endorsement should set at rest for many years the anxiety and fear which have prevailed in some measure in many Yearly Meetings. Our church is safely anchored and yet there is latitude for new revelations of truth. The task now before us is to translate all these ennobling conceptions of truth into life and conduct and unselfish service.

The point of inefficiency in the Society has not been its message, but the inadequacy and essential weakness of its organization. There has been no effective co-ordination of our forces; we have been losing too much of our power through poor connection and foolish methods; there has been no focusing of our energies as a denomination for practical results. We have been too much frightened at centralization of power; too unwilling to recognize and follow wise and competent leadership. We have lived too far apart in spirit and worked separately far too much for our common good. The Lord be praised that these things are passing away. The best things which took place at our recent gathering were these:

1. The commission form of program. It was the dream of the writer for months before it was announced. This method revealed the past and present condition of the Society and set before us our future possibilities. These commission reports are the most valuable documents ever presented to the assembled church. They furnish a diagnosis of the church as it is today.

2. The building of an organization—a machine—for the realization of all these future possibilities. It was an experience never to be forgotten to have witnessed the building of that machine. It went together almost without sound of hammer or anvil. So far as I can see, it could not have been improved upon now.

But it is one thing to have builded the machine and quite another thing to make it work successfully. Our supreme danger now is that the church at large will not catch the inspiration of the Five Years Meeting, and not join heartily together in working out the great plans of organization so heartily approved at that time.

"Plan your work,"—that has been done. "Work your plan,"—that is the present task. No plan will work itself. Should the church fail to respond to the new vision, the plan of work will surely fail. My great concern is that the entire church of America, stand loyally by our new AMERICAN FRIEND, our executive committee, our boards and our secretaries. We must pray for them. Their responsibilities are heavy. We must cooperate cheerfully with them and give both money and service to help make the dream of the Five Years Meeting come true.

We have seen a great light. Let us follow it. Already we hear the tramp of hundreds of young Friends coming up to the help of the Lord. They too, have caught the vision; they feel that a new day has dawned. God has set before the Friends Church one more golden opportunity. Will our church seize it, or let it pass? We need to act promptly, for it will not tarry long.

Indianapolis, Ind., December 30, 1912.

STATEMENT BY LEVI MILLS.

The tendency of my nature is optimistic; misfortune and calamity remain unobserved until I find myself in their grip; prophets of disaster receive an unwilling hearing, and chronic fault-finders obtain no audience. I am convinced, however, that my feeling of elation over our last Five Years Meeting is not due to my natural optimism, but to the substantial advance actually made by our church as shown by the results of that gathering.

The obnoxious element of "state's rights," which has in the past, characterized our various yearly meetings, with no bond of union save annual epistolary correspondence, with entirely separate and independent legislative authority, has always had a tendency to weaken our influence as a church, and to cripple our efficiency in all lines of Christian activity. The adoption, some years ago, of the uniform discipline, was an important step toward a closer union. The reaffirmation, during the last Five Years Meeting, of statements of doctrine which eliminate controversial discussion, inspires us all with the consciousness of oneness, both in sentiment and service. Those attending that meeting, putting their ears to the ground, could not fail to hear the rumbling of the chariot wheels of united aggressiveness.

The fact that we are to have a church periodical which receives the sanction and support of all the yearly meetings embodied in the Five Years Meeting, ably edited and wisely managed, is a most inspiring thought. This brings to us the vision of a time, in the near future, when a Friends' publishing house will supply us with Sabbath-school and other church literature so much needed to put us on an equal footing with other church organizations.

The department of Young People's Activities, thoroughly organized and ably officered, brings the trained minds of our college graduates, and the ardent zeal of a large number of young Christians, into the incorporated church work, and insures the husbanding of our most forceful and resourceful agency of future fruitfulness in service. The intention is not to diminish or to supplant the Christian Endeavor, but to supplement it, and to incorporate young blood into the organic spiritual body of the church.

A most encouraging sign of our advancement is found in the emphasis given to the cause of social service. The church must do its part in securing righteous legislation and in enforcing laws promotive of good citizenship. The times and conditions certainly demand, upon the part of our membership, active participation in the elimination of political corruption, and make it imperative that we extend open hands to the unfortunate and the destitute. We must not be deaf to the call to public service; we must not evade any of the obligations we owe to society. Our work for others will not result in a diminution of our spiritual experience and power, but will greatly enhance our Christian influence and worth.

The doors of opportunity and the gateways of service are wide open, and we shall enter them if we live up to the requisitions enjoined upon us by the findings and directions of this, the greatest meeting of Friends in our history as a church.

STATEMENT BY S. M. HADLEY.

In going up to the late Five Years Meeting some Friends, perhaps many, felt misgivings as to what the results might be, and whether the views held by different ones coming from different places might not be so divergent as to prevent any constructive action being taken at the meeting. But as the delegates from the various Yearly Meetings mingled together and each came to understand the other's view-point, it was found that the differences were largely in form of expression and not in belief; a feeling of fraternity was manifest and an evident desire to get together on common ground in order to work unitedly for the advancement of the Gospel and the building up of the church.

The action taken with great unanimity in the early part of the Meeting concerning the clause in the uniform discipline referring to the Richmond Declaration of Faith and the Letter of George Fox to the Governor of Barbadoes, seemed largely to clear away the differences and leave a clear field for constructive action. It is evident that the decision was in harmony with the polity of our denomination, and that the meeting had divine guidance in reaching this solution of the question.

The Committee on Arrangements had planned wisely in having the principal subjects to be brought before the Meeting considered by commissions or boards, weeks or months previous to the time of meeting. The result was a maturity of thought and judgment on the various subjects which otherwise would have been impossible. Much of the success of the meeting may justly be attributed to wise planning beforehand and the faithful execution of the trust committed to the commissions and boards.

Another important element in the success of the meeting was the mingling together of representative Friends from all parts of America and of fraternal delegates from England and Ireland. As they conferred together in the public sessions on subjects brought before the meeting, and conversed in private concerning the problems facing them in their own Yearly Meetings, there grew up a spirit of comradeship, and a mutual feeling that they all belonged to one body having a common end in view. The problems confronting them in one place were found to be similar to those in another, and while different surroundings might demand different treatment, in the spirit of love they bade each other God-speed in carrying on the work of the church in whatever way might be most effectual in advancing the kingdom of God, and in building up believers in the precepts of the Gospel as understood by Friends.

One encouraging feature of the meeting was the large percentage of young people in some of the delegations, and the part they took in the discussions of the various matters considered. Their arguments and pleas had no small weight in determining some of the most important questions coming before the meeting.

The constructive action of the Five Years Meeting on various important subjects will be far reaching in its influence on the future development of our denomination. As the sessions progressed from day to day, the meeting seemed to set its face to the future, and the earnest desire on every hand was to take such action on the various subjects considered as would promote the highest welfare and advancement of the church.

An encouraging sequel to the Five Years Meeting is the interest taken in the action of that body as manifested by special meetings arranged in various communities throughout the country, to hear the report of delegates who were in attendance.

The Practical Side of the Mission Field

BY CHARLES E. TEBBETTS.

I wonder if Friends in their comfortable homes appreciate the nervous strain of mission work. I had it forcibly brought home to me a few weeks ago with almost crushing force. One day a letter came from Miss Sarah Lindley, who has been about eighteen years teaching in Mexico. She had come home to rest for the holidays, and her physician had advised her that because of the strain upon her nerves, she must soon take absolute rest for a year, or she would have to leave the field entirely. She had been working for the past year at a station in Mexico which had been so exposed to possible attack from the revolutionists, that most of the American women had left that region, and our missionaries had been advised by the consul that there was risk in remaining. But they could not feel it right to leave the native school and church, unless the danger became more threatening. It is no wonder that the strain of years of mission work, especially under the danger of possible exposure to the lawless condition likely to arise from a revolutionary attack, should wear out one's strength.

A day or two later another letter came from Mary E. White, who has been a tireless worker among the East Indians of Jamaica. She began to write about her desire to give quite a sum of money to secure a good home at Port Antonio for the workers among the East Indians near by. This was a work that had been given over to Friends by the Presbyterians, because of the greater success Friends had achieved among those people. Miss White, because of her successful experience in that work, was put in charge, and her heart was in the work. The letter, begun as stated above, was finished in a hospital at Kingston. She had suddenly broken down and been removed to the hospital for better care. The physicians told her that she must have absolute rest for a year at least. She has since come home, and is getting the needed rest.

Within the same week, another letter came from Cuba telling of one of our younger teachers there, who had gotten well started in her work, but found her strength was being overtaxed, and she would soon be obliged to leave the field.

Since these, other letters have told of missionaries who must soon be given relief or they would have to leave the work.

I wish to lay upon the hearts of Friends something of the burden of our faithful workers out in these difficult fields. The fields are often hard and wearing because our working force is too small for the large opportunities that are constantly demanding their care. What can we do for them? The work grows upon their hands as the result of their faithful and skilful service. They are always face to face with the larger opportunities, and the sore need of the people for spiritual and moral help. The board stands between them and the church at home whose representatives they are. The income which the board receives will not warrant the sending of workers to help them until they are compelled to give up their work. It is a situation that should make Friends very thoughtful and prayerful. The board feels the burden, but it is difficult to make our Friends scattered widely throughout the country realize the need. We need now several well prepared teachers to relieve some who have long borne the burden. We specially need teachers who can speak Spanish, or who have facility for acquiring the language. Then we need increased funds to send out workers, and to give them such support that they can save something for the time when they can no longer devote themselves to this splendid service. Who are the well prepared teachers that God is calling to this service, and where are the stewards of God's ample material gifts that He is calling to serve by supporting this work. There should be a few of the former, and a great number of the latter.

There is still another situation that I feel ought to find a response in the heart of some Friend or group of Friends. China is just now where help will be more effective than it may ever be again. I know of several young Friends that are feeling the call to that field. One young Friend and his wife have long felt the call and are preparing for the work. They are finely equipped and are now on their third year of special preparation in the best equipped institution in this country for such preparation. They will be ready for the field next autumn. The English Friends' Board have intimated that they would be glad to take them in their field in West China, if half their support could be secured from this country. Our board has no work in China, and with our present income, insufficient for present needs, we cannot undertake it. But such a call to service on the part of young Friends who have sealed their conviction of its genuineness, by their venture of faith in so thoroughly preparing to undertake it, ought to find a corresponding call of faithfulness on the part of some Friends who can furnish the support. "Pray ye the Lord of the harvest that he will thrust forth laborers," is the command of the Master. What is the corresponding duty when He thrusts them forth?

Notes From Japan

BY GURNEY BINFORD.

The December issue of the Missionary Review of the World contains the statement that in Japan there are 124,000 of the population to every missionary engaged directly in evangelistic work.

The Friends, although they feel that their force of workers is inadequate to the task, are doing their best to take up their share of responsibility.

One of the six stations where Japanese Friends' evangelists are located is supported by Kansas Yearly Meeting of Friends. The name of that station is Shimodate, and Tokuzo Mishima is the evangelist. If the population of the province in which he works be divided by the whole number of Japanese evangelists of all denominations, his share is found to be about 60,000.

A letter from Gilbert Bowles, dated November 6, 1912, gives the following information, which shows how the work is carried on.

I am very glad to be able to give to Kansas Friends a real message of encouragement concerning the work of Shimodate. I have visited Shimodate three times since the first of September, and can report that there are real evidences of spiritual awakening in connection with the work of T. Mishima and wife. The most striking example of this is the conversion and development of a photographer. This man is effectually reaching his neighbors, beginning to bring in whole families to the meetings. He prays with real spiritual power, and his life gives evidence that he has found that which his fellow-men need so much. To mention some of the other Christians connected with the meeting will give an indication of the present condition of the work.

Kokobun san, who became a Christian in Mito ten years ago, is now station master at a small town near Shimodate. He is a great help in the work. Another leading member is the station master at the town ten miles away in the opposite direction. Another station master nearby is interested, but not yet a Christian. As these station masters have arranged for T. Mishima to speak to the station employees twice a month, they allow him a free pass on the railway. The money saved will be used in country and village tours in other ways.

Yamanaka san, an earnest Christian young man, is a well-to-do farmer, who on my recent visit to Shimodate, came on his bicycle ten miles to attend the meeting. He is now earnestly seeking to lead his mother and young wife to Christ.

Yoshisawa san, who lives about seven miles away, also comes in on his bicycle for special meetings. He is a leader of the little group of inquirers in the town where he is located as a government inspector of silk worm eggs. In the community where he lives the growing of tobacco and the production of silk are having a struggle as to which will be the most profitable to the farmers. Yoshisawa san, being a temperance worker, feels that it is a part of his Christian work to do all that he can for the development of the silk producing industry, in this way helping on the fight against tobacco. He told me at the time of my last visit that it was his fixed life purpose to develop a meeting in his native town and erect himself a simple meeting house.

Plans have just been made for getting together these scattered Christians in Shimodate, together with the Christians and inquirers of that town for a meeting once a month, at which time I plan to visit the place and give them such help and encouragement as I can.

The first year after T. Mishima took up the work in that place he felt it was very hard, as he could see few results, but I am glad to be able to assure those who have given and prayed for the work there, that the seed sown is now beginning to bear fruit.

A review of the above reveals the fact that T. Mishima is working regularly in five places outside of Shimodate, and that he has a band of five self-supporting lay-worker assistants. There is also the beginning of a Monthly Meeting there. But what are they amongst 60,000 who know not the way of salvation? They are a strong little band who need our prayers, sympathy, and encouragement.

Going to Ramallah

We have the following letter from A. Edward Kelsey, which will be of interest to all readers of the AMERICAN FRIEND. He and his wife are spending a few days in the East before sailing on January 13th:

It is with great joy that my wife and I set our faces toward the Holy Land, again to take up the work in which American Friends have been interested for over forty years.

Scores of Friends from different parts of this country and England have visited our mission and shown a warm interest in the work for the uplifting of the boys and girls of Palestine.

We feel that a crisis may be just before us. With the Balkan war still unsettled, we know not when or where the smoldering fires of religious fanaticism may break forth, but we do know that the One who planted and watered the fruitful vine at Ramallah and has blessed it in so many ways will guard and care for it still.

We are hoping that the much desired and greatly needed building for our Boys' Training Home may be erected during the coming summer, and that soon we may offer to our boys the splendid advantages that the girls have so long enjoyed.

We sail from New York on the Austro-American "Oceania" on January 13th for Pateas, Greece, and hope to reach Ramallah by February 7th. We bespeak the prayers of our friends for the prosperity of the work at this critical time.

A. EDWARD KELSEY.

FROM THE BOARDS OF THE CHURCH.

Social Service Board

The board which was appointed for this department by the Five Years Meeting expects during the winter to perfect in detail a plan of campaign for pushing forward this part of the work of the church, and we are hoping that the general secretary, soon to be appointed, will give part of his time to this very important line of activity.

That Friends may see what are some of the tasks which are calling for dedicated Christian workers all over the world, I am giving here an outline of the Social and Industrial Creed which was adopted in Chicago a few weeks ago by representatives of 150,000 churches in America.

What Churches Must Stand For.

"The protection of the family, by the single standard of purity, uniform divorce laws, proper regulation of marriage, and proper housing.

"The fullest possible development for every child, especially by the provision of proper education and recreation.

"The abolition of child labor.

"Such regulation of the conditions of toil for women as shall safeguard the physical and moral health of the community.

"The abatement and prevention of poverty.

"The protection of the individual and society from the social, economic, and moral waste of the liquor traffic.

"The conservation of health.

"The protection of the worker from dangerous machinery, occupational diseases, and mortality.

"The right of all men to the opportunity for self-maintenance, for safeguarding this right against encroachments of every kind, and for the protection of workers from the hardships of enforced unemployment.

"Suitable provision for the old age of the workers, and for those incapacitated by injury.

"The right of employes and employers alike to organize, and adequate means of conciliation and arbitration in industrial disputes.

"A release from employment one day in seven.

"The gradual and reasonable reduction of the hours of labor to the lowest practicable point, and for that degree of leisure for all which is a condition of the highest human life.

"A living wage as a minimum in every industry, and for the highest wage that each industry can afford.

"A new emphasis on the application of Christian principles to the acquisition and use of property, and for the most equitable division of the product of industry that can ultimately be devised."

Recommendations by Five Years Meeting.

The following recommendations were made by the Commission on Social Service, and were adopted by the Five Years Meeting in October:

1. We request that the Five Years Meeting appoint a Social Service Board, consisting of one member from each Yearly Meeting, whose duty shall be to prepare or suggest social service literature for the advancement of the movement in our church, and to assist in every way possible the organization of Social Service Committees in subordinate meetings throughout the country.

2. We urge that all superintendents of Evangelistic and Church Extension work, whether of the Five Years Meeting or of Yearly Meetings or Quarterly Meetings, and also Pastoral Committees of local meetings, make themselves familiar with the great lines of social service work which is being carried on by the leading denominations of the Christian church, and that as far as possible they prepare themselves for the practical extension and promotion of this part of our religious mission in the world.

3. We would encourage the formation of Social Service study groups in all meetings where there is sufficient interest to make them successful. The study should be carried on both by the use of Social Service books and literature, and by the actual investigation of the economic, social and moral situations in the neighborhood. We recommend the following books for the early stages of the study:

(a) Rural Problems: Warren H. Wilson's "The Church in the Open Country"; K. L. Butterfield's "Chapters in Rural Progress," and "The Country Church and the Rural Problem"; "Report of the Country Life Commission" (Senate Document No. 705); Charles Road's "Rural Christendom" and McKeever's "Farm Boys and Girls."

(b) Social Service in General: Peabody's "Jesus Christ and the Social Question"; Jenk's "Social Teachings of Jesus"; Rauschenbusch's "Christianity and the Social Crisis"; Henderson's "Social Duties from a Christian Point of View," and Batten's "The Social Task of Christianity."

The Study Group should furthermore select some definite situations of the neighborhood to investigate for itself. If it is in a city community, the investigation can be carried on through cooperation with some of the organized agencies of social relief. If the Study Group is in a rural community, it should seek the advice and direction of some trained expert social worker. Such expert helpers are now within easy reach of most communities. The state Y. M. C. A. secretary, or the secretary of Organized Charities, or the state secretary of the Federation of Churches, can in most cases supply or recommend someone who will give local Study Groups expert directions in the work of experimental investigation and in suggesting methods of relief or of improvement of conditions. As rapidly as possible the Group should develop its own leader or leaders and its own experts. But in every community where it is possible to do so, the Group should get into cooperation with the Social Service committees of other denominations, or with other community organizations, and work toward bringing all the social and moral forces into union for the common purpose.

4. One of the important pieces of Social Service work which Monthly Meetings, particularly those in rural districts, may undertake through a Social Service committee, is the provision of a trained district nurse for the neighborhood, or for a territory including a number of neighborhoods. The trained nurse should, in every instance, be a devoted Christian, a woman able to raise the tone of the home and domestic life in the families she visits, and skillful to minister to the spiritual life as well as to the body. Where Monthly Meetings through their Social Service committees undertake this far-reaching service, it is very important that they should cooperate with other social agencies in carrying it through and that the money needed for the undertaking should be solicited from the entire community that is to be benefited.

5. Another type of Social Service activity which lies within the scope and power of very many Monthly Meetings, or Congregational Meetings, throughout the country, is the formation of clubs or other organizations for guiding the play and recreation of boys and girls. The club or organization should, of course, not be confined to the boys and girls who are members of the meeting. It should be for the whole neighborhood, as should all Social Service work, and it should be so directed and managed that it will lead the boys and girls not only into healthier activities for body and limb, but also guide them unconsciously into living connection with the church.

6. Finally, we cannot too strongly advise all who engage in these newer forms of activity for the betterment of individuals and of society, and for the increase of the scope and life of the church, not to substitute these activities for the evangelistic and prophetic mission of the church. The true Church of Christ has both these missions to perform, and it must not drop one in order to do the other. Men need a radical transformation of heart, and no program of social service can take the place of conversion to God and re-birth. They also need the health and inspiration that come from spiritual worship and ministry, and no efforts to relieve the pressure of poverty and disease and wrong environment can take the place of inward religion and spiritual experience. But as was said two thousand years ago, so it may be said now, "This ought ye to do and not to leave the other undone." Both missions of the church belong together, and should not be sundered. One assists and supplements the other, as breathing and heart-beating do in the body. The best way to reach human hearts with the appeal of the Gospel is to touch the deep springs of life that are common to all humanity, and this can be done through wise and well-directed forms of social service.

In many of our great cities the electric light and power companies display at night on their lofty skyscraper buildings brilliant electric signs which flash out across the city the words, "Public Service; Light and Power." Our desire is that all local churches, whether in city or country, may make that their motto, and their constant aim, that they all may aspire to fulfill their double mission for which Christ wrought and for which he died—that each church may be a live center in the world for "public service, light and power."

Bible School Board

The Bible School work is rapidly taking front rank in the church as the most efficient means of winning the lost and building up the church. It is a slow, steady, but never failing method of recruiting the church with the very best material to be found in the community. It takes the child and uses preventative rather than reformatory means of character building. The child thus grows up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord in the church, and is led to accept Christ as its Savior by its teacher or parents before it has wandered away into sin.

While the Bible School reaches many children and wins them to Christ and the church, it can never take the place of the revival meeting. The two methods of work are needed and should work together harmoniously, winning all who can be reached in both ways.

At the last Five Years Meeting the subject of Bible School work took a prominent place among the problems to be solved by the Friends Church. The interest was such that a board was created and instructed to push the development of Bible School work and literature as rapidly as possible. The board consists of two members from each of the thirteen yearly meetings constituting the Five Years Meeting, one of the two being the head of the Bible School work in his own yearly meeting. Thus created the board will do all in its power to unify and promote the highest interests of the Bible School work among Friends in America.

The board has organized with the following officers: President, Richard Haworth, Fairmount, Indiana; Secretary, Wilbur K. Thomas, Boston, Massachusetts; Treasurer, Ancil E. Ratliff, Fairmount, Indiana. Other members of the executive committee, William J. Sayers, Poughkeepsie, New York, and Alice E. Pennington, Newmarket, Ontario, Canada.

The executive committee in its organization proposes to push five departments of work as follows: Primary, Alice E. Pennington; Secondary Division, William J. Sayers; Adult Department, Richard Haworth; Teacher Training, Ancil E. Ratliff; Graded Work, Wilbur K. Thomas.

Leaflets are being prepared explaining all these departments, and will soon be ready for distribution on application to the head of the department, or to the General Secretary, Wilbur K. Thomas, 12 Hazelwood Street, Roxbury, Boston, Massachusetts.

The board is also preparing to introduce as rapidly as possible the International Graded Lessons, as decided by the Five Years Meeting, for the primary, junior and intermediate grades. Ninety-three schools were reported at that time as using the graded work. It is hoped that all schools will adopt this work as prepared by the International Lesson Committee, and now being rapidly introduced everywhere. Our board is preparing to fill all orders for these lessons, and expects to issue the above grades with the Friends' imprint as soon as we can complete the arrangements.

If all schools now using the graded work will order through our own Bible School board, and others will do the same as rapidly as they introduce the work, it will greatly assist in building up this department and centralizing our efforts. It is gratifying to report that several schools have already placed their orders for the graded supplies with the board. Each yearly meeting superintendent can greatly facilitate matters by sending our secretary a list of all bible schools in the yearly meeting and urging that they order all graded work through our board.

As more and more of the graded work is introduced into a school, it creates a greater need for some kind of general supplementary work. This was anticipated by the Five Years Meeting and is being met by the board. Two pamphlets are being prepared covering the history and government of our denomination, and will be published as soon as the board can get them in readiness. For the history about twenty of the representative characters of our denomination have been chosen by some of the most scholarly Friends in England and America. These biographical sketches, now being written up, will present a connected history of our denomination from the beginning to the present time.

The church government pamphlet will present our forms of church government and doctrine. These will be written up in such form as to be suitable for junior and intermediate study, general exercises, study classes or simply home study.

Members of the executive committee are also planning to visit workers' assemblies, yearly meetings and quarterly meetings to give bible school addresses, conduct round tables, and assist generally in unifying and promoting Bible School work. If any vicinity feels the need of assistance, the board solicits correspondence, and hopes to be able to give the needed help.

Revival services have recently been held at Hynes, Iowa, resulting in a number of conversions and sixteen accessions to the meeting.

Stephen M. and Adeline H. Hadley, of Oskaloosa, Iowa, have announced the engagement of their daughter, Jeannette, to Alexander C. Purdy, of Hartford, Connecticut.

The Board of Managers of Union Bible Seminary, Westfield, Indiana, have sent an appeal to the pastors in Western Yearly Meeting, asking for better support of that institution.

Frank Stafford, pastor at Hopewell, near Dana, Indiana, has recently engaged in a very fruitful revival effort at Lamong, Indiana, in which about thirty souls professed definite blessing.

Oskaloosa, Iowa, Quarterly Meeting raised $50.00 to pay the passage of Eva Allen, a missionary to Jamaica, who takes the place of Mary White, who has been ordered home on account of illness.

The visit of Charles Tebbetts to the November Quarterly Meeting at Bloomington, Indiana, and to some of the local communities, is yielding fruitage in larger missionary activities in at least some of the meetings.

A. Edward Kelsey, who sails for Ramallah, Palestine, on January 13th, attended the Washington City Meeting on December 29th, and rendered acceptable service. Mrs. Kelsey addressed the Christian Endeavor Society in the evening.

William P. Harvey, formerly of Clarksville, Ohio, but now of Columbus, who is in his eighty-sixth year, and is suffering much day and night, writes that he finds nothing to comfort him in his old age and sickness, except his Bible, peace of mind, and a hope of Heaven and rest.

Dr. M. F. Woodard and Nathan Pickett, of Bloomington, produced their stereoptican missionary entertainment entitled "John Chinaman at Home," early in December, to a good sized audience at Rush Creek Meeting, Parke County, Indiana. They also gave another entertainment at Bloomington the following evening.

At the time of Poughkeepsie Monthly Meeting on December 19th, tea was served prior to the gathering, and about one hundred and twenty members assembled. Four persons were received into membership. Following the business meeting, Joseph Elkinton, of Moylan, Pennsylvania, gave a helpful address on "Worship, Yesterday and Today."

Penn College, Iowa, was honored this Fall in the announcement that Jens Jensen, a member of the Junior class, had taken the third prize of one hundred dollars, in the Harris Political Science Prize Contest. This competition includes all the universities and colleges of six states in the upper Mississippi Valley. Mr. Jensen's paper dealt with "Workmen's Compensation and Employers' Liability."

President Taft has appointed Daniel Smiley on the Board of Indian Commissioners, in place of his brother, Albert K. Smiley, recently deceased. The latter was appointed first to the position by President Grant, and has served continuously since that time until his recent death. The new appointee has been interested in the welfare of the Indians for a good many years, and the action of the President is exceptionally appropriate.

New Garden Monthly Meeting, North Carolina, was held December 28th. The meeting was lively in interest and one member was received by certificate from the Methodist Church. Her daughter, a member of the Senior class in Guilford College, became a member by request a year ago. Four others were received by request. By request the membership of Alice Woody Lindley, daughter of John W. and Mary C. Woody, lately married to Alva Lindley, was transferred to Baltimore Monthly Meeting.

For the first time in a number of years, all the meetings of Bloomingdale Quarter, Indiana, are supplied with pastoral care. Enos Harvey is located at Bloomingdale, where he also gives Bible instruction in the academy. Elizabeth Murphy has Coloma meeting, where they have recently enjoyed a very blessed revival. George N. Hicks is located at Marshall, and gives half his time to Friends Chapel Meeting, Scotland, Illinois. Martilia and Mary A. Cox have jointly the three meetings of Rush Creek Monthly Meeting, being located at Tangier, and Arthur Haworth has care of the three meetings of Providence, being located at Farmersburg.

Three acres of ground are included in the tract belonging to the building. The entire cost of the house including barn was $2,250, every dollar of which was guaranteed, and the pastor and family had moved in before it was dedicated. Friends and a number of others subscribed freely, and not a festival or rummage sale was held to obtain the money. On December 12th the building was dedicated. Morton C. Pearson, of Indianapolis, preached a very appropriate and impressive sermon from the vision of Isaiah LX, 13, "I will make the place of my feet glorious." A bountiful dinner followed, after which the company repaired to the parsonage to view it, and then to dedicate it. It was an inspiring occasion throughout. Friends are very thankful to God for His special blessing on the work, and grateful to everyone who in any way contributed to its success.

West Branch, Iowa, Christian Endeavor Society listened with great interest, Sabbath evening, December 22, to an address by Ernest Dewees, who gave a report of his last summer's visit to England. He was one of the privileged fifteen young Friends who sailed on the Merion, July 27. His description of the trip, and his observations concerning the English Friends were much appreciated. The Endeavor Society has decided to devote one meeting per month to Quaker "Round Table" work. The regular series of Endeavor topics, "The Ideal Christian," will be paralleled by a series entitled "The Ideal Quaker." These meetings, which will be devoted to well known biographies of early Friends, will be in charge of the pastor, Walter R. Miles.

Oak Grove Seminary, Vassalboro, Maine, is passing through one of the most interesting and promising years of its history. Aside from its splendid effort to secure the endowment, without which it cannot go on, the work of the school is flourishing in every other respect. The new agricultural course is proving a marked success, and a special ten weeks' course in the Winter term is to be given in this department. The Quaker "Round Table" is having an influence beyond the hopes of its founders, and the religious atmosphere of the school never was so wholesome. A real "revival" among the students has broken out spontaneously without special preparation. The school has all the students it can accommodate, and all the departments of work are in good running condition. The students have the benefit of one of the best gymnasiums in the State of Maine, so that they secure that all-round training of body, mind and soul necessary to all adequate education.

The death of Elvira Hester Parker, announced in this issue, removes one who for many years was an active Christian worker in Kansas Yearly Meeting and elsewhere. She was a life-long member of the Friends Church, was educated at Vermillion Grove Academy and Earlham College, and was interested in every form of Christian activity, especially educational, temperance reform and Sabbath-school work. During the hard times in Kansas, she visited Eastern Friends, and solicited the money which cleared Haviland Academy of debt. She served as clerk of Haviland Monthly Meeting, Haviland Quarterly Meeting, and as reading clerk of Kansas Yearly Meeting. She was also president of the Kansas State Sunday-school Association. In 1885 she married B. Franklin Parker, of Carthage, Indiana, and lived for a time at Argonia, Kansas, moving later to Haviland, where they lived most of the time for more than twenty years. Three years ago they moved to Paonia, Colorado, spending last winter in San Diego, California. Mrs. Parker was "one who lifted," never "one who leaned." She will be greatly missed, both by the church and a large circle of friends.

Work on the new meeting house at Oskaloosa, Iowa, is progressing steadily. If the present mild winter weather continues, the building will be enclosed by the end of January. As the outlines of the structure appear, it is becoming more evident that the Friends of Iowa Yearly Meeting and of Oskaloosa Monthly Meeting, who are cooperating in the enterprise, will soon have a place of worship which will not only be convenient in every way, but a distinct addition to the architecture of the city. The building is in pure Colonial style. The walls are in three tones of the rough ivory Matt brick, with trimmings of Bedford limestone. The roof is of red asbestos tile shingle. On the north and west the entrances are adorned with pillared porches in the simplest late Classic style. The windows, following the Colonial idea, are in small squares, with either two or three panels to the opening. The glass will be in delicate tints, without pictorial features, but relieved by simple conventionalized patterns. The color scheme of the window-glass and the walls will be set by the character of the finished woodwork, which will be in ivory white enamel, with mahogany colored mouldings and furniture. The building is expected to accommodate about nine hundred persons.

British Columbia Quarterly Meeting was held at Victoria, December 14 and 15. Charles and May Replogle attended as fraternal delegates from Puget Sound. This being the first sitting of British Columbia Meeting, since its institution in July, the occasion was felt to be an important one, and a good number of Friends were present from different points. Charles and May Replogle had been conducting meetings in Victoria for some days prior to the Quarterly Meeting. Their messages were much blessed and several of our members, young in life, definitely consecrated themselves to the service of our Lord and Master. One session was devoted to considering "Christianity and Militarism," and how Friends can best combat the growing military spirit in the west. As an outcome, it is hoped that a strong peace movement will be inaugurated at Victoria and Vancouver. At the business session, fraternal delegates were appointed to attend Puget Sound Quarterly Meeting at Everett in February. It was decided that for the present it was not needful to hold British Columbia Quarterly Meeting oftener than twice a year, and the next was appointed for Vancouver, April 26 and 27 next. Charles and May Replogle gave interesting accounts of the late Five Years Meeting. Sabbath afternoon was devoted to the children. A public address on the "Message of Quakerism" by Charles Replogle concluded the program of the meeting.

The following is the copy of a Minute of British Columbia Quarterly Meeting held at Victoria, December 14, 1912:

"The position of our Friends in Australia and New Zealand in connection with the Defence Act and other measures existing, having for their purpose the compulsory training in military drill, has claimed our earnest attention and sympathy. Holding at this time our first Quarterly Meeting in British Columbia, we have been considering in its various aspects the subject of 'Christianity and Militarism.' The growth of the military spirit in this part of the world is exceedingly marked, and it seems as though Friends in British Columbia may have to face a determined effort to introduce compulsory military service in Canada at no very distant future. We feel therefore, that between us there exists a special bond of sympathy, and as we claim your prayers for us, we likewise wish to bear your members in remembrance to our Heavenly Father, that you and we may be kept steadfast to our principles of peace.

"Signed on behalf of the Meeting,

"Nor doth the great king regard one gift above another, so long as all be white. And so do they keep the king's birthday."

With this sentence from the "Legend of Cathay" as a basis the service called "White Gifts for the King"* was used this year in the Christmas observance of the Friends' Bible School at Washington, D. C. The idea of giving to others was emphasized throughout the entire service of song, recitation and story, and practically all the decorations and gifts were white. The fir tree held a central position in the room and at its base were placed the gifts of the classes. Each class in the school decided for what purpose its contribution was to be used and kept its gift a secret until the evening came.

The classes of the Primary Department gave ivory soap and bags of sugar. The Juniors marched in with packages of "Cream of Wheat," wearing white caps and reciting an appropriate verse. These gifts were all taken the next day to Bruen Home for Children. The Intermediate Department chose oranges for its gift, and carried them to a children's hospital. The Young People's classes united and gave ten dollars to a destitute family, recommended by the Associated Charities of the city, and the Men's Bible Class raised twelve dollars for a similar object. The latter contribution was presented in silver quarters on a white banner, outlining the words "Men's Class." The Home Department and the Women's Bible Class with its donation of ten dollars, purchased warm undergarments and tooth brushes for Bruen Home.

The membership of the school averages only about fifty, and the outcome of the effort is most encouraging. The interest was far greater than in the usual Christmas gifts received by the children themselves, and the influence cannot fail of far-reaching results.

THE BEST TEACHEROld Experience Still Holds the Palm

For real practical reliability and something to swear by, experience—plain old experience—is able to carry a big load yet without getting swaybacked.

A So. Dak. woman found some things about food from Old Experience a good, reliable teacher.

She writes:

"I think I have used almost every breakfast food manufactured, but none equal Grape-Nuts in my estimation.

"I was greatly bothered with weak stomach and indigestion, with formation of gas after eating, and tried many remedies for it but did not find relief.

"Then I decided I must diet and see if I could overcome the difficulty that way. My choice of food was Grape-Nuts because the doctor told me I could not digest starchy food.

"Grape-Nuts food has been a great benefit to me for I feel like a different person since I begun to eat it. It is wonderful to me how strong my nerves have become. I advise everyone to try it, for experience is the best teacher.

"If you have any stomach trouble—can't digest your food, use Grape-Nuts food for breakfast at least, and you won't be able to praise it enough when you see how different you feel." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

BE WITH ME, LORD!

Through every minute of this day
Be with me, Lord!
Through every day of all this week
Be with me, Lord!
Through every week of all this year
Be with me, Lord!
Through all the years of all this life
Be with me, Lord!
So shall the days and weeks and

Be threaded on a golden cord,
And all draw on with sweet accord
Unto Thy fullness, Lord;
That so, when time is past,
By grace, I may at last
Be with Thee, Lord!

Editorial Comment Upon Current Topics of the Day

The continued uncertainty over the peace conference now meeting in London, to determine the future of the Turko-Balkan difficulty is depressing. Turkey seems disinclined to recognize the weakness of her position. All lovers of peace have strongly deplored this recent resort to arms, but now that blood has been shed, it is hoped in the interests of Christian civilization that the power of Turkey will not be restored.

* * *

The pardoning power as exemplified recently upon an extensive scale by the Governors of Arkansas and South Carolina, savors somewhat of the sentimental if not of the political. The end of all justice should be reformation, and the power to pardon those convicted of crime is frequently the very means necessary to insure permanent reformation. But this power when abused only brings the law into disrepute, and the safety of society is threatened.

The trial and conviction of certain Ohio legislators for bribery in connection with certain legislation should have a wholesome effect in safeguarding more surely the interests of the public. All too frequently in legislative halls and in city councils, public interests are sacrificed by the liberal use of money. To the extent that functions of government are used to serve selfish and sordid ends, popular government is threatened and the foundation laid for chaos and anarchy.

The remarkable progress which wireless telegraphy is making is one of the marvels of this century. On Christmas Day, for the first time in history, the station at the Mare Island navy yard on the Pacific coast, flashed an appropriate greeting across the continent, and was caught by the new station at Washington City. A few days later this latter station "picked up" the station at the "Eiffel Tower" in Paris. No one can know the limit to which man's ingenuity can harness the forces of nature for the accomplishment of material ends.

Treaty relations between the United States and Russia ended on January 1. For the first time in eighty years, these two countries are without an agreement to govern their trade relations. The situation is the outgrowth of the disturbance relative to Russian treatment of the Jews, which was widely discussed some months ago in this country. A way should be found speedily to reach an amicable adjustment, for so long as the present situation is continued, the slightest misunderstandings might easily give rise to more serious results.

Occasionally we hear of successful local movements to reduce the cost of living as applied to certain commodities. Witness the recent sale of two million eggs by the Philadelphia Housekeepers League, resulting in lowering the price of eggs materially throughout the city. It may be that ultimately the people themselves will have to become a trust to protect themselves against existing combinations. It will not be a far cry from the government ownership of utilities to government control over food stuffs. The desirability of either is quite another question.

The President seems to have made a practical suggestion when he recommended that cabinet officers be given seats in both the House and Senate. Hours and even days of debate are practically wasted over departmental mysteries, which could easily be cleared up, if the cabinet officer having charge of the subject in question were present. There will be objection probably that the proposal brings too closely together the executive and law making departments of the government. But why should these hold each other at arm's length, when they have so much in common? The proposition is not likely to receive practical attention just yet, but there is much in the recommendation that may ultimately develop into plans for greater efficiency on the part of both departments.

A live international question has grown out of the decision relative to the collection of tolls upon vessels passing through the Panama Canal. It is insisted that there is no discrimination, and that an equitable rule has been agreed upon, by which American coastwise shipping can use the canal free, while all other shipping must pay toll. Great Britain has protested this action as a violation of treaty agreements, but it is announced that the United States Senate will refuse to have the question submitted for arbitration by the Hague International Court. Diplomatic consideration of the matter has entered upon its first stage, but it will be to the lasting discredit of the American government if it shall hold out permanently against arbitration. The more sure we are of the justice of the position taken by Congress, the more ready we should be to have the case settled by the Hague Tribunal. If the equity of our course is open to question, a court of arbitration should review the case in all its details, that we be saved from a colossal National sin. It is a good time to let our national senate hear the voice of the Christian public in no uncertain tones.

The English are preparing to celebrate upon an elaborate scale the centenary of Anglo-American peace in 1914. A committee has just proposed that a monument to George Washington be erected either in Westminster Abbey or in Westminster Hall adjoining the House of Commons. It is also proposed that the ancestral home of the Washingtons in Northamptonshire be purchased, and that an organized effort be made both in England and America to promote mutual affection and good will among the English speaking peoples. The English Premier has pledged his support and that of the government to the project, while Earl Grey has announced that the proposal to erect monuments in England, America and the British colonies to commemorate the centenary has met with the approval of the committee. Simultaneously an American Committee appointed to consider the same question, has made public an invitation to the British Committee to become the guests of the Americans at a conference in New York next April. It is suggested by Senator Root that all human activity throughout the English speaking nations cease for five minutes at the opening of the celebration. It is proposed to erect a monument to Queen Victoria and a bust of Chatham in Washington City. A Canadian Committee is also co-operating in the plans for this fraternity of effort. What an example for the nations of the earth! Why may not these plans be the beginning of a movement that will emphasize the brotherhood of all nations, and thus usher in a reign of universal peace?

Being Burden Bearers Together

"Bear ye one another's burdens, and so fulfil the law of Christ."

As the statement of a social service creed for all Christian philanthropy, this stands as the masterpiece of the ages. It means continuity of purpose, co-ordination of effort, fraternity of faith, the sympathy of a brotherhood. It reveals a community of interest, it establishes the family relationship, it stamps with approval a real fellowship of soul among all believers who have become joint-heirs of the Kingdom with Jesus Christ.

In the larger fellowship of all who are servants of God, credal walls are no longer to mark the boundaries of hostile camps. "For one is your Master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren." In that more intimate denominational fellowship which characterizes those of the same household of faith, the responsibility of burden bearing together is even more strongly emphasized. Jealousy, bickering, schism, false witness have no place in the Christian Church. "If a man be overtaken in a fault, ye which are spiritual, restore such an one in the spirit of meekness; considering thyself, lest thou also be tempted."

But the text is not to be considered alone in its application to the errors of life, nor yet the sorrows and trials to which the flesh is heir. In a broader sense, the text is a call for team work in fulfilling the mission of the church. "For we are members one of another." No man liveth to himself. All men have not the same gifts, but it takes all the gifts of all the members to make a church which can meet all the needs within the circle of its influence.

The waste of energy in Christian activity is appalling. There is so little pulling together. A few bear the burdens, and consume their energies in the toiling, while others balk and refuse their share of the load. Team work in football spells victory, no more surely than team work in a local church will stir a neighborhood with the zeal of religious interest.

Being burden bearers together will solve the problems of many a discouraged congregation. By this token a community or a denomination may enlarge the horizon of its activities, for it is by such concert of action that we "fulfil the law of Christ."

The Symposium on the Five Years Meeting

We offer no apology for continuing for a brief period the Symposium on the interpretation of the Five Years Meeting, now running in the AMERICAN FRIEND. An explanation of the editor's purpose, however, seems to be appropriate.

The gathering in October at Indianapolis not only marked an epoch in Quaker history, as has been so frequently remarked, but in the judgment of many it marked the beginning of a larger life for the denomination. For its own sake, therefore, as being probably the most important event in the annals of our church on this side the Atlantic, it is due our membership and our future activities, that its interpretation be given in all its varied meanings.

The danger has been imminent ever since the adjournment of that meeting, that its spirit would be wasted before it had opportunity to be assimilated in the lives of all our scattered membership. This spirit of unity and fraternity, of aggressiveness and determination, of construction and organization was too valuable to be lost. It deserved to be incorporated into our literature, while its freshness yet enveloped the minds and hearts of the delegates.

Then, too, it is worth while to have this many-sided picture of the Five Years Meeting for the sake of our church Boards. Organization is important only as it serves some useful purpose. This symposium will not only furnish meat for the Boards to assimilate, but it will prepare the great body of the church to follow the lead of the Boards in live, aggressive movements, that in the final analysis will mean the enlargement of the horizon of our existence as a religious body.

Next week we will hear from some of the younger delegates, and the week following we will get the vision of some of the women who helped to make the Five Years Meeting what it was. All these utterances, and more that may be offered voluntarily, are putting into our literature the record of one of the mightiest periods which the Society of Friends in America has yet passed through.

Responsibility in our Meetings for Worship

We will not have the inclination often to refer editorially to contributions which may be admitted to the columns of the AMERICAN FRIEND. The article by Augustus T. Murray in this issue, however, touches so much that is vital to the subject matter considered, that we cannot forbear expressing the hope that it will be studied earnestly and prayerfully by all of our readers. We are unable to give entire approval to all that the author has presented as the Quaker polity of the meeting for worship and the pastoral relationship thereto. While primarily dealing with the act and spirit of worship, we are impressed that the ideal has been emphasized over much, and the practical conditions which many meetings face have been too little recognized. We heartily endorse the teaching relative to individual responsibility in worship, and the freedom which every Friends meeting should seek to protect. Some pastors will probably feel that there is a lack of sympathy with the perplexing problems which daily confront them. But after all, when every member of a congregation can be made to feel the obligation of entering into sympathetic co-operation with the exercises of the meeting for worship, the burden upon the pastor will be lightened many fold. The article in reality is an endeavor to adjust the fundamentals of Quaker worship to modern necessities in a way that will safeguard the essentials of each. Viewed and studied from that standpoint, the author has rendered a valuable service to the denomination which is now entering upon a new era of activity, in which the pastoral care of our modern meetings, and the historic freedom of vocal exercise in our seasons of worship, will need to be harmonized in a profitable relationship.

Editorial Notes and Comment

Coming Back Home

Friends generally, perhaps, do not know that in coming to Richmond, the AMERICAN FRIEND is virtually coming back home. During 1867 and 1868, a monthly periodical was published in Richmond by certain interested Friends, and bore the title THE AMERICAN FRIEND. It was devoted to the interests of the Society, but was discontinued after two years. The publication had the editorial supervision of the well-known Friends of those earlier days, Dougan Clark, Timothy Harrison, William B. Morgan, Eli Jay, Clarkson Davis and Mahala Jay.

Religion is too often made a matter of selfish enjoyment. Men are taught to make a profession of Christianity that they may escape the lashings of their own consciences. But religion ought to be of that positive kind that seeks by living to honor God and to help our brethren. Men are saved to serve, and not to be idlers in gardens of pleasure.

Men are not always wise in marking the place of greatest blessing. The world traces its richest legacy to a stable. The most sacred spots are where we are alone with God. It is the solitude oftentimes that establishes the best connections with the Infinite. The world needs more real heart communion with Jehovah.

Christ's spirit is at enmity with sin, but it cannot be at enmity with itself. Brethren in the church should stand unitedly against evil, but to reveal the spirit of hostility and bitterness among themselves is not Christ-like.

The first duty of a religious congregation is obedience to God. Its second duty is loyalty to one another for the sake of greater efficiency in serving Him. To become a member of the church, and then be a laggard in fulfilling its obligations is a dishonor to the Father, and unfair to the vows of Christian brotherhood.

It is not given to every one to know the intricacies of theology as defined by the world, but every one may find the way to be at peace with his God, if he but seek with all his heart.

Faith and prayer are the keys which unlock the store-house of God. Neither is complete without the other. Faith induces prayer, and prayer is an empty form without faith.

Religion is not a profession; it is something to be possessed. It is not a formula; it is a life. It is not a state of mind; it is real heart relationship with God.

Many a man prays to be delivered from temptation and then deliberately presents himself in the way of temptation. It is asking God to do an impossible thing.

The man who professes saintship, and then reveals the unforgiving spirit, makes a mockery of religion, and turns men away from the Kingdom.

The prayer of faith is the prayer that recognizes, "Thy will, not mine, be done."

The Meeting and its Pastoral Care

BY AUGUSTUS T. MURRAY.

The fundamental truth of Quakerism, as I understand it, is that God reveals Himself directly to the individual soul; that the soul is, or becomes, conscious of the relation in which it stands to the Divine Father; and that religion is the expression in life, and thought, and conduct, of this consciousness. We Quakers have ever held to the great truth that God is Spirit, and must be worshiped in spirit and in truth, and not by means of stated rites or conventional observances. Hence we have no formal creed, no prescribed form of service, no outward sacraments. We believe it impossible that formal rites or ceremonial observances can please God.

Our Quaker theory of worship is therefore a natural outgrowth from this spiritual conception of religion. In our view, worship to be real must be the conscious meeting of the individual soul with God. We go apart to commune with Him, to realize His presence, to listen for His message, and we do this both as individuals and as members of the whole body of worshipers. As individuals, it is at once our duty and our privilege thus to enter into communion with God, and as members of the worshiping body we may aid in creating an atmosphere of worship, which makes it easier for others, too, to enter into this blessed experience.

Quakerism has been consistent throughout its history in its protest against sacerdotalism. We recognize no class possessing priestly functions, and deny that God speaks only through ordained priests, and not directly to the soul. In this matter the experience of George Fox was fundamental and typical. We do firmly believe in the divine call to the ministry, and that this call may be extended to any devout believer; and hence this devout waiting upon God, which is the very soul of worship, has with us been accompanied by full liberty for any exercise which His spirit may call for on the part of any individual. For merely to meet together is not worship, mere preaching, mere singing, mere silence—these things are not of themselves worship. They become worship only as they are the expression of the religious consciousness; and who are we that we should limit the channels through which this religious consciousness may find expression, or to say that only one individual has the right to give expression to it? Where the spirit of God is, there is liberty.

It is in the light of these fundamental truths that the problem of adjusting Quaker worship to present-day needs is to be approached. The spirituality of worship must be conserved; the fact that the individual soul must approach God for itself—that one cannot worship for another or perform his service for him—must ever be borne in mind; the individual worshiper must not be allowed to forget that he has responsibilities in the matter of worship which he cannot shift to another. To go to a place of worship and merely sing hymns and listen to someone else preach may be helpful and uplifting, but it comes far short of being Quaker worship; it is not necessarily worship at all.

Herein lies, it seems to me, the greatest danger in the system which so many American meetings have adopted. As Quakers we recognize no distinction between clergy and laity; but in many meetings it is taken for granted that a given individual will perform the service of the meeting, and no opportunity whatever is offered any one else. Yet in the body of the meeting there may be one or more upon whom the spirit of God is moving, and to whom a message may have been given which in God's wisdom would reach many a heart. Is it for us to say who shall speak, and who not? Have we the right to say that the pastor, and he alone, shall preach at First-day morning service? May there not be in the gathering some visiting Friend, whether minister or not, who has come in the Master's name, and who has a message for the meeting? If he makes himself known in advance, he may be invited by the pastor to preach in his place, but if he does not come forward to claim the privilege in advance, it is likely that no opportunity will be accorded him—no opportunity for a Friend with a message to deliver his message in a Friends' meeting.

Again, the current system tends to keep back those who would otherwise be led to "come forward" in the ministry, and makes it increasingly unlikely that any will feel the call so to do. This does not mean that anyone will seek to repress those conscious of such leading, or that the pastor may not feel that the development of the spiritual gifts of the members of the congregation is an important part of his or her work. But if Friends are in the habit of looking to an appointed pastor for the services of the meeting, the idea that they might themselves be called upon to give a message will be unlikely to occur to them; for one of the obstacles constantly met in endeavoring to foster and develop spiritual religion is the tendency among men and women to shift the responsibility to someone other than themselves, and to leave to him the duty of religious service in meeting, while they feel that attendance at a place of worship and, it may be, contribution to the support of the church complete their duty.

I would not be understood as claiming that because certain things have been in a sense innovations in Quakerism they are therefore to be deplored and condemned; nor would I seem to demand that one fixed type of meeting should be regarded as the only legitimate one. I fully realize that varying conditions may call for varying types; but the underlying principle of worship should everywhere be the same; and that underlying principle is this: the Quaker meeting is the gathering together of worshipers, who come to meet and commune with God, to listen to His voice, and to respond to His call to service, if it comes to them. They do not come to listen to this man or that, as the only one to whom God's message may be given; they are worshipers, not merely a congregation to be preached to; and as worshipers they have responsibilities which they may not shirk, and privileges which may not be denied them. To relieve them of the responsibilities, or to deny them the privileges by putting the service definitely in the hands of some one individual may result in a good sermon or in good singing; but whatever else it may be, it is assuredly not Quaker worship.

Many, perhaps most, of our American meetings have, and are likely to retain pastors. It is not for me to protest against this as incompatible with true Quakerism, or to deny the loyal devotion of many who are serving in this capacity, and rendering helpful service. Any given meeting may feel that for its pastoral work it needs someone who can devote his or her time wholly to the work of the meeting; and it may feel ready to give, and the pastor feel justified in accepting, support, a home, a salary. But two facts should not be forgotten: (1) We cannot keep real Quakerism alive, if we allow the duty and the privilege of religious service in meeting to devolve upon the pastor alone; and (2) if we thoroughly "programme" our meetings, we leave no room for divine guidance, and thus reject the fundamental principle of Quakerism.

A word should here be said regarding prepared sermons. It is perhaps true that such are delivered regularly on First-days in very many of our meetings; just as one sometimes finds Friends' ministers who habitually speak from notes. Now it may be admitted that one may as legitimately look for divine guidance in one's study as in the meeting itself; but to prepare a sermon, arrange one's topics, etc., as if that and nothing else must be the message to be given in an approaching meeting, is surely to go too far. In a sense every sermon is prepared, though the preparation be in truth the whole spiritual life and experience of the speaker; but in my own case I have often met with an experience like the following: Often in looking forward to a meeting I have had a topic impressed upon my mind so vividly that a message has shaped itself about it, and I have felt that I should be called upon to speak upon that topic; and then in the silence of the meeting a new message has come to me, and I have spoken in a wholly different way upon a wholly different theme with a deep sense of spiritual leading. This experience has been a common one, I have been assured, among many Friends, and it is possible only if the opportunity of silent waiting upon God is allowed. Yet if it be not allowed, we are surely taking the direction of the meeting out of the Lord's hands, and claiming it for ourselves; and I repeat with deep earnestness that this dependence upon immediate divine guidance is absolutely fundamental in Quakerism; it is the very soul of our worship. I have heard a gifted minister of another denomination plead earnestly with Friends that they allow nothing to lead them to give up their reliance upon divine guidance in the matter of worship, stating that the hardest thing in his own experience as a minister was that at stated times in the service he was expected to speak or even to offer prayer. How, he asked with deep feeling, can one pray to order, or simply because one is expected to? Prayer, to be real must be spontaneous, one must feel the impulse to pray, or prayer becomes a mere form.

This leads me to speak of silence, and of its place in worship, for it is in solemn silence, unbroken by human utterance that the soul can best look for guidance, and find it.

We Quakers have been the interpreters of silent worship to the world. It seems to outsiders sometimes a strange thing, irksome and meaningless; and it is a sad fact that many who call themselves Friends seem not to know its power and significance. Yet when men and women meet together for worship, cherishing in their hearts the Quaker view of the immediacy of God's dealings with the individual and of the spirituality of worship, what course is so natural for them as to sit down in silent waiting upon God? Nay, we may ask, what other course is possible for them? Note that the silence is not a formal thing, a prescribed thing. It is the natural expression of the mood in which the worshipers come together. They are not merely a congregation to be preached to; they are a body of worshipers, and the duties and privileges of worshipers are theirs. They have the right and the duty to give to the assembled company the message that may come to them; they have the right to wait only upon God, and to listen for the message He may send; and by denying them silence we may deny them this right.

This applies primarily to the opening of meeting, and who that has ever experienced it can fail to give testimony to the solemnity of the hush that falls upon a body of worshipers as they bow in silent waiting upon God, and upon Him alone? Yet there will almost always be another period or periods in the service at which silence is particularly rich and significant. I refer particularly to the period following immediately upon a discourse. Surely many besides myself have often craved at least a few moments of silence after a message has been delivered with conspicuous power, in order that it might be allowed to sink into the heart and have its full effect, and have found the immediate singing of a hymn, a discordant, not a helpful thing—the intrusion into the mood of worship of an element not the spontaneous expression of that mood, but something to interrupt it and prevent one from dwelling upon the thoughts called up by the discourse, or from entering fully into the spiritual meditation suggested by it.

To say that singing may have no place in a Friends meeting, is again to take the direction of the meeting into our own hands, instead of leaving it with God; but we do this just as truly, if we say that all the time not occupied by sermon or prayer is to be filled with singing, or if we arrange in advance for the singing of this or that solo by this or that individual. When we wander away from the dependence upon direct spiritual guidance in our worship, we give up Quakerism; while, if we depend upon that guidance, we shall feel a fitness in whatever form of service is called for at the hands of whatever individual. Doubtless all will agree that singing by trained singers is more acceptable to the listeners than attempts to sing by those untrained; doubtless, too, a scholarly discourse by one carefully trained for the work of preaching may seem more in keeping with the dignity of worship than the crude and broken utterance of another; but while the officers of the church may rightly endeavor to see that all things are done "decently and in order," all will surely agree that the sincere and devout expression of the spiritual experience of a Christian brother or sister may be more helpful than a scholarly discourse.

For we must not forget that while with the consciousness of a call to the ministry there comes the solemn obligation to fit oneself for the work of a minister, yet neither rhetoric nor scholarship is the most essential thing in the minister's equipment. Every one, surely, would deplore the supplanting of simple utterance by rhetoric in Friends meetings, and it would be calamitous, if scholarship, or the specific training of a divinity school, should come to be rated above spirituality. The conscientious minister, whatever his training, will by reading and study endeavor to keep abreast of the best thought of the day, will ever be open-minded and quick to welcome truth from whatever source; but it need hardly be said that the first pre-requisite for the one who seeks to deliver a spiritual message to others is a real and vital religious experience of his own; and if to this be added a constant looking for divine guidance and an honest endeavor to grow in knowledge and understanding, we need not fear as to the quality of our ministry. Far, far better a lay ministry marked by spiritual insight, than a professional ministry, however learned and scholarly; for the former reflects the spiritual life of the society at large, while the latter would tend inevitably to restore the fictitious ecclesiastical distinction between clergy and laity, as a protest against which Quakerism arose.

The Five Years Meeting as Interpreted by Some Leading Friends

STATEMENT BY THOMAS NEWLIN.

The farther I get away from that splendid gathering, the greater seems to be its mission and its message. That meeting seems to be a response to the awakening world that the Friends Church is a part of the American nation, and must no longer be considered a religious organization foreign to the great needs of the world. We must more and more be a plastic force to mold public opinion and place our stamp on institutional life. The awakening outside the church must be met by an awakening inside the church. That there is such an awakening cannot be denied.

The trend of the meeting was big with meaning and hope. It was shown there, as it has ever been shown, that every great movement begins in the hearts and minds of the few, and in the course of history those few have generally been young men. Very few of the great lines of thought that held the attention of the whole body of delegates at the late Five Years Meeting would have been acceptable or even tolerated fifteen years ago, when the Third Conference of Friends was held in the same city and in the same room. The present writer at that meeting made some statements on social service that would now be considered commonplace and useless, yet the printing committee asked him to modify them and change them before the article was printed. We do not realize how rapidly the world is moving until we stop and get our bearings.

Quakerism has always been such an intensive religion that it has ever been a problem how to make it extensive. The problem is now more vital than ever before. We have done some splendid things at particular meetings, and monthly meetings. This has always been in a small way, but well done. We must now learn to do things as well in a larger way. If we cannot do this, the work outlined by the last Five Years Meeting will be in a larger degree a failure. If the whole church is favored to see what at least most of the delegates saw, that our problems are worldwide, and we must have a vision to see them as such, then a new era is dawning upon us.

That this meeting marks a great epoch in our church is my firm conviction. I will state briefly why I believe this.

First. In the preparation for the meeting the work of the various Commissions is an omen of how our work is to be carried on in the future, if it holds the attention of the people. Carefully prepared reports and well digested statements carry conviction, while oral reports and guesses at facts will sap the life of any church.

Second. There never was a better example of what is going to take place in the future of our church, than was shown in the way in which we came to a conclusion about the publishing business. Some of the older men saw giants in the way, but the young men arose and said we are able to possess the land, and I believe we are going to cultivate a field that has so far been neglected. Yes, I believe our church is going to get the burdens of the world on our hearts.

Third. The importance given to Social Service is indeed encouraging. It was time for us to act and declare ourselves. In the last few years nearly all the great denominations have attacked this problem and outlined the duty of the church in the case. The Social Service session was a memorable occasion, and we were led to see that Social Service is just living the Christ life, and we all wanted to transmute our possessions into sacramental service of humanity. The social awakening is seen to be natural, biblical and hence orthodox, but it is also an epoch in our history.

Fourth. In the matter of organizing the whole church under a small executive committee, a general secretary, with a central office, is more far-reaching than most of us as yet realize. Many more statements might be made, but perhaps this is enough.

The possibilities of our new organization are so vast, so splendid and so far-reaching, and at the same time without historic precedent, that some of our hopes may be doomed to disappointment. Shall the Friends Church write one more chapter in the history of a disappointed Christ? That thought repels. For some time to come the work of organizing these new plans will be vague, often groping and sometimes inefficient. We should all be patient and helpful.

A great task lies before us, and a great task requires a great faith. In order to live a great life one needs to be surrendered to a great cause. I believe the principles for which we stand is such a cause. Our entire church needs this vital faith that will saturate our whole lives, for we are confronting the mightiest task ever undertaken by any generation of Friends. Our church as well as our whole civilization is passing through a great historic transition. But the church is moving toward the light, and even now I believe we have builded better than we know, and best of all, the Master of the Church is in all this and "He has sounded forth the trumpet that shall never blow retreat."

STATEMENT BY ALLEN C. THOMAS.

Having attended the Five Years Meetings of 1902, 1907 and 1912, and having had the privilege of seeing a good deal of the workings of these meetings, it has been a gratification to observe the recognition of unity in essentials steadily growing, and the appreciation of large issues becoming stronger and stronger. There can be little doubt that of all these meetings, that of 1912 most fully exhibited these features, and was also the most practical of any. There was less discussion of side issues, there was more earnestness and more real desire to get at the facts than has been manifested heretofore.

The change was largely due to the presentation of the reports of the Commissions which centered attention on actual conditions, and suggested lines of action. In former meetings, papers presented by individuals represented individual opinions, which, sometimes misunderstood, or at variance with other individual opinions, called forth discussions not altogether profitable, and occasionally caused irritation. As between the old and the new way, the opinion must have been unanimous that the new is better.

The three most striking features of the meeting were: first, the increase in earnestness of purpose; second, the place given to the interests and service of the young Friends; third, the attention given to that broad division of Christian work known as Social Service. Of these not the least important is the "Young Friends Movement," as it is termed. In this interest lies the future welfare of the Society of Friends. Indeed the most encouraging feature of the meeting was the evidence that the young Friends are not only willing, but ready and anxious to take an active and earnest share in the work of evangelization and of building up, and to do this on Friendly lines.

So much has already been written and said regarding Social Service that it is needful only to mention it.

What are to be the results of the meeting? It is safe to say that they will be in exact proportion to the amount of wisdom, zeal, and perseverance with which the convictions received at the meeting are put into practice. Wider or more varied fields of service have never been as well pointed out to Friends, and the call has never been given more clearly to old, middle-aged, and young. If those whose hearts were stirred enter into service and say to others, "Come," there is a great future before Friends.

It is not likely that the carefully worded statement regarding the Richmond Declaration will cause much change of view. Those who held one view will still hold it, and point to the statement; those who hold a different view will still hold it, and point to the statement; but it must be that many of all parties have had a clearer vision, and have realized more fully that however valuable declarations and letters may be, the important thing is a changed heart and a changed life; or, to paraphrase Paul's words, neither is a declaration anything nor absence of a declaration, but a new creature.

STATEMENT BY ALBERT S. ROGERS.

It seemed to the writer, attending the closing sessions of the meeting at Indianapolis, that the five years passed since the Convention of 1907, had drawn Friends of different points of view, West and East, Progressive and Conservative, if you will, nearer together in a broader and deeper understanding of the basis of Quaker Christian fellowship, faith and work. The heart of Boanerges was pulsating with tender kindliness and love in a deeper knowledge of the Master's spirit whom he sought to serve, and with clear, direct insight and strong conviction, the lovers of the old and tried were moving on to meet the newer problems with open minds and open hearts. That this spirit in the recent Five Years Meeting should have its fruition in the forward movement for better organization, to assist the various Yearly Meetings in conserving and directing the forces of Quakerism in America throughout the five years interim, was both natural and opportune.

The writer has not the knowledge to speak of other Yearly Meetings, but as to Canada, it is true that since she first participated in the Convention of 1907, the interest in the Five Years Meeting has been heretofore largely confined to the delegates who attended the sessions, and the five years interim was mostly a blank to the whole membership of the Yearly Meeting.

The combination of a general office with a Publication representing the work and interest of the Boards of the Five Years Meeting, including General Secretary and Mission activities, seems to provide a most hopeful opportunity to enlist the individual membership of all the Yearly Meetings, not excepting the widely scattered Friends in Canada, in a recognition of and a genuine interest in the work of the Society of Friends as a whole. To promote the community of faith, the interchange of thought, the elevation of ideal, the inspiration of achievement, the better balance and wider outlook, and to many, perhaps, a reviving faith in a high place for the Friends among Ministers of Christ in the world, with encouragement to each to do his or her part in the Master's service therein, may be the high office of the AMERICAN FRIEND. This will be true if the permanent organizations of the Five Years Meeting for which it will speak are so endued with the Spirit manifest in the Convention of 1912, that they become a medium of exchange, as it were, between Friends, individuals and communities, far and near, not merely a five-year's link between Conventions, but promoting, in a measure at least, a vastly enlarged and permanent Convention, a coming together of Friends in unity of purpose and Christian service.

It is a most promising feature that the Publication Board starts with an established periodical, deservedly holding the confidence of Friends, and one of the duties of the moment for the individual Friend, who wishes to see this forward movement count for something in the growth of the Church, would seem to be to assist as far as possible in enlarging the subscription list of the AMERICAN FRIEND, and in other ways upholding the hands of the Editor and the Publication Board.

STATEMENT BY WILLIAM L. PEARSON.

Others will have rightly sounded the note of hope. I need only write FAITH. Ah! Beloved Society of Friends, "Flower of Puritanism," Servant of Christ and of sects and races: Come forth; fight the good fight; keep the faith. The fight is unavoidable: it is either fight the good fight and keep the faith, or lose thy faith in a bad fight in thy own family, and never receive thy waiting crown of righteousness. The record of the past quarter century and of the last Five Years Meeting is evidence. But love never fails, and faith and hope are not about to fail.

Recent writers rightly tell us, the Society of Friends is a life, a fellowship. But like every other religious society, Christian and pagan, it is first a doctrine, however vague, then a life; then a fellowship only if the life be pure. Its mission? To further among all Christians the fullness of the Divine life and fellowship. But life and fellowship and efficient service come only through the birth and baptism of the Holy Spirit; and these only by grace through faith. In our approach to fuller fellowship we may not avoid any cardinal doctrine of grace and faith.

Now, the Spirit convicts of sin, of righteousness, and of judgment; He guides into all the truth. Through Him, after the supreme facts of atoning death and resurrection, Christ continued throughout the Apostolic Age "both to do and to teach," until He had revealed the great body of truth, as new conditions in the churches demanded it. And the first element of faith is some certain knowledge (gnosis), leading on to fuller knowledge (Greek epignosis). It is more than mere devotion of heart and will; it does not lead into a blind alley of featureless fellowship. We are children of the Light. That was a marvelous growth in intellectual apprehension in Peter and John and Paul, who from first to last reproved, rebuked, exhorted, comforted, taught. It was similar in Luther, Calvin, Fox, Wesley, Booth, princely prophets all, and fathers of all the principal forms of present-day Protestant faiths and forms of church government. Hence it is a hazardous business in some brethren, who teach a minified faith and a modified Christ, to try to hark "back to Christ" over the heads of pillar-apostles. Such belittle Barclay, Gurney and Braithwaite, the first of whom associated with Fox in his maturer days, expounded the Friendly faith and saved the Society in the seventeenth century, and the other two did somewhat similarly in the nineteenth century. Let us rather follow Paul, Peter and John in their eager quest for fuller knowledge of Christ and the truth, that He may lead us, as He did them, to strive to attain unto all possible fullness of God, unto, that is on to, the unity of the faith and of the full knowledge and stature of Christ. With such holy enthusiasm for the treasures of hidden wisdom and knowledge, definitions and declarations of faith will be undertaken again and again, as occasion requires.

By twice approving its declarations of faith, which had previously been adopted by most of the Yearly Meetings, the Five Years Meeting invites all members, officials and churches of the American Society of Friends to study and to teach their up-to-date doctrinal standards. Any who keep the faith in its continuity will do far better than most of us, and the few favored, faithful Friends may freely pass beyond them, and may some needful day, having the mind that is in Christ Jesus and in the Society of His Friends, be permitted to write another Declaration of Faith of the Society of Friends. But if they would fight the good fight, let them keep the faith, "truthing it in love," as Paul puts it. This is the paramount issue with American Friends.

If American Friends would keep the faith and prosper, it is of the highest importance that the Evangelistic and Church Extension work shall be pushed early and late, all the time. In this day of free movements of membership among the churches no Christian society can long survive which neglects Christ's final solemn Commission to evangelize. Our Mission falls within His Commission to imperialize in the Name of King Jesus. Nothing else can be substituted for evangelization—neither social service nor philanthropy, nor education; nor even the training and instructing of men for the field, which is an essential part of evangelization.

One should most sympathize with the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting. They will have to discover their undefined duties, help every department as far as they can, "behave wisely," as did the anointed but uncrowned King David, and we hope they will be more appreciated.

Perhaps others will interpret other actions of the Five Years Meeting. They are all of great interest, most of them of much promise. The Yearly Meetings will stagger at the magnitude of the undertakings. Far wiser would it have been to equip the Evangelistic Board well, in particular, and others as well as possible, and to expend all reserve energy in perfecting and adjusting the defective Constitution to the needs of the churches, than to attempt to drive all teams half-harnessed at once. But all our Yearly Meetings and churches and members should do their utmost to work harmoniously together, by which otherwise insurmountable obstacles may be overcome. Thus God's shall be the glory, and ours the blessing forever.

Board of Education

The Board of Education look forward to the next five years of work with great hope and expectation. If they were to dwell upon the needs alone of our educational institutions, they would feel quite dazed. In the aggregate these needs are tremendous, almost overwhelming. The reason for them is outside the schools themselves. The magnitude and rapidity of recent changes in the field of higher education force these needs upon us. In response to this urgent demand individual institutions have attempted the impossible, and the impossible must be realized if their work is to continue. The struggle for existence in the educational world is terrific. The Board prays Friends not to conclude that the case of the schools and colleges is being overstated.

So far as we can see, our most pressing need is additional endowment. And this is true almost all along the line. The Bureau of Education at Washington is now engaged in a thorough classification of American colleges, and one of the most prominent bases of classification is the endowment. Colleges and secondary schools are being standardized by various authoritative agencies throughout the entire country. Possibly our schools can be classified fairly in the following way:

1. We have a few standard colleges; they are located in the older states and are in competition with institutions with millions of productive funds. These colleges must move forward and at a good brisk pace.

2. We have some colleges that have not reached the $200,000.00 minimum endowment required of a standard college, although in other respects they meet the stipulated requirements. These colleges must have immediate help or sink back permanently into second-class institutions.

3. We have some institutions calling themselves colleges, but which on several counts fall below the generally accepted requirements of a college. These institutions should move forward at once or frankly and publicly adopt a less ambitious name. They might call themselves Junior Colleges and attempt two years of College work.

4. We have a few secondary schools of fine equipment, good personnel and high rank. Their work should be maintained at a high state of efficiency. And finally,

5. We have several schools of secondary grade which in everything, except possibly in moral tone (and this is questionable), fall distinctly below the surrounding public schools. These schools cannot live on sentiment alone.

Now Friends schools ought to be first-class schools of whatever rank. They should not pretend to be something they are not. If there is a real reason for the existence of a secondary school the Friends of the community concerned must demonstrate that reason, and must do so by placing the school upon a respectable basis. It is better to have a good academy than a poor college. It is better to have a good Junior College than a weak institution with higher pretensions. The managers of our educational institutions should be guided by the Quaker ideals of simplicity and honesty. They must not be satisfied, however, with anything less than the highest possible grade of efficiency.

But the Board of Education are not dwelling upon the needs alone. They are also taking account of the resources. They take courage when they remember what was done the past five years; when they remember how devoted a people are our people, devoted to truth and progress and to our own church and her institutions as instruments of truth and progress; they take supremest courage when they remember that the educational work of Friends is God's work, blessed by Him abundantly in the past, and that it must prosper in the future if His will is done.

They know that there are two sides to this question. If our schools prosper, Friends must appreciate their work and their worth and must support them with sympathy and prayer and patronage and money. Friends must not allow their children to grow up in ignorance nor must they send them without sufficient cause to institutions under other management, private or state. On the other hand, the men and women who manage the schools must realize even more deeply than before, the responsibility placed upon them by the church. They must be consecrated to their tasks, they must be filled with the Spirit of God, they must be loyal to the best interests of the Kingdom at large and of our church as their special field of labor, they must work along constructive lines and demonstrate by the students sent forth into active life, that our educational institutions hold the key to the situation, so far as the expansion and power of Quakerism is concerned. If there can be this co-operation between the church and the school the cause we love will prosper and the things that were impossible will become actual.

Board on Condition and Welfare of Negroes

As we greet our new paper with joy as a symbol of greater strength and unity and understanding among Friends, we realize that the Society is advancing. In our pleasure of self-contemplation, however, we hear a sweet, concerned, inspiring voice saying again to us, "A certain man went down from Jerusalem to Jericho and fell among thieves. What will my friends do about it?" We turn from our self-satisfaction to realize that added ability means added efficiency for service.

We see the sisterhood of Yearly Meetings growing in strength and solidarity. We look at the sisterhood of races which our groups typify, and we see that among the growing and developing family of nations one little sister lags far behind. It is the dark-skinned one. While others have been pushing on, she has stayed in her own continent and has not gone to the school of world experience. She is still in the baby class—a case of arrested development.

When George Fox met them first his heart was moved with compassion. He opened meetings for them, arranged a burying ground and encouraged Friends to set their negroes at liberty after some years of service. From that day to this the care of the negroes has been a sacred trust of the Society of Friends.

At the Five Years Meeting Dr. Henry Hodgkin said that Friends had a genius in dealing with undeveloped races. Perhaps this is our reward for the years we have tried to serve them. It is certainly a gift to be used and a challenge.

The Board on the Condition and Welfare of the Negroes greets the new year, the new paper, and the stronger Society of Friends. May we still seek to help our backward sister!

I Will

I will start anew this morning with a higher, fairer creed;
I will cease to stand complaining of my ruthless neighbor's greed;

I will cease to sit repining while my duty's call is clear;
I will waste no moment whining and my heart shall know no fear.

I will look sometimes about me for the things that merit praise;

I will search for hidden beauties that elude the grumbler's gaze;

I will try to find contentment in the paths that I must tread;
I will cease to have resentment when another moves ahead.

I will not be swayed by envy when my rival's strength is shown;

I will not deny his merit, but I'll strive to prove my own;
I will try to see the beauty spread before me, rain or shine;

I will cease to preach your duty and be more concerned with mine.

Help to Pass the Interstate Liquor Shipment Bill

Congress adjourned for the Holiday recess with the Kenyon-McCumber bill pending before the Senate, our friends having presented their arguments on the 16th to 19th inclusive, but with one or two friends yet desiring to be heard, and probably several opponents of the legislation desiring to be heard in opposition.

To counteract the incessant, persistent work against the bill, we cannot too strongly urge our friends everywhere in the States to at once personally see their two Senators and their Representative in behalf of the bill, or to write, earnestly urging them not only to vote for the bill, but to cooperate with our leaders in the two houses supporting their efforts and tactics to bring about early consideration and vote.

This is vitally important, and readers are asked to get as many other influential citizens as possible to see their Senators and Representative or to write them.

The bill can be passed during this session if the friends in the State make their congressional delegations realize that they are in earnest in urging the passage of this bill at once. Act promptly, courteously but earnestly.

It will help us if those who receive replies will advise the undersigned concerning the attitude disclosed by Senators and Representatives.

The House bill is not yet reported from the committee, and the strongest pressure and hardest work will be necessary to overcome the efforts of the liquor forces to prevent a report. Impress upon your Representative the urgent necessity for his co-operating with our House leaders in securing an immediate report, as well as for his voting for the bill.

Charles Lescault, pastor of the Haviland (Kansas) Meeting, recently conducted a series of evangelistic meetings at Sterling, Kansas. Susie Allen is engaged in evangelistic work in the limits of Kansas Yearly Meeting.

Leannah Hobson, pastor of the Friends Meeting at Mount Airy, North Carolina, will resign her position in a few weeks and will sail for England the first of March to make a religious visit among Friends in that country and in Ireland.

The minutes and reports of Commissions of the recent Five Years Meeting, now being printed by the Nicholson Printing and Manufacturing Co., of Richmond, Ind., will be ready for distribution about the 20th of the present month. It will make a book of about 320 pages.

Prof. David W. Dennis, of Earlham College, who suffered a paralytic stroke a few weeks ago, spent the holiday vacation with his son at Washington City. Returning to Richmond, he left on January 13th with Mrs. Dennis for Phoenix, Arizona. He will not be able for work this term.

A fire broke out in the house of the Whittier Home Association, Amesbury, Mass., on Christmas Day, destroying one of the poet's pictures and a picture of his mother. Many manuscripts, which were under glass, were badly discolored by smoke, but the Whittier furniture in the house was saved.—C. E. World.

Carl Byrd, one of the Academy students at Haviland, Kansas, recently conducted a successful revival at Pleasant Plain Friends Church, Kansas, and is now conducting a series of meetings at Coldwater, Kansas. Cora Isham, a minister, and Maud Hodson, as singer, are engaged in evangelistic work at Cherokee, Oklahoma.

"The Deeper Life in our Friends Schools and Colleges" will be the subject of a meeting of the Friends Educational Association of Philadelphia, First month 25th, at 2:30 p.m., to be held at the Friends Select School. L. Hollingsworth Wood, George L. Jones and J. Henry Scattergood will give addresses, to be followed by discussion. All who are interested are invited.

Economy Monthly Meeting, in session First month 4th, desires to express its appreciation of the AMERICAN FRIEND under the old management, and it looks forward with hopefulness to the FRIEND, trusting that it will show the new birth of the church into a closer sympathy and a broader friendship.

On Sabbath morning, January 5th, at the Montgomery Street Friends Meeting, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., there was a public reception of members who recently united with Friends. After a sermon on "The Royal Priesthood of Believers," by the pastor, William J. Sayers, seven came forward and the pastor, after a few words on behalf of the meeting, gave the right hand of fellowship as did many of those present. Two others were unable to be present.

The Penn College Y. M. C. A. Gospel Team, under the leadership of Hubert G. Peckham, held an eight-day evangelistic campaign at Springdale, Iowa, the services closing Sunday evening, January 5th. The week was spent in personal work and visiting, with a public meeting every evening. The five young men returned to college leaving an influence for good in the vicinity which will be long felt. The practical side of Christian living was emphasized.

We have received word from Tecumseh, Michigan, under date of January 5th, announcing the death of Jacob Baker of Raisin Center, Michigan. He died at Whittier, California, and the body was returned to Michigan for burial, which took place on January 11th, at 11 o'clock. Jacob Baker has been widely known for many years by Friends throughout America as a prominent and active minister of Ohio Yearly Meeting. We hope to have further details later.

A special revival effort was entered upon by the membership of the Friends Meeting at Haviland, Kansas, on November 17th, under the leadership of the pastors, Charles and Lena Lescault, assisted by local workers. They had the country surrounding divided into districts, each district being under the leadership of some member of the evangelistic committee. Daily cottage prayer meetings were held in each district, all joining in the evangelistic services at the church in the evening. The spiritual life of the church and community was quickened and about fifty made definite profession of faith.

R. H. Pratt, for many years superintendent of the Indian School at Carlisle, Pa., on behalf of the Great Bethany Sunday School of Philadelphia, has issued an appeal for Friends to join with others in contributing to the material wants of the Jicarilla Apaches, whose reservation at Dulce, New Mexico, is described as being the scene of suffering, disease and starvation. The government aid is described as not being sufficient to meet even the barest want, and contributions of money and clothing are asked from the people generally. Any one desiring to aid in this matter can communicate with R. H. Pratt, Philadelphia, Pa.

A very successful series of meetings were held at Plainfield, Ind., during the holidays by a team of Y. M. C. A. workers from Earlham College. Several of the young people confessed Christ and pledged themselves to loyal service for the church. The work of the team was very satisfactory and their work was of such a nature that much good will yet come from their efforts. A Young People's Christian Association has been organized and a part of their work will be a study of Quaker history and doctrine. A reception was given the team by the Y. P. C. A. on the evening of December 20th at the home of the pastor, E. J. Carter, and a very pleasant social time was had in which the team formed acquaintance with the young people before the meetings began.

L. Oscar Moon, General Secretary of Baltimore Yearly Meeting, has been spending three weeks among the Southern Virginia Meetings. A week was spent at Bethel, where among other things a conference of about twenty of the Friends was held to talk over the work, when it was decided to organize a neighborhood club, partly literary and partly social. The Friends will be the leaders in this and thus it is hoped that they may be enabled to meet some of the existing needs. Another week was spent at Somerton, and a gathering of Young Friends was held at Corinth, when plans for interchange of visits amongst the four neighboring meetings were made. At the Monthly Meeting a committee was appointed to arrange for a series of meetings at Sedley. He spent December 22d at Darlington, where a meeting was held especially for men in the Odd Fellows' Hall, at night. On January 4th he sailed for England where he expects to spend about two months in studying conditions and methods of work among English Friends. He will be much missed in Baltimore, but Friends are hoping that the plans which have been made for interchange of visits by some of the younger Friends will materialize and prove of great blessing in the introduction of fresh workers into the field.

The Laymen's Missionary Movement, in which many Friends are deeply interested, is getting a substantial foothold in Eastern Indiana. On January 30th and 31st a convention in the interests of this movement will be held in the Reid Memorial Church, Richmond, Indiana, and an organization will be effected. This convention is not only for the citizens of Richmond, but for the adjoining counties in Eastern Indiana and Western Ohio. A number of Friends are prominent in arranging for this coming gathering. There should be a large attendance of Friends both in Richmond and surrounding territory at the sessions of these two days. An Executive Secretary representing the General Committee will be in attendance. It is proposed there to get every member of the church enlisted in the cause and support of missions in their own church, and in the hope of evangelizing the whole world in this generation.

On Sabbath morning, December fifteenth, A. Edward Kelsey, for three and one-half years the pastor of the Friends Meeting in Minneapolis, preached his farewell sermon, prior to returning to Ramallah, Palestine, where for a number of years before coming to Minneapolis he had superintended the educational missionary work of American Friends. He was married on the afternoon of the sixteenth to Marion E. Jones, who had been a teacher in the city schools for six years, and a prominent member of the Minneapolis Meeting. She spent last year teaching in the Mission at Ramallah to which they both return. During Edward Kelsey's pastorate in Minneapolis he has taken an active interest in civic affairs, has served the past two years as vice-president of the Ministers' Federation and has just resigned as president of the Congregational Ministers' meeting. During these three and one-half years there has been a substantial increase in numbers and interest in the meeting. The Bible School is in a flourishing condition. At his farewell service six young people were given the right hand of fellowship. It is with regret that his church bids him good-bye, but the interest of his many Minneapolis friends both within and outside his church will follow him and Marion Kelsey to their chosen field of labor.

With the Children

Do You Pray?

Little children, do you pray?
Do you thank the Lord each day
That he's kept you free from harm
By his strong and mighty arm?
For your home and parents dear,
For your friends both far and near?
For the blessings He doth give
That his children dear may live?
Do you ask him you to keep
When awake and when you sleep?
Child, the Lord is ever near,
Ev'ry little prayer to hear.

The Shine

"Well, grandma," said a little boy, resting his elbow on the old lady's stuffed chair-arm, "what have you been doing here at the window all day by yourself?"

"All I could," answered dear grandma, cheerily; "I have read a little, and prayed a good deal, and then looked out at the people. There's one little girl, Arthur, that I have learned to watch. She has sunny brown hair, her brown eyes have the same sunny look in them, and I wonder every day what makes her look so bright. Ah! here she comes now."

Arthur took his elbows off the stuffed arm and planted them on the window sill.

"That girl with the brown apron on?" he cried. "Why, I know that girl. That's Susie Moore, and she has a dreadful hard time, grandma."

"Has she?" said grandma. "Oh, little boy, wouldn't you give anything to know where she gets all that brightness from, then?"

"I'll ask her," said Arthur, promptly, and to grandma's surprise, he raised the window, and called:

"Susie, O Susie, come up here a minute; grandma wants to see you!"

The brown eyes opened wide in surprise, but the little maid turned at once and came in.

"Grandma wants to know, Susie Moore," explained the boy, "what makes you look so bright all the time?"

"Why, I have to," said Susie. "You see, papa's been ill a long while, and mamma is tired out with nursing, and the baby's cross with her teeth, and if I didn't be bright, who would be?"

"Yes, yes, I see," said dear old grandma, putting her arm around this little streak of sunshine. "That's God's reason for shining then, because it is dark at home. Shine on, little sun; there couldn't be a better reason for shining than because it is dark at home."—Unidentified.

Be an "Is-er"

A certain shopkeeper is reported to have placed this sign over his door where it might be read by all passers-by: "We are not a 'Has-Been,' or a 'Once-Was,' or a Going-to-Be,' but we are an 'Is-er.'"

Many people stopped, read, and puzzled over that strange sign, but it was just another way of expressing a phrase often used in business, such as "We are up to date in our line." This tradesman meant to say that he was not attempting to do business on past reputation or future promises, but that he was "right there with the goods all the time;" that he made it his business to keep the best of what his customers wanted. In other words, he was "on the job."

Are you an "Is-er"? Are you in the habit of doing the duty in hand at the proper time and in such a way as to meet with the approval of your own conscience or of others who may be concerned in your affairs?

Then, too, what about those Church and Sunday School duties? Are you an "Is-er" there, too? Are you on time in your place every Sunday, or at such time as your Christian obligations call you? Can you always be depended upon when others are failing? The world and the Church alike need a great company of "Is-ers"—and beside, it is the "Is-er" who succeeds when the "Has-Beens" and the "Going-to-Bes" are making miserable failures all around us. Be an "Is-er."—Onward.

A Child's Prayer

Dear Father, who sees if a sparrow doth fall,
Who counts the bright stars that shine over us all,
As we ask Thee each day for our clothing and food,
We ask Thee still more for the help to be good.

DREADED TO EAT

A Quaker Couple's Experience

How many people dread to eat their meals, although actually hungry nearly all the time!

Nature never intended this should be so, for we are given a thing called appetite that should guide us as to what the system needs at any time and can digest.

But we get in a hurry, swallow our food very much as we shovel coal into the furnace, and our sense of appetite becomes unnatural and perverted. Then we eat the wrong kind of food or eat too much, and there you are—indigestion and its accompanying miseries.

A Phila. lady said:

My husband and I have been sick and nervous for 15 or 20 years from drinking coffee—feverish, indigestion, totally unfit, a good part of the time, for work or pleasure. We actually dreaded to eat our meals. (Tea is just as injurious, because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.)

"We tried doctors and patent medicines that counted up into hundreds of dollars, with little if any benefit.

"Accidentally, a small package of Postum came into my hands. I made some according to directions, with surprising results. We both liked it and have not used any coffee since.

"The dull feeling after meals has left us and we feel better every way. We are so well satisfied with Postum that we recommend it to our friends who have been made sick and nervous and miserable by coffee." Name given upon request. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Postum now comes in concentrated, powder form, called Instant Postum. It is prepared by stirring a level teaspoonful in a cup of hot water, adding sugar to taste, and enough cream to bring the color to golden brown.

Instant Postum is convenient; there's no waste; and the flavour is always uniform. Sold by grocers—50-cup tin 30 cts., 100-cup tin 50 cts.

A 5-cup trial tin mailed for grocer's name and 2-cent stamp for postage. Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

THE FOOTPATH TO PEACE

TO BE glad of life because it gives you the chance to live, and to work, and to play, and to look up at the stars; To be satisfied with your possessions, but not contented with yourself until you have made the best of them; To despise nothing in the world except meanness and falsehood and to fear nothing except cowardice. To be governed by your admirations rather than by your disgusts; To covet nothing that is your neighbor's except his kindness of heart and gentleness of manner; To think seldom of your enemies, often of your friends and every day of Christ, and to spend as much time as you can in God's Out of Doors,—these are little guide-posts on the Footpath to Peace.

Editorial Comment Upon Current Topics of the Day

The decennial convention of the "Religious Education Association" will meet in Cleveland, March 10-13 next. The invitation to Cleveland was extended by the federated churches of the city, supplemented by the business associations. The general topic of consideration this year will be the connection between religious education and civic progress. It is a live question of vital interest both to religion and to government, and it is to be hoped that something of practical suggestions will be formulated that will result in civic uplift everywhere.

The new Parcels Post system has developed a nation-wide patronage of large proportions with surprising rapidity. Certain details will have to be remedied, especially the one which forbids the use of the mail postage stamp. To what extent the express companies will endeavor to retaliate by attempts at sharp competition is problematic. Meanwhile the government has rendered a valuable public service. Express rates have been too exorbitant, and the public has been systematically robbed. It is at least a satisfaction to know that no one henceforth need be robbed except he chooses to be.

The annual report of the Young Men's Christian Association shows that there are 2,192 local associations in North America with a membership of 556,100. The budget of these associations for current expenses is $10,000,000 a year. They own 725 buildings valued at $81,000,000, which is nearly three times the total of ten years ago. The total attendance at the religious meetings of these associations for the past year was 5,820,000. One hundred and twenty-five thousand men and boys have been enrolled in bible classes, while the enrollment in educational classes has reached 69,000. One of the remarkable developments of the past year is the increased interest in associations for colored people. Truly the Y. M. C. A. is rapidly becoming one of the most active of the religious forces of this day.

A bill is to be introduced into the next Connecticut Legislature, requiring railroads to provide two competent engineers upon all express trains within the state. Whether this provision if enacted into law, would actually reduce the number of accidents may not be determined definitely in the absence of a trial, but it is a step in the direction of safeguarding the interests and life of the public. And that which will reduce the danger to human life will reduce in equal degree the liability of financial loss to the railroad. Both the public and the railroads should join in a determined effort to reduce fatalities on the rail. The fact that during the year ending June 20th last, more than 10,000 persons were killed and more than 180,000 were injured on the railroads, calls for the adoption of some drastic relief measures.

The New York World refers to recent developments in that city as "the general triangle of politics, vice and police." There is more of truth than poetry in the characterization. The whole country will look with unusual interest upon the efforts of the district attorney and other authorities to establish again the reign of law in that great municipality. The New York Press remarks that "it may be impossible to suppress the vice which pays police blackmail, but it is possible to exterminate the blackmail." The remark of the Brooklyn Eagle is gratifying that "the outlook for good government and good morals has seldom been better than in the wake of recent revelations as to actual conditions." In trying to rid herself of graft and vice, our greatest metropolis is trying a most important experiment.

The recent Japanese cabinet crisis, caused by the downfall of the war party, would indicate that Japan is getting weary of the war game. The people seem to rebel at the proposed huge war toll in time of peace, and refused to approve retrenchment in other departments. The result is that Prince Katsura, said to be the ablest man in Japan, has come to the front as premier, and the inauguration of a peace policy has been entered upon. The Prince is quoted as expressing feelings of friendliness toward the United States, and also of desiring to assist China. This latter fact is one of the significant events of recent weeks, and marks an epoch in the relationship of these two erstwhile enemies of the far East. The community of interest among nations is getting to be contagious, and with the growth of foreign missions, carrying civilizing and Christianizing influences to the ends of the earth, we are making rapid progress toward the recognition of the brotherhood of all men and the common fatherhood of God.

Congress is trying to find the answer to the question, "Is there a money trust?" J. P. Morgan, the king of finance, has been before the committee of investigation, and while he talked in terms of billions, he is sure there is no trust in money and cannot be. Probably his definition of what constitutes a trust will have to be investigated. It has already been made clear however that money is attracted to the New York banks from the cities and towns of the west for speculative purposes. This quite naturally creates a shortage in money, and results oftentimes in depression in business. Whatever quibbling may be done over terms, the fact remains that Wall Street has it within its power to create a panic at almost any time. So long as that is true the country is unsafe, and if the House of Representatives succeeds in finding a remedy for this evil, it will merit the commendation of all the people.

The call of the "National Child Labor Committee," that churches and schools observe the three days of January 25-27, as Child Labor Days, has received the endorsement of the Federal Council of Churches. The President of the Council, Shailer Mathews, has sent a letter of approval to one hundred state and city federations. The National Committee having the observance in charge, having headquarters at 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York City, will send a pamphlet of facts about Child Labor to all ministers and principals of schools upon application. This will include the latest census figures on the subject. It is pointed out that the 1,752,157 workers between the ages of ten and fifteen, do not include the thousands of newsboys and boot-blacks, many of whom are out of school, nor thousands of others engaged in tenement house manufacturing. It is expected that in each of the forty-three states having legislative sessions this winter, bills bearing on the Child Labor problem will be introduced. The fact should not be overlooked that in a surprisingly large number of instances, the liquor traffic is a primary cause of this enforced labor among children.

Being Strong for the Lord's Work

"Finally, my brethren, be strong in the Lord."

This exhortation is God's call for enlistment in a holy warfare against sin. It is the rallying cry for the devotees of a religious crusade. It is the guarantee of conquest to the faithful who equip themselves for valorous deeds in the name of Jehovah.

God's message of cheer is the beacon light of discipleship in all ages. There are no impossibilities in God's economy. An all-conquering Christ means an all-conquering church. The promise is ever to him that overcometh.

Oh, the pity of a church that is feeding on milk, when it should be eating meat; that is concerned with the commonplace, when it should be girding its loins for a crusade; that is barely keeping alive the spark of truth, when it should be a flaming fire to warm the hearts of the multitude! God needs a militant church and a virile workmanship with which to accomplish his purposes.

The church is a brotherhood, but it is something more. Possessed of dynamic power, it should prove by its practice that the gospel it preaches is indeed "the power of God unto salvation," not only in saving individuals from sin, but in purifying their social environment, so that the power of evil no longer has dominion over them.

To be strong is to be possessed of power, and that is the heritage of true discipleship. Power is an attribute of character, and doubly so of Christian character. That life is strong, able to do exploits for the Master, that has learned the secret of being engrafted into the Divine Life. "I am full of power by the Spirit of the Lord." "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you."

But power comes quite as much by the exercise of gifts as by the energy of the Spirit. The church is impotent oftentimes because it is inactive, or because its labors are misdirected. Individual effort is fruitless because it lacks the vision of a great purpose.

Given a personality that really sees what is to be done, and that possesses the ambition to do it well, such an one will ever command a place of leadership among men. Given a church, baptized by the Spirit, that is conscious of its holy mission, and the community will never fail to feel the uplift of its example. Given a denomination, spirit-filled and full of faith and good works, and the horizon of its influence will widen with the passing of the years, men will see the light and be attracted to it, and evil will wither by the power of its devotion.

The Work of our Church Boards

During the four weeks ending with this issue, each of the nine Boards of the Five Years Meeting has delivered a message to the church at large, through the columns of the AMERICAN FRIEND. Each month during the year these messages will be continued, and will be a feature that should command the earnest attention of our readers.

It is possible that Friends generally have not yet caught the spirit and meaning of these organized activities. It is just as possible that some of the Boards themselves do not yet fully understand the entire scope of their mission. Organism that is effective is more often evolutionary than otherwise, and some of these instrumentalities of the church will find their work developing in unexpected directions and with surprising clearness, when once they have set themselves faithfully to their respective tasks.

That there is work for all is already self-evident. Each occupies a field distinctly its own, and together they cover the entire sphere of denominational endeavors. Each Board should consider itself the complement of every other Board, and their efforts should be co-ordinated for the common purpose of building up and enlarging our denominational life, to the end that God's Kingdom may be advanced within the circle of our influence. Much of energy will be conserved, and duplication avoided if there can be a mutual understanding of plans and methods of operation. While the entity of each Board is distinct, all are parts of a denominational mechanism that must move in harmony, or else the product will be discord and ultimate disunion.

This division of labor in machinery ought to find its counterpart in a corresponding division of labor among the entire membership, or as we have defined it before, in the manifestation of team work in every meeting throughout the Society. When the plans of all the Boards have been established, it ought to be easier for every unit of our membership to find a congenial way in which to exercise each individual gift.

A weakness of our denominational plan hitherto has been that so many of our members have felt that there was really nothing to do that was worth while. Our polity called for voluntary service, but too often each individual was left to find his toil alone. The church which was to feed the flock, too often gave little concern to any particular tasks; too often gave little heed to bringing the work and the worker together.

Let us hope that with better organization, our entire denomination will soon become a busy workshop, wherein each member will be a worker, and each worker will find added strength in the co-ordination of the efforts of all.

We have a conviction that is profound that God is calling our beloved Society of Friends into a larger place and into a larger life. We have a history of good deeds and a mighty faith that has been an inspiration to multitudes. Our simple life of devotion and consecration has been woven into the life of the Nation. Our testimony upon vital matters of religion and human practice has quickened the public conscience in many States and in many communities. But are we not to have a still wider outlook, a larger place in God's great workhouse? If not, then what means this awakening of spiritual and denominational life among our young people? What meant that wonderful vision that came to the recent Five Years Meeting? What is the interpretation of the renewal of hope that is spreading east and west, north and south? What means the unifying tenderness that is enveloping both that which is modern and that which is traditional in our scattered membership?

As a religious body we have been led graciously through many varied experiences and even crises. God has dealt bountifully with us even when the future seemed dark and foreboding. Now that the dawn is rosy with greater promise, has come the opportunity for which so many have been praying and toiling. The call of our Boards to service should meet with a glad response everywhere. Each Board should have the hearty co-operation of the corresponding committee in all our Yearly Meetings.

We are well aware that organization is not everything. Form without spirit is dead. Men must first have the consciousness of victory in their souls before they can triumph over their environment. It is just as true that when instrumentalities are faithless, God by his Spirit will continue to find his way to men's lives. But the ideal is a live, spirit-filled church, organized, well equipped and fit for the Master's use.

Our plea is that the work of our Boards be planned with definite purpose in view, and that our membership in its entirety rally to their support, loyally, prayerfully, and with a determination to make the coming months and years the most fruitful period of Friends' history in America.

The Growth of Missions

"The Missionary Review of the World" for January contains some statistics of unique value, that have been compiled with great care and at considerable expense. They are probably the most complete and up-to-date tables in existence, and the Review has rendered a valuable service to the cause of world-wide missions in this presentation. It is encouraging to know that in the United States alone, the income of foreign missionary societies reveals an increase during the past year of more than $3,000,000. For the entire world, the home income has increased from $25,297,074 in 1911 to $30,404,401 in 1912, while the income from the fields has grown from $5,519,174 to $7,902,256 in the same period.

The number of Protestant missionaries has increased from 22,058 to 24,092, comparisons being made in all instances between 1911 and 1912. The number of native workers has grown from 88,309 to 111,982, while the number of communicants is now 2,644,170 as against 2,304,318 in 1911. Total adherents, including members, has grown from 4,875,454 to 6,055,425.

While this healthful increase may be due in part to the more accurate gathering of statistics, in all probability the present situation is the natural result of more active missionary endeavors the world over.

People stand in line to get seats for a lecture, or entertainment, or the theater. It is cause for reflection that such demonstration is seldom witnessed at the doors of our meeting houses. One is spectacular, the other is not. There's the difference. But nevertheless the gospel is for the multitude. "And I, if I be lifted up, will draw all men unto me."

Nothing else can take the place of individual responsibility in worship. One man cannot commune for another. Contact with the Infinite cannot be had by proxy. The sermon, the vocal prayers, the testimonies may help and be edifying, but in the last analysis, each member of the congregation will be benefited to the extent that he has had individual communion with the Father.

The Five Years Meeting as Interpreted by Some Leading Friends

BY SOME OF THE YOUNGER FRIENDS

STATEMENT BY FRANCIS A. WRIGHT, JR.

As a young "Friend," still in my twenties, I am glad to give a few of the impressions which I received at the late Five Years Meeting. While I had hoped and prayed that the church would take definite steps to promote the organization of our denomination along national lines, I had hardly dared to even hope for such splendid and important steps as were taken at Indianapolis in October, 1912.

The "spirit of the meeting" was to me a veritable vision and eye-opener. I have attended several sessions of my own Yearly Meeting and one of another, but I have never before been in any gathering of Friends where such a spirit of optimism and determination for progress was so apparent.

The meeting covered so much ground and adopted so many important recommendations that it will be quite a difficult task to determine the most pressing needs of the church just at this time. It seems to me that a very important matter just now is to outline the particular steps to be taken if possible during the five years before us. These should be clearly and specifically brought to the notice of the church at an early date, or else through lack of a definite program the work of the church will fail to measure up to the standard set.

Without forgetting the many convincing facts brought out to show the need of definite work through the Five Years Meeting along many lines of church activities, it is quite apparent that our church with its limited financial and numerical strength cannot successfully undertake many advance steps at one time. What we must do is to settle upon one or two steps and then get behind them and make them outstanding successes. May I suggest those which appear to me most important, and which have already received serious consideration.

1. Efficiency of the Five Years Meeting through the work of the Executive Committee and a General Secretary. This committee upon choosing a General Secretary should set about to arrange a program of work not only for the General Secretary, but for each Yearly Meeting and each individual meeting in America, in its relation to the Five Year's Meeting and the work of the church at large. Each department of church work should be included in this program.

2. The development of a church periodical and of church literature is also a step that must be taken by the church as a whole. We see already tangible evidence that this is to be accomplished at this time, and will only need a determined continuance and enlargement of the interest so far manifested to assure success along this line.

3. The work of church extension through the efforts of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board is of tremendous importance. One of our sister denominations began about twenty years ago with a fund of less than $10,000.00 and today has an extension fund of over $1,000,000.00 which is used to loan on first mortgages at low rate of interest to assist churches in erecting houses of worship. Should not our church adopt a definite plan and solicit from members all over the country assistance in the form of contributions and bequests to such an extension fund?

In conclusion, I am glad to say that my heart is full of hope for our church and I trust that God may so direct its work that in another five years it can be said that the young people of our church are not going into other churches or organizations to find opportunities for Christian service, but that they are seeking and finding such places right within our limits.

Kansas City, Mo., January 9, 1913.

STATEMENT BY LILLIAN E. HAYES.

The past few years have been spent in interdenominational work among young people in different parts of the United States. I have met with many who have never heard of the Society of Friends; others associated the plain language and plain dress with all bearing that name, believing that to be our religion, while still others thought ours a negative doctrine only.

What a pleasure it was, and what peace of mind and heart was mine as I sat in the recent Five Years Meeting! So scattered over this country, yet what fellowship!

Not being a delegate, I had a place of advantage, and could observe the meeting as a whole. My first impression was that of the many separated groups, representing so many sections of our country. There was California and New York, North Carolina and Iowa, England and Ireland; but it was not long until that thought faded away and instead of the several placards bearing the names of the different delegations, I seemed to see, above all, the inscription, "That all may be one." And the closing service adopted and used by the Christian Endeavorers, said itself in my heart—

"In Christ there is no East nor West,
And yet no South nor North,
But one great fellowship of love,
Throughout the whole wide earth."

The young people were there, so eager to work, ready to receive, with not a desire on the part of any one to take full charge of affairs, but with a spirit to learn, longing to have a part in giving out the Friends Message to the world.

At first there was a marked difference between the Young Friends of the East and the Young Friends of the West; but at the young people's meeting on Sabbath afternoon the "Service" of the West and "Fellowship" of the East were happily combined, and we keenly felt that one was the complement of the other. There in one fellowship of faith, loyal to the church and to each other, we felt quite ready for real service.

With the new departments, embracing every activity of Christian service, backed up by well organized boards; with the splendid enlistment of young people, the Friends Church has before her a great future.

There was no thought of giving up old custom, but a desire on the part of every one to meet the present needs.

The ready response to the call for service, the eagerness to step within the open doors of opportunity, the larger interest manifest in the different departments of church activities, were evidences that Friends had a vision, and with it an added responsibility of giving out the message to the world.

How glad I am to have a part in this great work, not only in the building up of the Friends Church, but in the establishment of His kingdom in the hearts of those who know Him not.

The organization is complete, but just how much will be accomplished in the next five years, will depend entirely upon the doing.

We asked for work to do. Here it is. Let us set our hands and hearts in accord with His will and work out the successes for which we pray, "till we all come in the unity of faith, and of the knowledge of the Son of God, unto a perfect man, unto the measure of the stature of the fullness of Christ."

Dunreith, Indiana.

STATEMENT BY HARRY R. HOLE.

Certainly the formation of the Five Years Meeting was providential. The severe strain to which the church in all its branches is being subjected from every side at the present time would bear grave danger to the isolated or local bodies, if they were unprepared for co-operation with those of like faith working under different conditions. That it should require a quarter of a century for us to begin to find ourselves is remarkable, but the sturdiness that has at the same time compelled such deliberateness and which has persisted through all discouragements, augurs well for the inherent strength and vitality of the developing union.

To give autocratic power to a representative body would be subversive of the Quaker ideal of government; but to attempt to hold a Five Years Meeting without definite representation would be subversive of its purpose. In spite of the suspicion that the appointment of delegates is influenced more or less by the idea of rotation and other secondary considerations, the meeting still reflects all the dominant traits and types of the bodies which compose it. It is this fact, strange as it might appear, that makes for unity. All of us have our hobbies, and all of us have our aversions, depending upon personality, environment and experience. Because many of us, when we hit the nail on the head, hit it so hard as to split the plank, we need such a deterrent as we find in coming into personal contact with the other side in a body like this, where the underlying foundation is the same. The genuine unity which is found in entering into a close and sympathetic acquaintance with both sides in so important a difference as has been manifested over declarations of faith, is an astounding revelation. It should be understood that the decision in this case at the recent gathering was not a compromise; it was an agreement. It meant not the victory of one faction over another, but the triumph of the truth as held by Friends, in the interest of the entire body, and the correction of eccentricities that would tend to turn us either to the right hand or the left.

The 1912 meeting demonstrated beyond a question that American Friends are determined upon unity and work. We will not emulate the example of the storied Scotchman who, having found it impossible to remain in any of the several churches, at last performed his worship in his own house, but, not being able to see things just as his wife did, worshiped in one corner while she engaged in her devotions in another. We value the universal principles of life, salvation and service more than the angle from which we view them or the exact words in which we express them. The hearty good-will with which all parties among us have accepted the conclusion makes one loath even to refer to the very threatening aspect which preceded it.

Under conditions as they existed prior to the meeting it is not to be wondered at that many Friends "back home" should be saying "now or never." Doubtless many of us had said or felt like saying the same thing at various times in our own experience. The publishers of our leading denominational paper said "now or never," in offering it to the church. It would have been a calamity to have left our renewed spirit of unity in the domain of the theoretical, to have failed in bringing it to bear upon our publishing interests, or to have refused to follow the splendid work of the Foreign Mission Board with like thoroughness and system in other departments. The meeting had a keen realization of the critical character of its decisions, and with the finest kind of spirit it arose to meet the situation.

Lynn, Massachusetts.

STATEMENT BY L. HOLLINGSWORTH WOOD.

The Five Years Meeting of 1912 meant to me an opportunity to look the Society of Friends in the face.

This was literally true in my case, for from my "page's" seat I did actually look into the faces of the Friends who made up the assembly, but it is in the broader sense of opportunity to see the Society as it is when trying to express itself in concerted action, that I have used this expression.

The meetings started with groups well defined geographically and otherwise, and with the inevitable lack of confidence in each other which must always result from lack of knowledge of the individuals which compose the different groups. The meetings ended with what seemed to me was an appreciation of each others' viewpoint and a confidence begotten of the strong bond of mutual forbearance and earnest striving to gain an ultimate acquaintanceship, which could look at differences of viewpoint in the calm spirit of a mutual understanding.

The Five Years Meeting expressed in its brief course almost in miniature the life and growth and ambitions of the whole body of Friends in America. We saw the conservatism which expressed itself in the plain coat, and the love of music which found expression in the tasteful pipe organ of the auditorium in which we were met. We felt the enthusiasm for Foreign Missions and were thrilled by the call to Social Service in our own communities. In the reports of the Commissions we heard or saw the work of our members, and through it all we were conscious of the new life which has given rise to the term, "Young Friends Movement."

To me the great lesson of the Five Years Meeting was that in all our works and aims we are seeking the same goal, and in our growing knowledge of each other and our growing confidence in the honesty and earnestness of purpose of each one, whether old or young, we have recognized and been responsive to the magic touch of our Master's spirit, which, sweeping over us, has drawn out, feebly at first, but later in fuller measure the heavenly melody of love.

With this glorious message of love ringing in our ears we separated, with the injunction of the meeting laid upon the delegates to carry back the messages of the sessions to their yearly meetings, and to continue their organization to represent and foster the united interests of the Society.

The future of Friends looks bright as we stand upon the great achievements of this Five Years Meeting;—I mean our demonstrated power to love each other even under difficulties in the service of our Master. We have strengthened our faith in one another and in the Society of Friends. Our hopes are brighter and more steadfast, and we have learned as never before how faithless and hopeless and useless it all is without love which is greatest of all.

Mt. Kisco, N. Y.

STATEMENT BY MURRAY S. BARKER.

The 1912 Five Years Meeting was the first one I had attended. I therefore did not know what to look forward to or expect. In fact, to be perfectly candid, I did not expect very much that would be worth while. To be sure, I had the reports and recommendations of the Commissions, but for various reasons my faith had not risen to the sticking point.

But of one thing I am sure, I went there with an open mind, without any previously arranged plans, and with no pet subjects to advocate or to oppose. Perhaps my first impression was that I had underestimated its importance and its capacity to do things, for I found a body of serious-minded men and women really anxious to do something for the upbuilding of the Quaker Church in America.

But the most lasting impression and the one that endures, is the fact that the Quaker Church in its official capacity has started somewhere. It has determined to do something that is worth doing. The things it has set out to do are large and the tasks difficult, but these are the very reasons why the outlook is so full of promise, for the difficult things are the only ones worth doing. Too long have we hunted the easy jobs. The road of little resistance is the road that develops weaklings. Too often have we dissipated our inheritance. We have been busy "here and there" instead of building for something definite and permanent. Just as our own boys have a right to demand of us that they be so raised, that the men which they should be, may, when that time arrives, be possible, so our church of the coming generations has a right to demand of us that we so live and act, that the church which should be, may be. This meeting has undertaken large and difficult matters, and it is going boldly at them with a faith of the kind that overcomes. We are going at it unitedly—united not alone in the sense that we are not quarreling with our neighbors about certain fine shades of belief—mere personal equations—that after all are of little consequence; united in purpose though separated by long distances, but united also in ages. It is the whole church—old and young—setting out on the job together. This again looks splendid. Heretofore we have too much divided our work. We have had our young people's activities more or less sanctioned or tolerated, and the regular church work, to be done by the old people. Now we are going forth together, old and young, on the same committees with the same interests and the same responsibilities. One of the best ways to make a man out of a restless youth is to give him responsibilities along with his father rather than away from him.

Another thing that I noticed was the disposition to enlist the whole church, the laity, if there be such in our denomination, along with the ministry. With our pastoral system has come the tendency to have our church work "over-preached." This is not the fault of the preacher but of the system. We have too much expected the pastor to do it all until almost all the preaching and praying and thinking and working of the church has been by the ministry, whereas the general membership should at least keep the machinery from getting rusty.

It may be that people of a past generation found in the church primarily a spiritual home and little more, but the need of that as such has passed, and the church of the future must be an organized movement to work effectively for the betterment of human society.

Our church has seen the vision. It is organizing and equipping itself for large things, its only danger being that the very machinery itself may become too big and unwieldy, but if the church, especially the younger generation, responds to the present plan and to its opportunities as I believe it will, and puts into it a little of the energy and vigor that its members do in their personal business, the things planned and started by this Five Years Meeting are full of promise.

Thorntown, Indiana.

STATEMENT BY LEVI T. PENNINGTON.

The first issue of the AMERICAN FRIEND under the Five Years Meeting management is due today. To me it seems that it marks the passing of a notable milestone in the history of Friends.

As we get farther from the time of the Five Years Meeting, the conviction formed there keeps deepening, that this gathering gave to Quakerism such an opportunity as it has not had before for many years and could not have had without this great conference. Two elements were among us, threatening to tear us into pieces. On the one hand were those whose liberality was making many feel that we were to be left without a definite, adequate statement of belief on which we could stand in our efforts to evangelize the world by our presentation of the truth committed to us. On the other hand were those who desired an iron-bound creed, and who saw no reason why we should not have it. It seems to me that a Father who loves us all and who is wise beyond our knowing has wrought for us better than any of us had wisdom to plan, in giving us a clear statement of a living faith without the rigors of a binding and deadening creed. That the Five Years Meeting stands officially on the grounds of a living, evangelical faith there can be no doubt whatever, as there has never been a doubt that the great majority of our members occupy that ground. That there is danger of the Five Years Meeting heresy-hunting, on the other hand, it seems to me there is no room to believe.

The old adage has often occurred to me in connection with this session of the Five Years Meeting, "Be sure you're right, then go ahead." There can no longer be any doubt that officially we are right in doctrine. Now the thing to do is to go ahead.

The Five Years Meeting has made this possible for us as a church, as it has not been possible heretofore. We have lacked in the past a strong centralizing force, a sense of organic unity. That centralization has its dangers is beyond question, but that it has become wise for us to give up some of our independence in view of our interdependence, it seems to me, is clear.

We have lacked as a church in time past the tools, the machinery with which to do our work. We have them now, and it remains for us to take the tools and work with them; to turn on the steam, set the machinery going in the power of God, and with the raw material furnished to our hand at home and abroad, turn out the sort of products that shall please the great Master Workman. Our boards and committees, our AMERICAN FRIEND under the control of the Five Years Meeting, the Executive Committee, and the General Secretary, with these and the other means of advancement put into our hands, we shall be able to do, under God's blessing, great things for the advancement of the truths that have been committed to us.

But none of these things will make the Friends Church a success, nor will all of them combined. There are many things that may still make us a failure as a church, that may cause our candlestick to be removed out of its place. If we persist in distrusting each other, we shall fail. If we spend our time in seeking to find and to emphasize differences, we shall fail. If we "contend about words to no profit," we shall fail. If we neglect to go "forward" as we have been commended, we shall fail, and we shall deserve to fail.

It is my hope—God grant that it may not be disappointed—that we shall go forward in His name, using the things that He has put into our hands for the advancement of His kingdom, with I. John 1:7 as our experience and our message to the world, "If we walk in the light as He is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ, His Son, cleanseth us from all sin."

I am full of hope for the future, born of confidence in God, in Quakerism and in Friends.

FROM THE BOARDS OF THE CHURCH

The Peace Association of Friends in America

I. THE OUTLOOK.

Some important phases of the situation in regard to peace and international arbitration demand the careful attention of every Friend as we enter upon the work of a new five-year period. These may be named in order as follows:

1. The General Situation—The progress of the reform is, in general, such as to justify a feeling of satisfaction and encouragement; it is to be noted, however, that the encouraging features of the progress of the cause were emphasized to such an extent within the few years just preceding the war between Italy and Turkey, that some of the real obstacles which the friends of Peace should understand, have been to an undue degree lost sight of. With full recognition of the fact that there are some discouraging and depressing phases of the situation to be disclosed, we should without hesitation face them all fully and fairly.

2. Some of the Difficulties—(a) International. The fact that a war such as that between Italy and Turkey could be waged without any official protest from any of the powers that have participated in The Hague Conferences, is an indication not to be disregarded that the strength of international sentiment against war is yet far from having the strength which it must possess before the "Federation of the World" is fully realized.

(b) National. Laws such as the "Defence Act" in Australia, and continuous efforts in our own country to introduce regular rifle practice into the public schools is proof that there is a group of men in each of these countries whose power is far greater than it was supposed to be some years ago.

(c) In our Local Neighborhoods. Only a few weeks ago in conversation with a young man of about twenty-three years of age, a member among Friends, in regard to the hard experiences which some young Friends in Australia are being called upon to undergo if they remain true to their conviction that participation in preparations for war is wrong, this young Friend in America said, "I could never see anything wrong in military drill; I think it is rather nice." I appeal to the experience of every Friend who reads these lines to answer for himself this question, "Do the young Friends whom I know, believe so strongly that war service and war preparations are wrong that they would suffer loss of property, liberty or life rather than take part in such activities?"

II. OUR APPEAL AND OUR PLANS.

We feel that this is a critical time in the history of the peace movement. A group of 90,000 Christian people, united on the right side of this great question might be able to wield an influence which would be decisive for good within the next five years. No plans which the Peace Association may make can bring about any good results unless the individual meetings of Friends and the individual members of the meetings join heartily in carrying out plans that may be agreed upon.

We plan a campaign of literature—facts and arguments—through the columns of the AMERICAN FRIEND, and possibly by other publications. We plan to co-operate with the Peace Committee in each Yearly Meeting and with other organizations as far as practicable, whose object is to promote the cause of Peace. We plan to get every man, woman, and child among Friends in America to think regularly about the peace reform, and to take some positive action on some phase of the question. We plan to reach in the same way also as many as possible who are not members among Friends. If we can have the united support of Friends in this work, there can be no doubt that the results will be far bigger and better than anything we can now hope or foresee.

For the Peace Association of Friends in America.

ALLEN D. HOLE, President.

Board on Legislation and Temperance

This department is planning for some constructive temperance work in the near future, which we trust will be of vital interest to all Friends. While our denomination has from the earliest days of this reform taken a strong stand against the drink traffic, as a body we have done little except in the distribution of literature and in the holding of occasional temperance meetings.

Probably no one will question the fact that in harmony with our faith and practice, Friends ought to be at the very fore-front of this reform, not only giving our testimony in behalf of total abstinence and prohibition, but devising ways and means by which our membership as a whole may make itself felt in no uncertain way.

In this day of enlightenment, we believe that no religious body can afford to rest satisfied until every individual unit of the membership is being utilized as a positive force toward the elimination of this great National evil. It is not enough that we practice total abstinence ourselves. We ought both by our example and by our activities to do all within our power to help establish the same practice among others.

The Board is giving some attention to other subjects of legislation. Copies of the Indiana law forbidding the use of any denominational name as a distinguishing trademark have been sent to each member of the Board with the request that a similar measure be introduced in the legislature of every State outside of Indiana, which has a legislative session this year.

The Board wishes to emphasize the importance at this time of all Friends and all Friends' meetings raising their voice in favor of the passage of the Kenyon-Sheppard interstate liquor shipment measure, now pending in Congress. The Senate has agreed to vote on the bill February 10. Let our members write their two Senators at once, urging their support of the measure. Individual meetings might with propriety adopt resolutions in behalf of the bill, to be forwarded to their Senators. Let the same procedure be followed in the case of the House member from the district where Friends reside. Now is the time to do work that will count.

Richmond, Indiana. S. E. NICHOLSON, Chairman.

A Chance Kindness

In October, 1912, Chuzo Kaifu went up to Shimodate, a town of about 8,000 in Ibarakiken, about 80 miles from Tokyo, for special meetings. After a time of great refreshing together he went to the station to return to Tokyo. To get his train he was obliged to go up one flight of steps across the track and down again. T. Mishima was with him. On their way up they overtook a man who had such a large bundle that he had blocked the passage. T. Mishima seeing the man in difficulty, said, "Do you wish to make this train? I will help you." He took hold and helped him with the load until it was safe in the train. The man turned to T. Mishima and said, "I have traveled much for years, but I have never before received such a kindness at the hands of anybody. What made you do it?" Mr. Mishima replied, "It is my business to help others; I am a Christian." "Then Christians are different from other people." Saying this he drew out his card and T. Mishima learned that he was none other than the famed Jukichi Harada, a name known in every household since the war with China in 1894 and 1895. He and C. Kaifu rode together to Tokyo and all the way they talked about Christianity. What the end will be we know not, but we do know that from that day he has been a sincere inquirer.

GURNEY BINFORD.

The Narrative of a Mexican Convert

[The following narrative has been prepared by Raymond S. Holding, of Matehuala, Mexico, and is presented by the Friends Missionary Board for publication.—THE EDITOR.]

DON FELIPE GLORIA

In Catorce the first workers suffered more pronounced opposition and persecution than in some other places. Catorce is famous as a Roman Church stronghold. Perhaps if we let Don Felipe Gloria tell in his own words of his own conversion, and of some of his experiences, it will greatly help the reader to understand the relation of the early converts to the fanatical Catholic Church, and the genuine test through which every one must pass.

Don Felipe is an elderly man, now over sixty years old. He is patient, forbearing and quite unassuming in his way of doing things. Telling this experience, he says: "About the year 1896 I was employed by the Mexican Government where I was serving as guard. After having lived all my past life with little or no thought at all as to the great hereafter, I became conscious of the fact that my life was completely undone and that I had lived very disorderly. I said with many other men just like me at that time, that I was an Apostolic Roman Catholic, though I was greatly dissatisfied with my religious life and began to feel that I would have to take some definite measures in order that I might free myself from so many doubts, so I began to buy such books as would give me light on the subject. As I read the prayers of St. Augustine, I noticed that they were all directed to God and to our Saviour. I repeated some of the prayers and even dreamed that I was among the accepted of God. But as I came nearer and nearer to the truth, all my past life and practices seemed painfully ridiculous to me. I had time to read and money with which to buy books, so I began to buy and to read every sort of literature that would give me light on the subject, resulting in my complete disillusionment. One day a friend loaned me a New Testament and I read it through in a little while, but as I read it with my Roman Catholic prejudices, it was almost meaningless to me and did not bring peace to my soul, but on the contrary increased my anxiety. About this time a colporteur came along giving out tracts. Some of my friends and myself got together and read the tracts and criticised them because some of them did not give as much credit to Maria as we thought they should.

"About the same time a cart driver that came from some of the cities at a distance stopped in our village and left some tracts, one of which fell into my son's hands. The title of the tract was the "Good Samaritan" and in it I found great satisfaction, but feeling sure that the traveler was a Protestant I burned the tract. In the meantime the traveler continued to make periodical visits, bringing with him earthenware to sell in Catorce and the neighboring villages. We became warm friends in the course of time, and once when he came we decided to have a meeting in order to discuss religion. I invited some of my friends, among whom was the village school teacher and the judge of the town. Our traveling friend, whose name was Gertrudes Molina, soon proved to the little company that there were many serious errors in the Roman Catholic religion, looking at it from a Bible viewpoint, though none of the little company accepted any of the proofs, but they all promised to read and to investigate, and accepted a portion of a tract that Molina left them. I read a number of these tracts and noticed that nearly every one of them referred to the Bible as the fundamental book, and as the one that should be studied above all others, so I asked my friend where and how the Bible was to be obtained, upon which Molina brought me a large one for which I gave two dollars.

"I then dedicated myself to the reading of the new book, using every spare moment, day and night. A portion of that which I read pleased me and much of it did not; a part of it brought deep consolation to my troubled spirit, and because of the clearness with which it condemned my sins, I felt a renewed anxiety because I did not wish to leave certain sins that had taken deep hold on my life. My desperation came to be so tense that I was on the point of taking my own life. Then, to make matters worse, I, for having become interested in the Protestant religion, was pronounced by some of my neighbors as a heretic and soon was to be condemned and excommunicated by the Holy Mother Church. My friend Molina, seeing my predicament, offered to send me some books that would give me more light on the subject and aid me to understand the Word of God.

DON FELIPE GLORIA AND FAMILY

This he did by sending me "Nights With the Romanists," Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," "The Divine Authority of the New Testament" and the "History of the Bible."

"How Ervin G. Taber ever came to know about Molina and myself, is more than I ever could find out, but it so happened that Mr. Taber and Molina came to visit me, and my interest and conviction grew until a little later I offered my house for some meetings that they wanted to hold. Soon after this I was transferred to the Station of Catorce where I built a house with a room especially adapted to the meetings that continued to be held in my home. Everett Morgan and Sarah A. Lindley were among those who visited the village of Estacion de Catorce, and through them I received added courage. Don Felipe Martinez and Senor Colunga also visited the place, and as time went on I found that all my fears and doubts were gone and that my faith was founded in Christ Jesus, and all the persecutions that soon came from the world about me were not sufficient to make me turn back to the things that I had left behind.

"It was about this time that sickness came upon me, and losing my position with the Government where I had served for many years, I found myself obliged to seek employment elsewhere. At last I became a miner and utilized every opportunity that came along to give out tracts, Bibles and Testaments and in other ways testified for the Master. As I became more firmly established in the faith, persecutions increased in proportion. One morning as I was going to the mine a herdsman rushed out into the road, reviling me with all the insulting names he could think of, and then retired saying that he would take my life if I passed that way again. I turned a deaf ear and marched slowly on as though I did not hear him. One of the principal authorities of the village of Mantanzas where I frequently had to pass, knowing that I frequently gave out literature asked me for something to read. I immediately gave him a paper that I was taking with me to my work. He took the paper and burned it before my eyes and then wanted to use violence in order that I might not continue to propagate heretical ideas in the village. But as persecutions increased the people became more interested, and some of the children began to attend the Protestant school opened by Everett Morgan about that time. Later on some larger ones were sent to Cedral.

"Losing my position again, I went to Catorce where the position of Alcalde of the jail was given me. This afforded me a much better opportunity to give out the Good News of salvation as I came in contact with many people from all classes of society, some of whom I was happy to see converted.

"Six months later the place of municipal tax collector was vacant, and upon my request the place was given me and also an opportunity to speak to many people regarding their salvation. I sold many Bibles, and distributed many tracts and succeeded in sending one child to our school in Catorce, and some young ladies to the school in Cedral. I next went to Catorce to look for work, and was placed in charge of the jail. This gave me the opportunity of talking to them of the Gospel. I sold several Bibles and Testaments and some repented of their sins. About six months after I was given a position by the municipal government, which gave me a better opportunity for the distribution of literature. All this time I sought to be very faithful in attendance of the services, not allowing the cold, rain, or anything else to keep me or my family from the meetings.

"Some Americans came from the United States, and the Morgans and Sarah Lindley called me to meet them. They asked me various questions and took my picture to send to their home, but I could not understand why, until a few days after they asked me to take my family and go to Potrero to preach the Gospel, and distribute tracts. I told them I considered myself unworthy of the place as minister, for I believed and still believe it is a position of great importance and respect. I offered to go as a worker and take my family and see if I could bring in some other families, so I was appointed as Deacon of Friends Church, and I really consider myself unworthy of this even, as I comprehend more the value of lost souls in the sight of God and my responsibility in the matter. Sometimes I have been discouraged, and most ready to abandon the work, then again I have felt greatly encouraged. So I find two spirits in me, the one that would discourage me I recognize as the spirit of Satan. When I have found myself in difficulties of this kind, I have remembered Peter when he was warming himself by the enemies' fire, and when he attempted to walk on the water and was sinking, and the Master said, 'O man of little faith!' How weak we are! Elijah showed great courage and slew the prophets of Baal, yet at the voice of Jezebel he fled day and night until he escaped, so I flee to Him who is my refuge and strength, and press onward.

"During these years we, of course, have encountered many trials. One Felipe Martinez came from Cedral to hold some meetings. We put the horse inside but could not get the buggy in so we left it in front of the door in the street. We retired after the services and about an hour later we heard the buggy moving rapidly along the street, and came up with it about 100 steps away where they had left it and fled. Another time, when Mr. Sein came to hold services, some three or four men who were drunk came in with stones in their hands, expecting to break up the meeting. When he began to preach and they heard the name of God and Christ spoken, one of them took off his hat and tried to force the others to do so, and so they argued the question among themselves during the meeting and did not use their stones.

"Another time Felipe Martinez and myself were out looking for some food for the horse, when we met one of the men that went to the meeting with stones and he had some more ready for us. Once he began to throw and one stone just passed over Felipe's back, and another just in front of his breast, so that we felt it was a miraculous escape for us.

"When the bell was put up in Catorce Station to call the believers together and those who wished to attend the services, it caused a great scandal. Even the men in authority came with their pistols in their hands shooting at the bell. Another time the Judge's brother was drinking with some of his companions and they began to throw stones against the front door, and made trouble in general. They left saying they were going to return at night, so Sarah A. Lindley sent word to the Judge telling him of the threats, stating that complaint would be made to the higher authorities if they were molested in any way. The father of the man who had made the threats spent the night keeping watch lest his son might give trouble as he had said he would. The offender himself wrote a note the next day asking Miss Lindley's pardon.

"In Catorce it was even worse. One could not go out on the street without hearing insults. Rich and poor came to the services, many out of idle curiosity, and some were taken prisoners because they persisted in sending the hand-organ to be played in front of the church during the services. When we rang the bell for services they said we were calling the mules together, others the flies, others said these people had nothing else to do. Some called the workers bishops, others said devils or demons, others called them educated devils. Each 16th of September they threatened to destroy by means of dynamite the missionaries in their homes, but we were always protected. By this you can see something of the thoughts and feelings of the people of Catorce. As I had to walk in the street a great deal, they called me St. Peter, others the mystery, others the bishop of the other party. The school children pictured us in divers places as having horns. When we would pass them they would hold their noses and shout, 'Morgas,' referring to Mr. Morgan. Some would repeat the 'Salva, Mary' and others would implore the Saints.

"In Potrero, one time when I went to give out some tracts two men who were in a cantina drinking, saw me pass by. They followed me out to the edge of the town. One of them had a machete and the other a bottle of rum and upon the spot they told me that I had to drink the liquor and preach to them about the virgin Guadalupe, the patron saint of Mexico. I told them kindly that that was not the place to preach and that they were not in a condition to hear my words. I continued on my way, giving out tracts, and they followed me and were soon quarreling between themselves until they were finally arrested by a policeman.

"These are a few of the many occasions that the allies of Satan have set upon me to hurt me, and I feel so sure that our Heavenly Father has cared for me and shielded me from all harm, so it is to Him I owe so much for His miraculous protection. Whenever I felt sorely oppressed, and even at times discouraged to the point of turning back, the words of the Master would come to my mind, 'Be not afraid of them that kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell.'—Matt. 10: 28."

The above narrative of Don Felipe gives a clear idea of what the average convert has to pass through. Yet it is no doubt one of the means God uses to establish his children in the faith. As the adverse winds cause the oak to thrust its roots deep into the earth and to grow strong and sturdy, so the adversity of persecution produces sturdy Christians and eliminates weaklings and those that might otherwise develop into "rice Christians."

Don Felipe passed away on the 18th of last October. Raymond Holding went in answer to a telegram and found the family helpless with a fanatical crowd, jubilant over his death, scoffing outside. He says, "I thought of our Master when He died on the cross to save just such people, and how, in the same loving spirit He had lived among them, had loved them, had spoken peace to their troubled hearts, and yet was obliged to weep over his people and say, 'O Jerusalem, how often I would have gathered you under my wings as a hen gathereth her little chickens and ye would not!' So Don Felipe, with his kind, loving spirit, has wept over Catorce, has received kindly and oftentimes in complete silence the insults of the rabble. All these facts served me well when the hour came for the funeral service. One of the great Catholic festivities was on the day of his funeral. The procession formed in the street just in front of the mission house, the band played, fireworks were freely shot off and scornful remarks were frequent. But when we began to sing, 'Safe in the Arms of Jesus,' and to preach, what shameful silence fell upon the idolatrous people. I likened Don Felipe unto the woman who had broken the box of precious ointment over the Master. Don Felipe converted his life into a 'living sacrifice' for his Master. He has gathered about him a faithful band of converts, one of whom, and perhaps the first one converted, may be able to carry on the work thus far begun."

The Human Touch

Wherever there is a soul unsaved, God calls for the life line, and He wants you to bring it; He wants you to cast it. Where there is a soul lost, God is anxious to save; but He cannot save it without you or someone else. It is through men that God saves men. By human hands He brings His banished home. When Jesus went back to glory, He left His kingdom in the hands of men, and it has been there ever since. If your lost brother is ever found, it will be through the gospel of God's dear Son and the Spirit working through you or another. If Peter and the rest of the disciples had remained in the upper room, there would have been no Pentecost.—United Presbyterian.

No one can have a true idea of right until he does it, any genuine reverence for it until he has done it often and with cost, any peace ineffable in it until he does it always and with alacrity.

The meeting at Carthage, Indiana, is in a flourishing condition. Forty-seven members have been received recently.

Pleasant Plain Academy in Iowa is having a prosperous year. The remainder of the funds necessary for the recent improvements was raised at a recent Quarterly Meeting.

John Kittrell, of Farmland, Indiana, has just closed a revival service at Dublin, Indiana, assisted by the pastor, Dalton Lewis. The services were conducted for two weeks, and the meeting has been much strengthened.

A Christian Endeavor Society has been recently organized at South Starksboro, Vermont, with ten active members. It is expected that ten or twelve more will join in the near future. The outlook is most encouraging.

Friends of the Silsbee Street Meeting at Lynn, Massachusetts, announce that they are much pleased with their adoption of the Friends Hymnal, and other arrangements for improving the musical portion of the First-day morning worship.

Richard R. Newby, superintendent of Evangelistic and Church Extension work for the New York Yearly Meeting, residing in Union Springs, New York, has accepted a call to serve the Friends of Des Moines, Iowa, as pastor. He will enter his new field about June first next.

The preliminaries for the Inter-Society debates were held at Penn College on the evening of December 17th. Two teams were selected to represent Penn in the triangular debate with Leander Clark and Parsons colleges. The question this year is "the Initiative and Referendum."

At its recent meeting in Washington, the Society of Biblical Literature and Exegesis elected as its president, Professor George A. Barton, of Bryn Mawr College. The Society is composed of the biblical professors in the leading universities and theological seminaries of the country.

M. T. Swafford, as evangelist, and his niece, Ella Swafford, as singer, of Haviland Quarterly Meeting, Kansas, began meetings at North Grove, a little country church near Jonesboro, Indiana, December 29th, holding twenty sessions in all. The power of the Lord was manifested from the beginning. Fourteen were definitely blessed, and the church strengthened. They went from North Grove to Back Creek near by, where they are now engaged in the work.

Lindley A. Wells, of Portland, Oregon, held a very helpful and satisfactory meeting at New Providence, Iowa, in December. Sixteen young people were either converted or reclaimed, and on the Sabbath after the meetings closed, eleven were publicly welcomed from the associate to the active membership list.

Something like a dozen young Friends are attending the Hartford (Connecticut) Theological Seminary. The management is so pleased with this demonstration of interest that it is rumored they are talking about establishing a Chair of Quaker Instruction. It is time that our own denomination was busy in providing similar instruction in our own institutions.

Chicago Monthly Meeting on the 15th instant decided to take up the study of the Five Years Meeting Commission Reports and their meeting activities. The details of the plan of study were left with a committee. While taking work in the Chicago School of Civics and Philanthropy, Herman Newman is serving as pastoral secretary in the meeting.

The new Bethel meeting house, seven miles from Winamac, Indiana, and belonging to Kokomo Quarterly Meeting, was dedicated January 5th. The cost of the building was about $1,500 and there is no indebtedness. The membership is not large, but there was a good attendance. Edward Woodard, superintendent of evangelistic work in Western Yearly Meeting, preached the dedicatory sermon.

Scipio Quarterly Meeting was held at Popular Ridge, New York, on January 11th. On the preceding evening a bible school session was held, addressed by William J. Sayers, of Poughkeepsie, New York, on the "Efficiency of Effectiveness." On the evening of the 11th a special Christian Endeavor session was held presided over by William B. Wilmore. On Sabbath evening there was an address on Social Service by William J. Sayers.

Fairmount Academy is having another prosperous year. During the serious illness and death of Professor Coffin's wife, the senior class kindly divided his duties among themselves and successfully carried the work forward. Nearly two hundred students are enrolled of which seventy are in the freshman class. The work of putting in a hard wood floor in the gymnasium has begun. When completed it will be a gymnasium equal to the best.

On December 6th a series of meetings began at LeGrand, Iowa, which closed on Sabbath evening, January 12th. These special services were times of great refreshing to the church and to all who attended. More than twenty persons received definite blessing, some of whom have already united with Friends. Lindley A. Wells, of Portland, Oregon, was in charge of the meetings. His ministry was strong, spiritual and clear, and the meeting is much revived.

Coloma Meeting, Western Yearly Meeting, has been remembered in great blessing recently through a revival conducted by John and Cora Kittrell, assisted by Edward M. Woodard, Yearly Meeting superintendent of Evangelistic and pastoral work, and Elizabeth A. Murphy, pastor of the meeting. The preaching and teaching of John Kittrell was searching and convincing, yet in sympathy and tenderness of spirit. Thirty-nine found peace with God, including those in the prime and activity of life, several young people and also some of the children. The church was much strengthened and built up in Christ. The faithfulness of the members in personal work and song service was commendable during the meetings.

For commencement time 1913, Earlham College is making preparations for the home coming of old students. Any student who has ever been in attendance at the college, whether a graduate or whether having been in attendance at Earlham but one term will be welcome. "Old Student Day" will be on Tuesday, June 24, 1913. A program of unusual interest will be carried out during the whole day. Many students of the college who are not members of the Alumni have become famous in different lines of activity. Those in charge of the day will make it a point that a number of these shall be present and take part in the program. A committee composed of members of the Alumni, members of the administration of the college and old students in the vicinity of Earlham, has arrangements well under way.

On January 4th, at Shirley, Indiana, by request of three local congregations, Knightstown Monthly Meeting was divided and a new meeting was established to be known as Shirley Monthly Meeting, composed of Grant, Wilkinson and Shirley local meetings. The committee appointed by Spiceland Quarterly Meeting to organize the new meeting was present and had charge of the work. Sumner Wood and Blanche Green were chosen clerks. A very encouraging spirit of unity was manifested in all the proceedings leading up to the day of the opening, and the presence and guidance of the Holy Spirit seemed manifest in the establishment of this new Monthly Meeting. Being composed of old established meetings, with experienced workers, there is good reason to expect their work will prosper.

Rose Hill, Kansas, Monthly Meeting was organized in 1878, and two years later the first country church building in that part of southwest Kansas was erected. Last summer, the meeting, now grown too large for the building, planned a larger one, and after $1,700 had been pledged, work was begun on August 5th. The house has recently been completed and was formally dedicated on January 5th, Lewis E. Stout, of Wichita, conducting the services and preaching the dedicatory sermon. The pastor of the M. E. church participated in the opening exercises. The building is probably the largest country church in the county, having an auditorium, lecture room and a nursery. Nearly all who were solicited freely gave of their means, and all of the work except the plastering was donated. The total cost including the work, was about $3,000.

An Important Conference

Representatives from Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings gathered in a conference at Earlham College, January 15, 1913, in response to a call issued by President Robert L. Kelly.

After an informal discussion in regard to the great need of the church today for the best trained and most effective workers, the representatives unanimously adopted the following propositions:

1. That a course of religious instruction be established at Earlham College, the extent of which shall be sufficient to meet the needs of the church today and shall include scholastic, pastoral, evangelistic, missionary and teacher training and such other subjects as are needful for full, well-rounded workmanship as pastors, evangelists, religious teachers, missionaries, etc.

2. That a preparatory course be arranged for all our Academies giving religious instruction, which shall prepare for and lead up to the aforesaid college course.

3. That through our Evangelistic Boards we ask the two Yearly Meetings that they require all prospective ministers to pursue a course of study and pass satisfactory examinations, as a guarantee of intellectual qualifications.

4. That the above courses be arranged by four representatives of the Earlham faculty, one from each academy giving religious instruction, and two from each of the Evangelistic Boards of the two Yearly Meetings.

5. That all instruction given in these courses of study be in harmony with the established doctrines of the Friends Church as adopted by the recent Five Years Meeting.

6. That the Evangelistic Boards of the two Yearly Meetings and all pastors and leaders in the meetings be enlisted to search out all prospective Biblical students and assist them financially and otherwise in pursuing the above courses.

On motion the above propositions were directed to be presented to the Board of Trustees of Earlham College for consideration at their next meeting.

RICHARD HAWORTH, Secretary.

Whittier College Clear of Debt

The many friends of Whittier College in California and elsewhere, will hail with profound satisfaction the announcement that the institution is now freed from indebtedness, the canvassers in this interest having reported at a meeting of the trustees held on the last day of the old year that the subscriptions secured exceeded fifteen thousand dollars, the amount estimated necessary to cancel all matured obligations.

This is the first step in a plan devised by the board some months ago to enlarge the financial resources of the institution. This plan included the cancelling of the indebtedness, the raising of twenty-five thousand dollars for the erection of a library building, and the addition of seventy-five thousand dollars to the present endowment of one hundred and fifty thousand.

The decease of Prof. Charles E. Lewis soon after entering upon the work of raising these several amounts caused a suspension of the canvass for a time, and the board being unable to secure a successor in the arduous undertaking outside the college ranks within the time limit prescribed in clearing the indebtedness, President Thomas Newlin, in addition to his many other duties, undertook the work for the time being, and ably assisted by J. G. Southwick, college treasurer, spent several very busy weeks with the gratifying result above named. The subscribers to the fund thus far number about two hundred and fifty, showing the very general interest felt in the college by citizens of Whittier, and the Friends of California.

It should be mentioned that the indebtedness just cancelled indicates no shortcoming in the management, as it was incurred in making substantial improvements in buildings and on the campus, which stand among the permanent assets of the college.

The management of the college by extraordinary effort, and taxing care in financial problems involving much sacrifice, have maintained the institution at a high standard with limited means. The securing of the larger amounts contemplated in the plan outlined will relieve this tension, and enable the college to do still better work in the enlarging field that lies before it, work which means so much to the future of the Society of Friends on the Pacific Coast.

President Newlin will continue the work of canvassing for the present, and any friends of the college desiring further information of the needs of Whittier College in this crisis of its history with a view of contributing, may correspond with him.

A GOOD BREAKFAST

Some Persons Never Know What it Means

A good breakfast, a good appetite and good digestion mean everything to the man, woman or child who has anything to do, and wants to get a good start toward doing it.

A Mo. man tells of his wife's "good breakfast" and also supper, made out of Grape-Nuts and cream. He says:

"I should like to tell you how much good Grape-Nuts has done for my wife. After being in poor health for the last 18 years, during part of the time scarcely anything would stay on her stomach long enough to nourish her, finally at the suggestion of a friend she tried Grape-Nuts.

"Now, after about four weeks on this delicious and nutritious food, she has picked up most wonderfully and seems as well as anyone can be.

"Every morning she makes a good breakfast on Grape-Nuts eaten just as it comes from the package with cream or milk added; and then again the same at supper and the change in her is wonderful.

"We can't speak too highly of Grape-Nuts as a food after our remarkable experience." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.—Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true and full of human interest.

Friends Sabbath School LITERATURE

THE FRIENDS Sabbath School Literature consists of six different publications. Each of these publications supplies a specific demand, and hence has a mission of its own. They were created in answer to a special need. They are most admirably adapted to our Sabbath School work, and should be taken by all our schools.

THE TEACHER'S QUARTERLY.

First comes the Teacher's Quarterly, embracing the Sabbath School Lessons for one quarter, together with a special editorial department filled with just such instructions as may be most needed. It should be taken by many of the older scholars. It costs only 30 cents per year, and in clubs for Sabbath Schools, 7½ cents per quarter. When forty to one hundred copies are taken, the price is 6½ cents per copy. When over one hundred copies are taken, the price is 6 cents per copy.

THE ADVANCED QUARTERLY.

This contains a full quarter of Sabbath School lessons, thirteen in number, thoughtfully prepared, giving two pages to each lesson, bringing out the vital parts thereof. It costs much time and labor to prepare it, and is designed for our young people. It is equal to any publication of its kind by other denominational publishing houses. The price is 20 cents per year, or in clubs to Sabbath Schools, 3¾ cents per quarter.

THE INTERMEDIATE QUARTERLY.

This publication contains the same lessons as the Advanced Quarterly, just above described, but the preparation is more simplified so as to bring the lessons down to the more easy comprehension of younger scholars, and should be in the hands of scholars from nine to fourteen years of age, or those attending the fourth to eighth grades in the public schools. The price is 15 cents per year, 3 cents per quarter.

FRIENDS LESSON SHEET.

This sheet contains the same matter as the Advanced Quarterly, and is published for the use of visitors and irregular scholars, and should be given after the Quarterlies have been exhausted, lost or mislaid. Nothing else could well take its place. Each school should take a few of them for use as mentioned above. Price, 10 cents a year, or 2½ cents per quarter.

THE CHILD'S LESSON LEAF.

This little four-page paper consists of the Sabbath School lessons told in a simple way and easy to understand, and questions and answers on the lessons. It also contains pictures and easy reading for the mother to entertain the little ones. It is designed for the Primary and Infant departments. The price is 20 cents per year or 5 cents per quarter.

THE YOUTH'S FRIEND.

This paper consists of eight pages weekly and is free from all objectionable reading and well illustrated. It is just suited to the great army of boys and girls of all classes. The circulation of this paper is too small. Every school should take enough copies to place one in every home where there are children or young people, for it will be appreciated. Price only 50 cents per year. To Sabbath Schools in clubs sent to one address, only 40 cents per year.

Samples of all periodicals will be sent free of charge.

The Honest Man

“Who is the honest man?
He that doth still and strongly good pursue,
To God, his neighbor and himself most true;
Whom neither force nor fawning can Unfix or wrench from giving all their due.

“Who when great trials come Nor seeks nor shuns them; but doth calmly stay
Till he the thing and the example weigh;
All being brought into a sum,
What place or person calls for, he doth pay.

“Whom none can work or woo
To use in anything a trick or sleight,
For above all things he abhors deceit;
His words and works, and fashion, too,
All of a piece, and all are clear and straight.”

Editorial Comment Upon Current Topics of the Day

One of the beneficent features of the parcel post law, is the ban which has been put upon intoxicating liquors. This was the result of the persistence of one or two men in public life, who should have the thanks of this generation for the fact that liquors are placed in the unpostable class.

The daily papers have announced the discovery of a new method of administering ether that promises to be a genuine boon to all who must suffer surgical operations. The odor of essence of orange is first administered, and is finally mixed with the gas. There is a saving both in time and in the quantity to be administered, and quite naturally the recovery from the effects is more rapid.

In a single county of Kansas, it is reported that nearly a score of sixty-five country schools are utilized as social and religious centers for their respective communities. It is a custom that ought to become epidemic. Why should not our school houses be centers of education, not only for the young, but of community life as well? It should not be forgotten that Kansas is a prohibition state, which may have something to do with this progressive country practice.

The fact has been widely advertised as news that King George reads a chapter in the Bible every day. That is highly commendable in the King, and should increase his fitness materially as a sovereign. But why should this be news for the daily press more than any other important duties in the daily life of the ruler? Has Bible reading fallen to such a low ebb among public men that faithfulness of any particular man in this direction is so remarkable as to call for public comment? Perhaps, and if so, the daily practice of the King of England should become the habit of all who are in authority everywhere.

The recent "march" of the suffragettes from New York to Albany is to be followed by a similar "march" from New York to Washington in February. The army of marchers is to appear in the capitol city in time to witness the inauguration of the new president. What the gain will be if any from this spectacular demonstration is problematic. The advocates, some of them at least, of the "votes for women" cause are blessed with the gift of persistency, if not of well balanced sanity. Equal suffrage will come ultimately, not as the direct result of the pyrotechnic, but from the sober judgment of the nation, which will see that a woman has as much right to vote as a man.

It is always a matter of fine discrimination to determine where legitimate development in trade ends and dangerous monopoly begins, just as it is difficult to decide how far legitimate foresight as to the future course of trade may be tolerated, without becoming an offense because of the personal profits accumulated in consequence of this exercise of good judgment. Thus it is that the recent decision of the United States Supreme Court becomes interesting, when it decided that "a conspiracy to run a corner in the available supply of a staple commodity such as cotton," for the purpose of enhancing the price of the product in the general market, is a criminal offense under the Anti-Trust Act.

Perhaps no country is so little understood as Mexico at the present time. While in all probability the government at Washington possesses accurate information about that much disturbed nation, the public has not been taken into its confidence. The following statement from the North American Review will be of universal interest as throwing much light upon the purposes of President Madero:

All the better elements of the country realize that Madero no longer represents an individual or even a political administration. He represents the civilization of Mexico struggling against the unreigned savagery of a population which has known no law but abject fear, and, having lost that fear and the restraint which it imposed upon it, threatens to deliver Mexico to such a reign of anarchy, rapine, and terror as would be without a parallel in modern history. He represents the dignity and integrity of Mexico before the world.

The adoption of modern safety devices to guard against railroad disasters does not appear to have met with the expected success. In spite of steel coaches, better rail equipment, block signals, and grade crossing safeguards, wrecks have continued to increase to an alarming degree. Heavier traffic and faster speed are chargeable with part of this delinquency, but a terrific indictment against railroad efficiency has been brought in the claim that 63 per cent. of all railroad accidents result from the action of the employes. It would seem that the remedy will not be found in stricter supervision on the part of the Interstate Commerce Commission, so much as within the management of the roads themselves. The government may arouse the people to bring pressure, but the details must be worked out by those in control.

If Governor Tener of Pennsylvania has his way, the legislature will deprive the town of Coatesville of its charter as a borough, because it has failed to bring to justice anyone connected with the burning to death of a negro in the public streets more than a year ago. It is a unique suggestion that the Governor has made, but the manner in which notable infractions of the law go unpunished these days is a sorry commentary upon our civilization and our republican form of government. Such a drastic plan may serve at least to awaken the public conscience. Yet this act was one in kind of many infractions that strike at public morals and the safety of public rights, that go unpunished with little or no concern on the part of the masses. It is time that we had both a law-observing and a law-enforcing crusade in this country, especially in many of our municipalities.

An interesting debate has developed over certain features of the immigration bill now pending in the National Senate. Such strong objection was raised to the provision that requires a "certificate of character" from the home government, before the immigrant could be admitted to our country, that the bill was re-committed for revision. This particular requirement may be too drastic, and might result in barring from our shores some very desirable citizens, as in the case of Russian Jews, but some practical and effective means should be devised by which a higher grade of immigration can be assured. Were politics not a factor in the problem, its solution would be more easy. Some day we will have a Congress that will deal with a question like this from the viewpoint of public duty. One of the great needs of our country today is a better immigration law that will discriminate more arbitrarily between the "desirable" and "undesirable" who are seeking admission to our citizenship.

Entering the Open Door of Opportunity

"Behold, I have set before thee an open door."

God's opportunities are oftentimes his most beneficent providences. The choicest favor that can be bestowed is an open road to God's storehouse of bounty. The best gift is the ability to acquire by our own achievement. To toil, to sacrifice for some great purpose, is the acme of human endeavor.

Too often we cheapen the dispensations of the Infinite Father. Blessings are not so much the bestowal of personal favors, as the recompense of faithful obedience. God's vineyard is not the habitat of the idle fortunate, but the busy field of happy toilers. The chance to be a citizen of the Kingdom of God, with all its obligations of loyalty and service, will be an occasion for rejoicing through all eternity.

God's message to the Philadelphian church is a message to be craved by all the saints of earth. "I know thy works." Already was its reputation for loyalty and faithfulness established. And because it could be trusted, God had opened the door to larger possibilities. "Unto every one that hath shall be given." It is God's law of compensation. The best guarantee of growth is the capacity for growth.

But how frequently men fail to recognize the open door! They see only the path to which they are accustomed. They hear no voices calling to a larger life. They catch no inspiration for a higher service.

They are content with little things. Ambition is weak; they discount their own talents. They are not willing to pay the price of progress. As with men, so with many a church. From one year to another they are marking time. Like the Laodicean church, being neither cold nor hot, they are not conscious of their shortcomings.

But the door is open wide into the fields where God's harvest is. And never was it open wider or more invitingly than today. God's Spirit is moving mightily throughout the whole earth. He wants a better world here and now.

A world-wide revival is imminent. More, it is already under way. The mighty missionary activities, the Men and Religion movement, the efforts for world peace, the calls to social service, the prevalent reform spirit, both moral and industrial, the tendency toward Christian unity, all are open doors of opportunity that are leading to a new and more realistic Christian civilization.

In the face of such possibilities, is it any wonder that the open door has been set before the Society of Friends? And should we not cease to wonder what this new spirit of revival means? God forbid that anyone or any circumstance should hinder us from entering into the fullest enjoyment of the heritage that God has for us!

The Meaning of the Gospel Message

In the original, the term gospel means good news, or glad tidings. As used in the Scriptures it has been defined as "a revelation of the grace of God to fallen man through a Mediator." In common terms it is not only the narrative and message of Christ as penned by the Gospel writers, but comprehends the whole record of the plan of human redemption as set forth in the Bible, and revealed to mankind by the Holy Spirit.

Actually, the Gospel is more than a message, more than a piece of good news. When conveyed to the consciousness of man, by the influence of the Holy Spirit, it is made effectual to salvation. It not only reveals the fact that salvation is attainable, but through the work of grace it prepares men for its realization and brings them to its consummation.

Popularly speaking, the Gospel is the message of salvation through Christ, which the church is expected to convey to the world, through the ministry, by the power of example, through the teaching of the Scriptures, in whatever way it may acquaint the human soul with the scheme of human redemption. Whatever may be the terminology used to convey this message, there are certain concrete effects, which should always be realized.

1. Paul's definition that the gospel is the power of God unto salvation has been verified in human experience, until its accuracy is beyond all question.

Its proclamation under the power of the Spirit will bring conviction to sinful men, and impel them to repentance and to seek God in the consciousness of needed pardon. "My word shall not return unto me void." All men will not heed who hear, and many will turn aside from hearing, but faithful witnessing to the truth of the power of God and the anxiety of God to save lost humanity, will find its fruitage in the lives of men and women who accept Christ as their only hope, and flee to Him for refuge. The days of conversion, the turning from sin to God, the new birth into the Kingdom of God's life and His light, are not over, and will have no end so long as any weary, footsore, sin-burdened son or daughter of Adam is ready to lift up beseeching eyes to a crucified but risen and triumphant Redeemer.

The gospel means therefore a transformed life here and now. Where there was sin, now there is grace. Where there was evil and corruption, now there is purity and holiness. The oil of joy is given for mourning. Gladness succeeds sorrowing; the spirit of helping takes the place of selfishness; and men become "new creatures" in Christ Jesus. No one who has not experienced it, can know the "joy of the Lord" in its blessed fullness, and yet all may know who diligently seek after it. There are no favored classes in God's harvest-field.

2. But salvation is not alone for the individual. Christ's great heart of love yearned after Jerusalem. He upbraided the cities for their unrepentant condition. He fed the multitudes as one body. "And the government shall be upon His shoulder." Men are learning in these later years that the gospel is potent for the redemption of family life, of community life, of municipal life, of civic life, of industrial life, of social life, of National life. Men in their corporate capacities need to measure their deeds by the perfect pattern of Christ. They can no more attempt to live right personally and expect forgiveness for the sins of corporate acts for which they are responsible, than they can be holy and defiled at the same time.

The gospel as applied practically to human needs, means a better community, a better city, a better country, a better civilization. Its preaching will make trouble for the saloon. It will stay the hand of the grafter. It will put soul and heart and conscience into corporations. It will establish justice and equity in industrial life. It will purify politics. It will stamp the curse of God upon social iniquity. It will bring sunshine and fresh air and health into crowded tenement districts. It will rescue babyhood from the machinations of those who would coin the lives of innocency into dollars. It will restore the bloom of youth to the immaturity of age. It will establish the happiness as well as the solidarity of family life. It will conserve the interests of the generations yet to be by guaranteeing proper protection from oppression to the toiling women. It will safeguard to men the rights of self-maintenance against encroachments of every kind. It will provide an equitable division of the products of industry. In the last analysis, it will establish the peace of the world by teaching the brotherhood of all nations. It will produce a world-wide civilization, whose tenets are the teachings of the Christ who spake as never man spake.

What a mission to which the saints of earth are called! What a harvest field for the church! It is time for all men who have caught a vision of the power of the gospel to save to the uttermost, to gird themselves with power for the tasks that are at our doors, until all men, in heathendom, in the slums, in the mines and factories, in places of affluence and power shall hear the call, bidding them into a better and higher life.

A LARGER AMERICAN FRIEND

The need of a larger AMERICAN FRIEND is already being realized. A number of features which are vital to our denominational life must be withheld for lack of space. Certain lines of the most interesting kind of news cannot even be solicited and developed because there is no place for it. Certain activities that are in part the result of the awakening among our young people, and others which are the product of the Five Years Meeting cannot be developed for lack of space in which to advocate them in our columns.

At its meeting on January 22d, the Publication Board approved heartily the desirability of a larger journal at the earliest practical moment, and instructed the editor to say that just as soon as the patronage will warrant it, the larger paper will be forthcoming. Whether this will mean an addition of four or eight pages will be determined later.

Meanwhile all depends upon a largely increased circulation. If Friends generally will only realize their opportunity to secure a journal of larger size that will become a power in helping to realize the ideals of the denomination, and set out to do their part toward increasing the subscription list, we can soon have a live journal of twenty-four pages, making weekly visitations into all our communities.

We ought to have 3,000 new subscribers by April 1. A good start has been made in this direction, but in order to reach this, every Friends' neighborhood must be canvassed thoroughly, and every family be made to see not only their opportunity to get a paper which they cannot afford to do without, but by their patronage to see that they are helping us to reach the larger publication more quickly.

A live membership will make a live meeting. And a live meeting will make itself felt in any community.

The Five Years Meeting as Interpreted by Some Leading Friends

STATEMENT BY ANNA B. THOMAS.

I understand that this week the women delegates to the Five Years Meeting are to have the opportunity of giving their views of its proceedings. I am glad that we still hold our old belief that, in religious matters, men and women are to be "heirs together of the grace of God." We gain much by this position, for after all men and women are sufficiently distinct to have different view points and very often the woman's view point is more practical than the man's and sometimes even more needed.

So I will begin with a small yet very important matter. This is the third time I have attended our Quaker Five Years Conference. The first was in 1892, in Indianapolis, as a delegate; the second, also in Indianapolis in 1902, when I attended as a visitor; this last time I was again a delegate and the Meeting was again in Indianapolis. On each occasion, as I remember, most of us suffered in the same way, namely from severe colds with consequent loss of voice and other disagreeable symptoms. It seemed that the crowded meetings where we sat for hours in a close yet draughty atmosphere, contributed to this, and I feel rather strongly that there should be a committee on hygiene appointed for the next Five Years Meeting, to try to find means to improve the atmospheric conditions and so avoid this difficulty, which is a very real and important one.

Apart from these unpleasant physical conditions, the Five Years Meeting was certainly a great time. More than in either of the previous ones a spirit of love prevailed, and whilst the differences in thought and method are possibly even more pronounced, we do seem to be learning how to get at the essential unity under the surface differences, and to give one another credit for at least as much honesty and candor as we claim for ourselves. At previous Five Years Meetings the surface differences have been the prominent feature; this time the great essentials—

Direct first-hand knowledge of God by the soul;
Direct first-hand guidance of the soul by God;
Absolute faithfulness to the commands of God
by the soul—

these great essentials were more dwelt upon and many of us gained a vision of the possibilities that lie before our Quaker Church in America, when we shall unite, not necessarily in any one method of work, but in the one supreme task of expressing in twentieth century language these essential underlying principles of Quakerism.

I do not believe in crying "Peace, peace, when there is no peace," nor in pretending that we are agreed when we are not, but I believe that in God's house there are, as Christ said, "many mansions," and that the great, many-sided orb of truth needs many heralds to proclaim it fully. It may be that some of our modern Friends have mistaken their church home and would really be in their right place in some other body, but even should that be the case, they are still our Christian brethren and we can love each other and have fellowship one with another in Christ Jesus. Let us apply the exhortation of the apostle in all cases where we cannot fully see eye to eye with one another, "Be anxiously troubled for nothing but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving let your requests be made known unto God." Let us do more praying one for another and less criticising as the result of the Five Years Meeting, then its fruit will increase and multiply wondrously.

STATEMENT BY ELIZA ARMSTRONG COX.

For a long time the eyes of Quakerdom were focused on the Five Years Meeting to convene in Indianapolis, October, 1912. It was looked forward to with deep solicitude by those who expected to attend it, and also by those who would not be present, and the body of Friends was very prayerful concerning it. The meeting convened. It did its work. It is now a most notable historic event.

The fruit of it will continue to appear for years to come. Points of value to note are: the endorsement of the historic documents, George Fox's letter and the Richmond Declaration; the quietness and confidence of spirit that has settled upon all like a blessed benediction; the forward look upon all faces; the sudden coming to the front of our younger membership like the bursting of a bud that had been closely held by unyielding sepals.

This recalls an incident in the writer's own experience thirty-one years ago when Western Yearly Meeting gave its hearty sanction to the forming of a Woman's Foreign Missionary Society. Much enthusiasm attended the occasion and our now venerable John Henry Douglas was present and lent the energy of his spirit to the enterprise. He made this helpful remark, "The significant thing about it is, these are all young women." Now, again, these are our younger members, and we look with confidence upon this uprising. The Executive Board, and a Publication Board, recalled the prophecy, "Old men shall dream dreams, and young men shall see visions." Our perfected organization, with the spiritual energy and enthusiasm back of it and in it, gives one a most hopeful and inspiring view of the future. It seems that every one got what he wanted, even if he did not get it the way he wanted it; but this point was sweetly yielded when the valuable admonition was rehearsed in our hearing, "See that ye fall not out by the way."

The Friends as "an organization of Christian people seems to have been re-born, and sets out on its new career singing, "All one body, we." The generals of former victories are still present for counsel and encouragement. The fresh recruits are lining up, and He who watches over the whole field has given forth the command, "March! March!" and other splendid victories will yet be won for the Kingdom of God on earth by the Friends. God is shaking the nations, and also the church that it may be "instant in season, out of season," for the work of preaching the gospel committed to her by her ascending Lord. We hear him calling, and we have them among us!

"Men with empire in their purpose,
And new eras in their brains,"

Columbus, Indiana.

STATEMENT BY MARTHA E. NEWLIN.

One of the first things I think of in connection with the Five Years Meeting is that it was planned and carried out with a spirit of prayer. This prayer was general over the whole Society; it was earnest, and definite. More than at any other meeting was there a universal expectation; an anticipation that it would be a great meeting. And any who attended could not but be impressed that the united prayers, and the expectant faith were honored by the Holy Spirit. Then, there was shown a lively interest in the gathering, and in all departments of its work. There was no semblance of indifference; there was not a moment when the matter before the session at that time, seemed unimportant. This lively interest in the vital things which concern the church showed something of the real life and zeal of the Friends of this generation.

One who was not a delegate, looking on from the outside could not help being impressed with the fact that assembled there was talent, and wisdom, and maturity, and experience that foretold a tremendous force as they set their faces toward the future, and enlisted their minds in solving the great problems confronting them, and set their hands diligently to the tasks that must be performed.

From the very first—and the conviction kept deepening until the closing moments—one could but feel these people mean business. And we can only hope that the business methods used by the Five Years Meeting will be contagious, and pervade the whole membership.

Samson went out and shook himself, and discovered his weakness. The Friends Church came together at Indianapolis and discovered her power. There was a real desire to get together. In the very atmosphere there was courtesy, conciliation, deference and the love of Christ which was constraining and restraining. Our denomination has never been so well united for a century past as it is now.

We have seen the need of federation, have caught its spirit, and are now working it out. Baltimore and California, Canada and North Carolina, New England and Nebraska clasped hands as they bridged the geographical distances, and throughout there was seen the need of a more compact organization. A central power has been established. The machinery has been installed. The oil of joy has been applied. We have faith to believe that the church from center to circumference will feel the pulsation of a new life and the thrill of the dynamic force of a spirit-led, constructive instrumentality which is being blessed by our Heavenly Father. It is most encouraging to know that in these forward strides we are taking, there is coming into our working force new blood, red with life-giving enthusiasm, and rich in iron which will give grit, push and endurance. The church is calling as never before for the young life to give themselves and their best talents and efforts to the highest work of life.

The young people are in the front ranks leading the van, and beckoning the church to hasten in her pace, so all may go on together to enjoy the victory which is just ahead.

Pasadena, California.

STATEMENT BY CAROLINA M. WOOD.

As I look back upon the Five Years Meeting, it seems to me like a happy family feast such as we have just been having at Thanksgiving time, when many members of our group were able to get together. Since we had met before there had been some breaths of gossip—some questions as to whether the family standards were being maintained. We were not quite sure of each other, and so we met for the highest of all feasts—a feast of spiritual communion, and found ourselves all gathered into the arms of the Head of the Family and all our doubts washed away in the flood of His love. We talked things out and found as we looked into each other's faces that though our circumstances were different, the family ideals had been kept, and that we loved each other.

We had indeed a time of beautiful fellowship. We talked over the things we most cared about. We planned to do things together. We developed a deep interest in each other's concerns, and now we have parted again.

The family letters as they come in the new AMERICAN FRIEND mean more than ever before. Our hearts go out in fresh and loving interest in every detail—East and West, North and South—and our hearts are enlarged.

Now it is five years before our next reunion! How can we keep the family together? In the fresh sense of the sacrament we have experienced, I believe we shall not be satisfied to slip into the hesitations of the past. Our faith and love shall cast out fear. This paper will keep us in fresh and living touch. Our common service will bind us together as true yoke-fellows. Our children, our young people, the stranger within our gates, those in the regions beyond, need the abundant life. We have tasted it. We will pull together that they may have it!

STATEMENT BY CHARLOTTE E. VICKERS.

There was a sweetness and power felt throughout the sessions of the Five Years Meeting that cannot soon be forgotten. With the broadened vision came the response, "Let us go up at once and possess it." I was most forcibly impressed by the successful effort made to inaugurate a better organization. More methodical ways were introduced with the end in view of greater efficiency in every department of work.

Friends have been lacking in this important factor of the Society's work. Modern methods have not been universally adapted, and while there is still greater improvement to be hoped for, the steps taken by the delegates to the Five Years Meeting in that direction were most encouraging.

The Society of Friends is much better known through the individual members than by the body itself, and this is largely because of its lack of organization. Our message has ever been true and clear, and as a people we must never lose our precious belief in the direct and personal guidance of the Holy Spirit. Through my close association in interdenominational work, I have been brought face to face with what has been accomplished by other churches, through the systematic co-operation of their members. Many of us who live in the large cities have been grieved at the great lack of loyalty shown by a number of Friends coming into our midst. There has been, and is still a great deal of sentiment regarding their right of membership with Friends, but that alone, as we all know, is not sufficient, nor does it build up, and sustain meetings. We must have earnest, conscientious co-operation along all the essential lines of work, if we are to fulfill our mission.

At the Five Years Meeting the outlook brightened. A new loyalty and enthusiasm was evidenced among young Friends, manifesting itself in an earnest desire to take an active part in the work of our denomination, going forth aggressively yet faithful in perpetuating its historic life, dear to us all. Many important steps were taken which we confidently believe will result in great blessing to our beloved Society. May each one be faithful, so that we may hear the precious words from our Master, "Well done."

The Home Mission Council

BY ROBERT E. PRETLOW

The annual meeting of the Home Mission Council, the membership of which consists of the officers and members of Boards of national scope, doing home mission or church extension work in the limits of the United States, was held in New York on January 14th and 15th. In accordance with the action of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board of the Five Years Meeting at Indianapolis in October last, this Board became a part of the Council, and for the first time Friends were officially represented in the general interdenominational movement for church extension in this country. The Friends Executive Committee on Indian Affairs had previously been in the Council, but their work is strictly limited to the care of the Indians.

The work of a score of denominations in a variety of fields was represented. Some general idea of the scope of interest may be had from a list of the standing committees, which are as follows:

On General Co-operation, City Work, Immigrants' Work, Exceptional Groups (as lumber camps, etc.), Rural Work, Indian Work, Negro Work, Spanish Work, Literature, and Home Mission Work.

In all fields it has been the policy of the Council to be such a clearing house of information as to prevent as far as possible "overlapping and overlooking," and to make the results of the experience of each board available for all similar boards.

Not only has the Council sought to avoid unnecessary duplication of effort between denominations, but also among interdenominational institutions, such as the Federal Council of Churches, the Sunday School Union and similar organizations, seeking such definition of fields and such co-operation in common fields as will prevent waste of money and energy.

The report of the Committee on Home Mission Work was of especial interest. Probably never before were so many people thinking at one time of the problem of evangelizing America and getting an adequate idea of the task involved as during that week. Certainly never before were the columns of the secular press so widely used in the interest of religious work. For the coming year the theme of Immigration has already been announced as the theme for consideration, while preparations are already beginning for one or two years in advance.

The closest accord exists between the Council, and the similar body on Foreign Missions and the Missionary Education Association. This makes easily and cheaply available for all churches, material that would be quite beyond the reach of individual boards. The study of neglected fields made by the Council has proven so valuable in the somewhat limited territory covered, that further work in that line is to be undertaken.

No one could attend the various sessions of the Council without being deeply impressed with the intelligence, poise, sanity, broad charity, deep earnestness and real spiritual life of the men composing it. The spirit of co-operation which is supplanting that of competition in the attitude of the various churches toward their common task, is surely a visible answer to the Master's prayer that "they all may be one."

Brooklyn, New York.

Only Today

The coming year will have three hundred and sixty-five days in its calendar, but really will have only one working day, and that is called "Today." Serve your Master by the day. Each four and twenty hours brings its own duties to be done, its own temptations to be conquered, its own loads to be carried, and its own progress to be made heavenward. There never was a Christian yet strong enough to carry today's duties with tomorrow's worries piled on the top of them. God takes care of us, and yet we can not tell just what tomorrow or the next year will bring forth. So let us sing.—Christian Work.

During the last college year one in seven of all the college men of North America were meeting weekly in voluntary Bible classes.

The Peace Movement Among Friends

[This Department is designed to afford an opportunity for a presentation of important phases of the Peace question, and will welcome correspondence which gives information in regard to the progress of the Peace movement anywhere among Friends, or which reflects clearly the views of any of our readers, younger or older, on this important subject. Such correspondence should be addressed to Allen D. Hole, 615 National Road, West, Richmond, Indiana.]

WHAT WOULD YOU DO?

As a Boy.

Suppose that you were required to begin your training as a soldier as soon as you were eleven and one-half years old.

Suppose that you were required to spend some time every day in being trained in the duties of a soldier.

Suppose that you saw one of your boy friends punished because he did not come to the training grounds; punished by being shut up in a fort, or in a prison.

What would you think about it? And what would you do about it?

The boys in Australia are now required to train for the duties of a soldier in this way, or be punished.

As a Father.

Suppose that you are the father of a boy whose age is between that of eleven and one-half and fourteen years, and suppose that you have taught your boy that shooting men, or getting ready to shoot men is not right.

Suppose that you and your son decide that he need not go to the training ground; and suppose that the laws of your country gave some soldier the right to come and arrest your boy, take him away to a trial by a company of soldiers, and punish him by putting him in a cell in a guard house. What would you think? And what would you wish to do?

And in addition to sending your boy to the guard house or to a fort to imprison him, suppose that the court-martial should also assess upon you a fine of $500.00 because your boy has evaded military service.

And suppose that in addition, although you might decide to appeal from the sentence passed on your boy, you should find that there is no possibility of an appeal from a military decision to a civil court.

Fathers in Australia are now actually living under such laws as have been supposed above.

As a Citizen who believes in Freedom.

Suppose that you lived in a country where the laws made you a member of the militia.

Suppose that other laws defined any lack of obedience to militia regulations as a military offence which might be tried and punished by court-martial.

Suppose that you were not free to move to another part of the state without advising with a military officer.

Suppose that you were under orders "not to attempt to raise a discussion in public about orders, regulations, or instructions issued" by the military officers who were placed over you.

Suppose that the laws of the land prevented you from being employed in any way in service for the state unless you obeyed fully all the military rules and orders which might be made.

Suppose that a military board were to have power to dismiss from his position the principal of any school who did not co-operate fully and heartily in the plans for enforcing the military training of all boys after they reach the age of twelve years.

If you found yourself a citizen in a country where such laws existed, what would you do?

In addition, suppose that you felt that you could not conscientiously help to prepare to carry on the soldier's business, and that your only legal relief was to be found in a law which arranged that those who could not conscientiously bear arms should "so far as possible be allotted to non-combatant duties"; what do you think you would do?

WHAT SOME PEOPLE ARE DOING.

In Australia.

The conditions suggested in the preceding article are practically those under which citizens of Australia have for some time been living; and these conditions still exist there.

Some people in Australia believe that such laws are desirable; otherwise such laws could never have been passed. But many people (and they may prove to be a majority) are protesting with all their might against these laws. Friends and others who believe military training to be wrong are refusing to obey the laws. As a consequence, they are obliged to suffer such penalties as the law provides.

In consequence of the strong opposition which has developed to the "Defence Act," as it is called, the military authorities are not able fully to enforce the law. This opposition is making itself felt in many ways. One way is by the organization of a "Freedom League," membership in which is obtained by signing this brief statement: "I am opposed to compulsory military training." Another way is by public discussion in great mass meetings, as for example, a meeting of two thousand citizens in the Adelaide town hall one evening in last October; at this meeting after spirited discussion, a motion carried by a large majority protesting against the compulsory clauses of the "Defence Act" and pledging the citizens to work for its repeal.

In Canada.

In Canada, too, the people are feeling the pressure of increased demands from the Militia Department, though the situation is as yet far from being as serious as in Australia. But those who favor an expansion of military influence have reached a point where they are urging the desirability of including military training in the program of the schools. They urge considerations such as these:

1. It assists in the physical development of the boys.
2. The boys like military uniforms and military drill.

Some people in Canada are objecting strenuously to these claims. For example, the Toronto Globe says editorially:

1. "To pretend that its purpose (military training) is the physical development of the boys will not do. Uniforms and guns have a definite significance. They minister to the war passion. They signify war."

2. "It is a slander on boy nature to assert that boys naturally take to war and warlike mimicry rather than to peace and peaceful ideals. What a normal boy does take to is adventure and chivalry."

In the United States.

In the United States some people are looking at what has been done in Australia, and at what the Military Department is attempting in Canada, and they are saying: "The United States must not be behind in military preparation."

Have you heard of the effort to introduce rifle practice into the public schools in the United States?

Have you heard of the effort now being made to secure the enactment of a law by the Congress now in session at Washington to improve the militia of the United States? The next article tells something about this effort.

SOMETHING TO BE DONE NOW.

Shall the Government Pay Salaries to Militia Men?

As shown in the January number of The Advocate of Peace, a group of men are busy at work attempting to increase in the United States the strength of the military branch of our government. The specific move now being made to which attention is directed, is the attempt to have passed by Congress a law which will materially increase the militia strength of our nation.

Here are some points which deserve careful attention in this connection:

1. The United States Government is now paying out every year to help the militia in the various states about $5,000,000. This help is in the form of equipment furnished to volunteer militia companies, and assistance in many other ways.

2. The bill now before Congress proposes measures estimated to cost an additional $9,250,000 every year. The help proposed in this bill is largely in the form of salaries to officers and men of militia companies in the several states.

3. If the bill passes, it will mean that thousands of men will receive a considerable sum of money regularly from the Government, with the result that they will become actively interested in every move to increase the strength of the military arm of the Government.

4. If the bill passes, young men will be led to consider the choice of a military career instead of a business career, with the certainty that a very considerable amount of the strength of our nation which now of necessity is expended in useful labor, will be lost to industry; and at best the unproductive exercises of the drill ground will take the place of productive labor.

Our Opportunity: Our Duty.

The Committee on Military Affairs of the House of Representatives is not itself unanimously in favor of this bill.

There are in Congress some members who favor the bill, and some who oppose it.

Will it make any particular difference to us as citizens of the United States whether this bill passes or not? Those who think it is a matter of no particular concern will not be interested in doing anything at this time. Those who are anxious to see the military strength of the nation increased are no doubt writing to their representatives in Congress urging that the bill be passed. Letters to congressmen do have an effect. If, on the other hand, everyone reading this, who is anxious that no further additions be made to our military expenditures, will write a short, clear letter to the representative in Congress from his district, we may be able to save ourselves from an expansion of military power such as Australia is now suffering under.

It is easier to prevent a law from being passed than to secure the repeal of a law already in force.

It is unsafe to assume that a sufficient number of our fellow-citizens will write, so that for us it is not necessary.

In writing refer to bill numbered H. R. 8141, a bill proposing "to further increase the efficiency of the organized militia of the United States."

Policeman or Soldier?

It is often said that a large proportion of the arguments about what are believed to be differences of opinion, would be found to be useless if only the words employed were clearly defined. It seems that there is much fundamental difference of opinion between those who favor and those who oppose the expansion of the military department of the Government, differences which are real and which must be faced without equivocation. But it seems also clear that there is at times much argument about questions which are not real points of difference. For example, there is no thoughtful advocate of peace to be found who would even suggest that we should attempt to do without a police force. Many of the strongest pacifists have been explicit in their statement of opinion as to the necessity of an adequate police force, for cities and for nations. Those who thus approve a capable police department may not always have approved all the methods used by the police in special instances, but on the question of imperative demand for a well organized body of men to maintain order and assist in making personal rights and property rights secure, there is practical unanimity of judgment. Since this is true, why not agree that when men engage in this kind of work they are to be called policemen? The word soldier carries with it a meaning distinctly different from the word policeman; it carries with it greater distinction, higher honor. An officer in command of soldiers is given a place in society which it would be ridiculous to suggest should be granted to a captain of police. The soldier's "profession" is a common phrase; no such term is used concerning the policeman's calling. A wounded soldier commands sympathy throughout his whole life, while similar suffering in the case of a policeman is given but passing notice.

A full discussion of the causes which have operated to give to these two classes of men such different ranks in the popular mind, cannot be undertaken here; but one important consideration is suggested: Policemen have served the citizens in their respective governments; while armies of soldiers have made and unmade governments. Pacifists are ready to say that force should serve, not command. Therefore, let us have policemen—local, national and international; but let us henceforth have no more soldiers.

The Livingstone Centenary

The Committee on Home Base of the Conference of Foreign Mission Boards of the United States and Canada, reported at the recent session of that body, regarding the Livingstone Centenary: "The religious press have offered generous co-operation and have opened their columns for articles. The denominational Sunday-school and young people's organizations will lend the influence of their state, county and township organizations for promotion purposes; the brotherhoods will seek to bring the message of Livingstone to the men; the public libraries of the country will help to bring the Livingstone books to the attention of the general public; many city Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations will give at least a religious meeting to the subject of Livingstone, and an effort will be made to introduce some sort of celebration into the colleges, universities and public schools, especially in the high schools. In addition to all of the above, a widespread publicity campaign has been organized for the secular press, daily and weekly papers, and monthly magazines.

"The advance orders received on December 16th numbered 800,000 copies of books, pamphlets and leaflets. It is expected that large second editions will be required to supply later demands for this material, of which all but one book has been specially prepared for this celebration."

Four hundred and thirty thousand copies of "The Message of Light," an Easter Livingstone Concert program, with 100,000 supplements had been ordered before December 16th. Sample copies of this can be had for 5 cents. In large quantities they are $1.50 per hundred, including 10 copies of the supplement and lithograph of Livingstone. In smaller quantities we can furnish them at 25 cents per dozen, including 5 copies of supplement; the lithograph of Livingstone costs 15 cents extra.

The official announcements are now on hand. We have endeavored to send a copy to some one in each Friends' meeting. Will the one receiving them please confer with other members, and determine what supplies will be wanted. If any meeting fails to receive one, it will be sent when requested. Study carefully the plans suggested, make out a list of supplies desired and order through us at the prices given in the announcement. The supplies marked free will be sent free when accompanied by other orders. If ordered by themselves, please enclose 2 cents each or 5 cents for the four. The missionary baseball, including questions to go with it, costs 10 cents.

Blakie's book has been the standard life of Livingstone heretofore, and has cost $1.50; it is now issued in a 58 cent edition in cloth, postpaid.

An unfortunate statement in the Missionary Advocate is causing some trouble. It said, "All the books mentioned can be had for 58 cents, postpaid." It should have said 58 cents each.

We hope orders may be sent in promptly, as there may be a rush of orders at the last, and a difficulty in filling them promptly. Send all orders to Charles E. Tebbetts, Richmond, Indiana.

Communion With God

Prayer should become our life. The atmosphere we breathe should be an atmosphere of prayer. Our prayer life ever claims the presence of the Great Companion, and no hours are so wretched as those when we fear that we have grieved him, and can no longer have access to him in prayer. It has been well said that the saddest, most pathetic words of Scripture are, "GRIEVE not the Holy Spirit." This we may do by our indifference, our worldliness, our prayerlessness. "Prayerlessness is the insomnia of the soul." No wonder the depression which follows unrested spirits. "Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace whose mind is stayed on thee, because he trusteth in thee." On the other hand, "the beginning of anxiety is the end of faith." Anxiety is the thin end of the wedge which Satan uses to separate us from God if prayerless. Only "he who dwelleth in the secret place of the Most High shall abide under the shadow of the Almighty."

"Saintship is life fronting God," says Dr. J. H. Jowett, that rare interpreter of the things of God to the English-speaking world. How is such an attitude possible without prayer? "Search me and know me, try me and prove me, and see if there be any evil way in me, and lead me in the way everlasting." "Let the meditations of my heart and the words of my lips be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my redeemer." We dare think aloud in the presence of the Great Companion. "All confidences enter into true prayer, and no genuine speaking to God is excluded from its range." The great end of prayer is uninterrupted fellowship with God; this is our true prayer life. If this fails, no true strength is possible, no abiding peace is promised. God must ever be in hailing distance of the human soul that trusts him.—Bishop E. R. Hendrix, at the Federal Council.

The Religious Life of our Colleges

Haverford College—The religious life and activities of Haverford College play a real and most important part in her life as a whole. While a man entering as a Freshman strongly feels an atmosphere of earnest good fellowship pervading the institution, both within and without the class room, he soon realizes more fully the great advantages which he possesses in a religious way. These advantages may or may not be used properly, but their influence can by no means be overlooked. The main point from which all other work and activities of like nature radiate is the Y. M. C. A., an organization carried on entirely by the students. The meetings of this body, held regularly every week, are usually conducted by the president of the organization, who gives the floor to some speaker, prepared for the occasion and procured often at his own wish. The talks are always very earnest and most interesting, especially those from the speakers who feel they have some real message, and probably come voluntarily. These meetings are supplemented strongly by the various organizations for Christian Endeavor and Bible Study, which are not only instituted in the college itself, but spread to other districts surrounding Haverford.

Coopertown, a small country village, has such an organization, carried on entirely by the college men from the Y. M. C. A., and both a Sunday School and weekly gathering flourish there. Small social gatherings are also arranged throughout the year, and whatever talent for amusement the college can produce is used for the entertainments. Another work of similar nature is carried on at Preston, which, like Coopertown, is divided into two different branches. Being nearer to Haverford and more populous than Coopertown, it has larger Sunday School classes in the one division, while in the other division the work consists in managing a large number of boys in gymnasium classes and basketball. The Sunday School division aims to have a social once every month and usually carries through the program with great success. Both sections are very active in their work and open great opportunities for good service.

Two Italian classes add to the social work around the college, and these are conducted by members from the Y. M. C. A. in order to teach any foreigner, who comes, the correct reading and writing of English. Each of these classes has from twenty-five men upwards, who show great eagerness and ability under competent teaching twice every week.

A small boys' Bible Class is also held in Ardmore, a short distance from the college, which promises to grow into two divisions, both of which would require careful and diligent teaching.

Earlham College—The Earlham College Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations are preparing for what many of the members consider the most serious part of their work, a series of special meetings.

Arrangements have been made with Albert J. Brown of Wilmington, Ohio, to lead the meetings among the men in Bundy Dormitory. The arrangements for a leader for the young women have not yet been completed.

That the effect of these meetings may be the most powerful and lasting, everything is being done among the students that is possible in preparation for them. Altogether there are 236 members of the two associations out of 240 students in the dormitories. Of these 173 belong to mission classes and 189 to Bible classes. Special prayer circles and groups have been formed in every hall of the dormitories.

The work of the Christian Associations in other lines is indicative of vital strength and power. Three of the members of the Y. W. C. A. teach mission classes in home missions in Richmond, while eight of the members of the Y. M. C. A. are sent out as preachers to local Friends churches. Six of the Bible class leaders are students. Each Association supports either a Japanese or a Chinese student in the foreign mission fields, and the Y. M. C. A. sent out a gospel team of four students, Francis Anscombe, Lester Wood, Everett Davis and Fred Emerson, for evangelistic work during the holidays.

Penn College—Two gospel teams, made up of five young men each, from Penn College Y. M. C. A., were engaged in evangelistic work during the holidays. Each team held a series of eleven meetings, one at Springdale, the other at Gilman, Iowa. Public meetings were held on First-days and evenings through the week. The days were spent in personal work by calling on people in their homes and talking of spiritual things, especially of Christianity as applied to daily living.

The results of these efforts were about thirty professed conversions, and the revival in spiritual life of many members of the churches in those communities.

Thirty-five gospel teams were out at work during the holidays from nineteen colleges in Iowa.

Zeno H. Doan, pastor of Friends Church at Lynnville, Iowa, recently spent four days at Penn College, January 14-17, in the interest of Christian work among the students. He addressed the students at two chapel exercises, and spoke before a joint meeting of the Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations; he met the cabinets of the two associations, and the members of the Volunteer Band, also held private interviews with many students who desired to confer about questions bearing on their own religious life or talk over problems of their life work. His work at the college brought a great blessing to many, and was very highly appreciated by both students and faculty.

Whittier College—A Y. M. C. A. Conference on Christian Leadership was held at Whittier College recently. About seventy-five young men from the four other colleges of Southern California were in attendance, and all together the registration was about one hundred and thirty. There is the best of fellowship among these colleges. In all five sessions were held and a banquet on Saturday night. More than a dozen principal addresses were given and the discussions were participated in by the students generally, showing that college young men are alive and active to the Christian problems of the day. This has been a great uplift to the students at Whittier College and the boys thought they were entertained royally by the citizens of Whittier. Three Seminary Presidents were in attendance, two College Presidents and two Y. M. C. A. Secretaries. The spiritual life and Christian activity in the college is very encouraging.

Pacific College—The past weeks have seen some very decided advances in the spiritual life of the students of Pacific College, Newberg, Oregon. No special meetings are being held, but in the regular services at the Friends meeting house, in the dormitory and in the Christian Association meetings, several conversions and renewals have taken place, consecrations have been made and the power of God has been clearly manifested.

The Friends Bible School at Wilmington, Ohio, beat its record last quarter. The average attendance for the quarter was 275, and two-thirds of these are adults.

At Bloomingdale, Indiana, Monthly Meeting on January 15th, two persons were received into membership. The local mid-week meeting is reported as growing in interest.

Enos Harvey, who is so ably serving as pastor in Bloomingdale, Indiana, has charge of the Bible classes in the academy in that place. New interest is manifested in this line of work among the students.

Jos. Elkinton and wife, of Philadelphia, spent a few days early in January at Guilford College, N. C. Their public service was both instructive and edifying. They departed for Tuskegee, Alabama, on January 13.

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of Bloomingdale, Indiana, has adopted the Calendar Plan of raising money for the Building Fund for the foreign field. Each month in turn seeks to interest a new group of people in the work.

A. M. Gibson and wife have begun pastoral work in Mt. Ayr Quarterly Meeting, near Alton, Kansas. They are engaged at present in a revival effort at the Mt. Ayr Meeting. Their address henceforth will be R. F. D. No. 3, Alton, Kansas.

On January 12th the C. E. Society of Spiceland, Indiana, visited the Friends C. E. Society at New Castle. Following a union prayer meeting, Morton C. Pearson, of Indianapolis, gave a helpful address upon the responsibilities and opportunities of our young people.

The Friends of Fairmount, Indiana, Monthly Meeting have ordered twenty copies of the new book, "The Message and Mission of Quakerism," and expect to start a Round Table study of it in the near future. The members are taking up the new lines of activity suggested by the recent Five Years Meeting.

The first semester of the Pacific College year was opened with the largest enrollment for eight or ten years past. Already there is assurance of a still further increase at the opening of the second semester, February 10th. As a result of the campaign inaugurated last spring the college is still receiving valuable additions to the hundreds of books already given by Friends to the college library. A number of improvements to the college property have recently been made.

The following item of news taken from "Friends Fellowship Papers" for January will be of interest to many Friends on this side of the Atlantic: "John S. Hoyland left England on December 12th for India. He hopes to be with Friends at Hoshangabad for the New Year, before going to Delhi for further training. His address for the present will be 'Friends' Mission, Hoshangabad, C. P., India'."

At Spiceland, Indiana, Monthly Meeting, held January 4th, seven new members were received by request, two by certificate, and one by letter from another denomination. Four children belonging to these families were received into associate membership at the request of their parents. All of these members were brought into the meeting through the agency of a young married people's Sabbath School class which was organized and is taught by George C. Levering, the pastor.

M. Edwin Johnson, an evangelist of St. Louis, and Merritt A. Stipp, a singing evangelist of Indianapolis, are conducting a successful revival at the present time at Noblesville, Ind. The leading editor of a daily paper was among the first converts. The people are manifesting great faith in prayer and great good is being done for the entire city. Mr. Stipp is the son of John B. Stipp, pastor of the Second Friends Church of Indianapolis. They go from Noblesville to Paunee, Ill.

Farmington Quarterly Meeting was held at Collins, New York, January 17-19. Owing to bad weather the meeting was not as well attended as usual, but it was a time of interest in spiritual things. Most of the ministers of the Quarterly Meeting were present, and spoke with deep interest relative to work in this particular field. On Sabbath evening Lester C. Haworth, one of the secretaries of the Y. M. C. A. in Buffalo, was present and delivered a message which was inspiring and helpful. He spoke on the subject, "What is Christianity?" and was especially appreciated by men who are not Christians.

Arthur and Eliza F. Dann, of England, held a series of meetings for a week at Spring Garden Street Meeting in Greensboro, N. C., early in January. They preached the gospel as it had been heard in former years from Joseph Bevan Breathwait, Stanley Pumphrey and Henry Stanley Newman. Their messages were based upon the Bible and they preached the baptism of the Holy Ghost, as a second work of grace, and the pre-millennial coming of Christ. They warned "against the wiles of the devil," and "to flee the wrath to come." The meetings grew larger from the first and many were brought into a better religious experience.

The committee on young people's activities of Wilmington Yearly Meeting, of which Clayton Terrell is chairman, held its first week-end meeting at Dover, Ohio, January 19-20. There were three sessions in all. This was the first meeting of its kind ever held in the Yearly Meeting, and was attended with excellent results. The program consisted of lectures on the principles of Friends, essays on the application of Friends doctrines to daily life, and selections from Whittier. A basket dinner was served at the noon meal on the 20th, affording a pleasant social occasion. A large attendance and fine enthusiasm prevailed throughout the meetings.

Edward Coventry, clerk of Victoria Monthly Meeting, British Columbia, writes us that "The Peace and Arbitration Society of Canada" has been recently organized at Victoria, and that so far as they can learn it is the only organization of like character in the Dominion. The organization grew out of a discussion at a recent local meeting of the Society of Friends, and it was deemed advisable to do something before the Canadian government had plunged headlong into a war-like policy involving millions of dollars.

The following has been received from a member of Brooklyn Friends Meeting, New York City: "Robert E. Pretlow surprised Brooklyn Friends by informing the members of the pastoral committee at its last session, that he felt his work in connection with Brooklyn Meeting would be completed when on the first of September next he would have served the meeting for seven years as pastor. His remarkable fitness, combined with faithful work in the church, have endeared him to the membership. His departure will mean a great loss to Brooklyn Meeting and also to New York Monthly Meeting. Since he has been at Brooklyn, he has found an open door for work in connection with ministers of other denominations. He has been prominently connected with the Men and Religion Forward Movement, the New York Federation of Churches and other movements of like character. With his broad vision of the church at large, its needs and possibilities, we trust that a wider field of usefulness awaits him elsewhere."

Our Friends, Arthur and Eliza F. Dann, came to Guilford College, N. C., on January 13 and spent some days in religious service. Arthur Dann spoke in the college chapel each morning to the faculty and students, and preached each evening in the large new meeting house, and on Sabbath in the forenoon and evening to large and attentive audiences. His preaching was in the demonstration of the spirit and with power. He manifested the evangelistic spirit most earnestly, basing his messages upon Jesus Christ, who was declared to be the very son of God as He himself claimed in the Scriptures. Believers were instructed and encouraged and sinners were convicted, some claiming conversion. Eliza F. Dann conducted Bible readings in the afternoons. These were times of confirmation and refreshing. They left on January 20 by way of Tuskegee, Alabama, for Los Angeles, California. On their way to the railroad station they each planted a memorial rose-bush at the grave of Harriett Green in the New Garden cemetery.

East Vassalboro Round Table met on the afternoon of Sabbath, January 12, and discussed the lives of several of the worthy progenitors of Quakerism. Some of the less frequently mentioned characteristics of George Fox were treated in an interesting and profitable manner. The author of the papers certainly avoided the beaten paths and presented a fresh vision of the Friends' great founder. The discussion of the life of Margaret Fell revealed her strong personality by excerpts from her biography with discriminating comments thereon. Margaret Fell conserved much of the result of George Fox's labor and proved herself a wise helpmeet, worthy of her noted husband. Her home became the clearing house of early Friends. A teacher from Oak Grove kindly consented to add some remarks on the life of Penn and spoke in a helpful way of Penn as a factor in founding the Society of Friends. Penn evidently was the organizer of the movement and fused the best elements of early Quakerism into forms of practical use.

A Gracious Welcome

Friends at Richmond, Indiana, joined in a hearty welcome to the AMERICAN FRIEND, its editor and Board of Publication, on the evening of January 22d. A committee of two of each of the four Friends Meetings in the city arranged for the occasion. It was a time to be remembered and its impress will be felt not only by the AMERICAN FRIEND, but by the entire membership in the city of Richmond.

At 6:30 o'clock the Ladies Aid Society of East Main Street Meeting served a delightful supper in the basement of the meeting house, with more than 200 persons present. Four members of the Publication Board had been in session during the afternoon and were present at the reception. Following the supper, John H. Johnson, of the committee on arrangements, and local member of the Publication Board, called the gathering to order, and after a few well chosen words, introduced Timothy Nicholson, well known to all Friends everywhere, as master of ceremonies. After a short address in which he voiced the appreciation of all at the coming to Richmond of the Boards of the Five Years Meeting, and spoke of what it would mean to Quakerism in the city, he introduced Robert L. Kelly, President of Earlham College, who gave a formal address of welcome and set forth something of the meaning of the recent Five Years Meeting.

He was followed by Alvin T. Coate of Indianapolis, President of the Publication Board; S. E. Nicholson, Editor and Manager of the AMERICAN FRIEND, Ellison R. Purdy of Wilmington, Ohio, Isaac T. Johnson of Urbana, Ohio, members of the Publication Board; Allen D. Hole, Chairman of the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting, and Charles E. Tebbetts, Secretary of the Foreign Mission Board.

A solo by Miss Agnes Kelly was much appreciated. It was stated that this was the first time Richmond Friends have endeavored to unite in any function, religious or social, and it is believed that the occasion will mark the beginning not only of greater activities on the part of all the Richmond meetings, but will give a sympathetic setting which will be an inspiration to the AMERICAN FRIEND now located in their midst.

The AMERICAN FRIEND certainly feels grateful for this expression of welcome on the part of Richmond Friends.

Bible School Lesson

FEBRUARY 9.

SUBJECT—God's Covenant with Noah.
LESSON—Genesis IX, 8-17. Read Genesis VIII and IX. Commit IX:15, 16.

GOLDEN TEXT—"I do set my bow in the cloud, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth."
—Genesis IX, 13.

NOTE.—The notes on the International Bible School lessons will be resumed as soon as arrangements can be made.

The Christian Endeavor

TOPIC—The Ideal Christian. II.—His Zeal. II Cor. VI:1-10. (Consecration Meeting.)

The Christian Endeavor topics are so arranged for 1913, that the first lesson for each month is on some practical phase of the general subject, "The Ideal Christian." This month, the "zeal" of the ideal Christian is considered as a theme worthy of the Christian's hope and aspirations.

The leader can recall various Bible characters, who have been zealous in their work for God, whose energy and determination have been their special characteristics. The thought may be directed also to men and women in modern history whose earnestness and zeal in behalf of some great purpose, have stirred communities, municipalities, and nations.

Zeal without knowledge consumes energy to no wise purpose, but consecrated to the service of the Master, becomes a quality to be fostered and emulated.

Zeal to succeed in living a life that will meet the approval of the Father should ever be encouraged. Men should be as ambitious to succeed in the Christian life, as in business or in any of the affairs of this world.

Zeal applied to the betterment of the community or the municipality, is energy that will be crowned with blessing. The spirit of helping somebody else will bring its own reward.

Zeal to make the Christian Endeavor prayer meeting an occasion of life and power to all who attend, and zeal to make the Society minister to the building up of the church itself, is effort that will bring joy and gladness to every heart.

Zeal to make one's life count for the most in the family, in the church, in society, in politics, in the state, will yield a blessed fruition that will enrich the lives of a multitude.

The service should close with an earnest period of consecration and prayer, in which each individual soul should pour out its needs to God, vocally or in secret thought, waiting for the witness of the Spirit upon the dedication that is pledged.

With the Children

In our planning that has come as the result of the awakening that is upon the Society of Friends, may we not be in danger of overlooking the children? Some may feel that we cannot develop every department at once. But the gifts of our membership are diversified, and we are sure that the burden of the children's welfare is upon many hearts.

Much is being done in almost every community in the Sabbath Schools and in Junior departments, but these activities for the most part lack system and continuity so far as the entire church is concerned.

We invite brief, pointed suggestions for this page as to ways and means of interesting and developing the children in the religious life. Many are using plans that are successful. Let others hear about them.

More important still, we solicit little statements, illustrative of truth which will interest the children and appeal to them, whether they be original or clipped from other periodicals. We may not be able to use all, but we want live, helpful matter, that will be read by the children.

Meanwhile we appeal to the children to busy themselves in the Sabbath School, and in kindly deeds at home and at school that will bring the smile of Jesus upon their lives.

What the Minutes Say

We are but minutes, little things—
Each one furnished with sixty wings,
With which we fly on our unseen track;
And not a minute ever comes back.

We are but minutes: Each one bears
A little burden of joys and cares;
Take patiently the minutes of pain;
The worst of minutes cannot remain.

We are but minutes. When we bring
A few of the drops from pleasure's spring,
Taste their sweetness while we may;
It takes but a minute to fly away.

We are but minutes. Use us well;
For how we are used we must one day tell.

Who uses minutes, has hours to use;
Who loses minutes, whole years must lose.

How Eddie Preached

"When I get big enough, I'm going to be a preacher," said Eddie one day.

"What is a preacher?" said grandma. Eddie looked surprised. "Don't you know what a preacher is? A preacher is a man that tells people what the Bible means. And he says, 'Firstly, my brethren,' and everybody listens to him. It's nice to have people listen to you."

Grandma smiled. "I think you are big enough to preach now," she said.

"Really and truly, grandma?" asked the little boy.

"Yes; really and truly."

"I'm afraid not," said Eddie, after a few minutes of thought, "or I'd know how, and I don't."

"What does the preacher do first?" asked grandma.

"He takes a text, and then 'splains it. I can't do that."

"Oh, yes, you can!" said grandma. "Here is a good text for you to explain: 'Be kind one to another.'"

"There's nothing to 'splain 'bout that," said Eddie. "You just be kind to everybody, and that's all there is to it."

"A good text, though, for my little preacher's first sermon. I should like to hear him preach from it for a week."

"Preach a week? Why, grandma, I can't."

"Can't you be kind to everybody you meet for a week?"

Eddie looked thoughtful. "Would that be preaching?" he asked.

"It would—the very best kind. A good preacher has to preach in that way, or people will not listen to what he says in the pulpit."

"Well," said Eddie, with a sigh, "I suppose I can try; but I wasn't thinking 'bout that kind of preaching."

"You'll be showing everybody what that verse in the Bible means, you know," said grandma.

"It's not kind to the teacher to whisper in school," said Eddie the next day; and he did not whisper once.

"It's not kind to Bridget to play along the road and keep my dinner waiting, either," and he hurried home from school.

"It's not being kind to mamma when I don't do errands promptly," he said; and he did quickly and well whatever he was bidden.

Every day he thought about what was kind, and tried to do it.

The end of the week came.

"How do you like preaching?" asked grandma.

"Why, I like it; but, grandma, I guess everybody must have been preaching 'bout that text, for everybody has been so kind to me."—The Mayflower.

The Books of the Bible

How many books are there in the Bible? Here is one good way to remember. First, write down the words, "Old Testament." Now, how many letters are in the word "Old"? Three. How many in the word "Testament"? Nine. Put three and nine together and have 39—the number of books in the Old Testament.

Next write down the words, "New Testament." There are also in "New" and "Testament" 3 and 9 letters. Multiply 3 by 9 and you have 27—the number of books in the New Testament. By adding 39 and 27, you have 66—the number of books in the Bible.

Philanthropy, Temperance and Social Ethics

During recent years there has been considerable private consideration of plans among the friends of reform in all denominations, in favor of establishing chairs in some of our leading colleges for technical instruction upon social and reform subjects. The importance of this may not at first thought be readily apparent. When one considers, however, that many phases of social and philanthropic work as well as certain lines of moral reform have been reduced practically to a science, to be studied with pains-taking care, the importance of this subject cannot be open to question.

At a recent meeting of the Board of Trustees of Earlham College, Richmond, Indiana, the following was presented and accepted:

"Be it resolved, that the Board of Trustees and Faculty consent to the founding of a new Chair in Earlham College to be known as the Chair of Philanthropy, Temperance and Social Ethics. This action is taken with the understanding that the Friends of the college interested in this new department shall secure an endowment fund of not less than $30,000, and place it at the disposal of the trustees, the interest only on said fund to be used for the maintenance of this department. This fund may be enlarged by other gifts, by will or otherwise through the years.

"It is fully understood by the trustees and all donors that the department shall consistently teach the following subjects:

"First. Scientific and Medical Temperance, showing the effect of alcohol, nicotine, and other narcotics on the human system, for general information, and that teachers may be prepared to teach this subject in the schools.

"Second. The relation of Intemperance to labor, accidents, poverty, crime, insanity, and other diseases, and also to the economic development of the country.

"Third. Approved methods of Philanthropic work in all its phases, with a view of reducing the dependency and delinquency of the depressed and defective classes.

"Fourth. The work of charities through the township, county, city and state, including the department of the state and city Humane Societies.

"Fifth. The general attitude and responsibility of the student and citizens toward the work of good citizenship and the progress of the great moral movements and reforms, to the end that this American Nation may be made a righteous nation."

Following this action, on January 17th, the temperance committees of Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings met in joint session in the Y. M. C. A. building at Indianapolis, Indiana, and spent considerable time in discussing this whole question. After the fullest consideration the action of the Earlham Board was heartily approved, and the committees will give assistance in every way possible to the creation of the endowment fund necessary to establish this chair of instruction, and to the practical operation of the department, when it shall have been created.

Message from Saskatchewan

Editor THE AMERICAN FRIEND:

During the year 1912, according to immigration reports of Canada, more than 200,000 Americans came into the Dominion of Canada. Some of this number no doubt were Friends. Some of these Friends have purchased land in the Swarthmore Friends Settlement and no doubt others would have located here had they known of such a community.

We are sending a great number of pamphlets to teachers located in different parts of the United States that they may be able to inform any that may be coming to Canada this spring, concerning our location. We will be glad to give any information to those who will write us. Direct all correspondence to Ernest Howard, Swarthmore, Saskatchewan, Canada.

A California Appeal

Editor THE AMERICAN FRIEND.

Just a few words to any Friends who anticipate a few months stay in beautiful California or who think of making it your future home. San Jose is situated in one of the richest valleys in the state and is said to have a most perfect climate. The Friends Church here needs you. It is small at present but has large and growing opportunities. You will find a place in the work and can be of use to God in building up the Kingdom.

California is now the gate-way of the world, and the tread of millions upon millions pours the nations at her feet. California is the world's melting pot and San Jose has her share of the momentous responsibility. The Friends Church must have her part in this great work. No other Yearly Meeting has a like opportunity. Do not settle where there is already a large Friends' meeting and where you will be a "hanger on," but find a needy place in the vineyard where He may graciously use you in winning souls.

OPEN THOU MINE EYES

By MRS. R. M. MOODY

OPEN my eyes that I may see
And understand more perfectly Thy wondrous Word.
That on my path Thy lamp may shine,
A light to guide these feet of mine
To Thee, dear Lord.

Open my eyes! Oh, take my hand!
Lest I should fail to understand.
Lest my poor stumbling feet should stray
Far from the straight and narrow way.
Oh, be to me, dear Lord, so near
That my dull ears may plainly hear
The word that Thou doth to me say,
"Walk here, my child. This is the way."

Open my eyes, Thy Word to know.
Make it a lamp whose steady glow
Will shine with clearer, brighter light,
Rightly dividing wrong from right.
Open my eyes, my ears, my heart,
That I may choose "the better part."

Editorial Comment Upon Current Topics of the Day

While the decision to do away with the inaugural ball at Washington has caused a flutter in so-called society, the action of the president-elect will be sustained by the sober thought of the Nation. It is in the interest of good morals, good economics and good health. The incoming chief magistrate has set a precedent that should become permanent.

President Taft has declared in favor of arbitrating the differences that have arisen with England over the Panama toll rate question, but refuses to consent to the arbitrament of the Hague tribunal. This is on the ground that equity cannot be secured from a Court of Nations who are interested parties to the controversy. We take it that the peace-loving public will not be technical about the personnel of the Court of Arbitration, but they will insist that differences of this character shall be subjected to the examination and settlement of some adequate tribunal.

At this writing the fate of Turkey is apparently in the balance. The allies have grown discouraged, and have withdrawn from the peace conference. The young Turks, who have assumed control of affairs, are preparing to appeal to the Powers, supposedly in the hope of retaining Adrianople. The Germans are reported to be ready to back Turkey as against any proposal to disturb any Asiatic interests. But for the hope of intervention by the powers, and the fear of the consequences which has taken possession of them, the elimination of Turkey from Europe would already have been accomplished.

The issue of Philippine independence is being raised again with the incoming of a new administration. Undoubtedly it is a vexed and somewhat complex problem, but without reference to the justice of the cause that brought the islands into our possession originally, the United States can hardly escape the responsibility of civilizing and Christianizing the people, now that we have been given jurisdiction over them. It will be deplorable if in the end, partisanship shall supercede our moral obligations toward a people who in large part are yet in heathen darkness. When through civilizing influences the Philipinos are capable of self-government their independence should be recognized, but to turn a semi-civilized population over to try the experiment of popular rule, is a fearful responsibility, which the United States cannot afford to assume.

The future status of Albania in view of the Balkan-Turko disturbance, is a disquieting question to the nearby powers. If its autonomy shall be established, it may later be taken over, either by Italy or Austria, or it may become so powerful as to be a menace to both. Russian influences are against autonomy and are said to favor the division of Albania among the allies friendly to Russia. On the other hand, Italian sentiment favors self-government for the little country. The fact is that but for the doubt existing in the minds of the great powers as to what a Balkan victory will mean for the future, Turkey weeks ago would have been dismembered, and the independence of Albania would have been assured.

The offences for which Judge Archbald was recently expelled from the Commerce Court by an almost unanimous vote of the United States Senate, seem to the average mind a lack of proper usage of common sense, more than any intention to do a corrupt thing. It is remarkable that a man in his position would have so little regard for the ordinary proprieties of official procedure, that he would attempt to negotiate for purposes of personal gain with corporations who are prospective litigants before his court. If nothing else has been gained, the judiciary has been taught a lesson in propriety, that will go far toward removing temptation from the honest judge and safeguarding the interests of the public.

The liquor interests and certain officers of the army are engaged in their annual task of trying to restore the army canteen. They are expecting a gullible public to believe that with the canteen, conditions around the army posts are vastly improved. Were this true, it would be wholly due to the fact that the trade outside is transferred to the inside of the post. The fact is, however, and the experience was well nigh universal, that the canteen served to whet the appetite, that was only satiated by a worse drunken debauch in the dives outside. These dives were there, surrounding every post, while the canteen existed. The remedy is not to restore the canteen, but for the government to utilize the recreation houses, which have been erected, to better advantage, and for the government to co-operate with the states in securing legislation that will abolish all outside saloons from the vicinity of the army camps.

Notwithstanding all that has been said about the so-called money trust, and the need of reformation in currency matters, it is doubtful if the public at large is greatly interested. Business men are inclined to look upon the subject as a banker's problem, while aside from a few currency agitators the masses appear to have little concern. This may be due to a lack of understanding the details, or it may result from a disinclination to mix in intricate political questions. By and by a panic will come along, and then popular interest will busy itself to find out how to prevent panics, and will keep at it—until the panic is over. In the midst of prosperity is the time to master the details of the currency problem.

As an indication of the spirit of Christian unity and fellowship now prevalent throughout America, the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church, North, will convene at Atlanta, Georgia, at the same time that the General Assembly of the Southern Presbyterian Church will meet in the same city. This does not necessarily mean the reuniting of these branches of Presbyterianism, but it is indicative of the fraternal spirit that is developing between two erstwhile unfriendly religious bodies. This recalls the story as related by Bishop Samuel Fallows, of the Reformed Episcopal Church, at the Federal Council of Churches meeting in Chicago, to the effect that as an Episcopalian he effected the organization of a Congregational Church in a community in North Dakota, where representatives of six denominations agreed upon this action. It is not a bad guess that within a decade the two great branches of Methodism, possibly including a third branch, will amalgamate into one body. The tendency of the age is toward unity and federation, wherein all are brethren together, called of God for a common mission—the evangelization of the world.

The Inheritance of Humble Living

"Blessed are the meek."

To the natural mind, God's laws often seem paradoxical. Frequently they are the antipodes of the philosophy of men. Partaking of the infinite in purpose and plan, they set up new standards of ethics, create new ideals, and establish new regulations for human conduct.

Frequently the law of opposites seems to govern in the realm of morals and religion. To be humble, is to be strong; to be pious, is to be mighty; to be simple, is to be great; to be unselfish, is to be victorious; to be gentle, is to be influential; to be patient, is to be endowed with power; to be meek, is to inherit the earth.

Some one has said that "the greatest truths are the simplest, and so are the greatest men." It is a reconstructed philosophy that accords with the Divine plan. Men are learning that a vital piety is their strongest asset, not only as religionists, but as men of affairs. He who has the simplicity to get nearest the heart of the masses, and the gentleness with which to win them in sympathetic relationships, easily becomes the leader of the multitudes and sways them as with a scepter.

The fruits of the spirit, as catalogued in the letter to the Galatians, are the essential characteristics of those who would be soul winners for Christ. "God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the things which are mighty." "Whosoever, therefore, shall humble himself as this little child, the same is greatest in the kingdom of Heaven." "When I am weak, then I am strong." God wants servants in His harvest field, who, conscious of their own weakness, draw from the fount of power and of blessing and become strong for every good work. God wants a church, which in humility seeks the enduement of power from on high, that it may be equipped for its great mission of world evangelization. "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." It is the promised dowry of the church universal, that harmonizes its life and its operations with the law of Jehovah.

Our Privileges and Responsibilities in Prayer

In a recent editorial we endeavored to emphasize the necessity of the spirit of prayer, which should pervade both our individual and denominational life. We are unable to get away from the impression that a repetition of this emphasis is important.

While believing that God will not do for man that which he can and ought to do for himself, nevertheless, in common with all Christians, we as a denomination hold steadfastly to the obligations that are upon us of praying to the Father for the bestowal of blessings, personal and collective, which are His responses to the conscious needs of His children. "Prayer is the outcome of our sense of need, and of our continual dependence upon God," is the utterance of the Richmond Declaration of Faith. This document further declares that "A life without prayer is a life practically without God. The Christian's life is a continual asking. The thirst that prompts the petition produces, as it is satisfied, still deeper longings, which prepare for yet more bounteous supplies, from Him who delights to bless."

This declaration is sound fundamentally either as applied to secret, individual prayer, or to the spoken supplication in the meeting for worship. It deals, however, with prayer in the abstract.

Our concern is for the realization in concrete form of the blessings of communion with God. This realization will come as the necessary consequence of being in the spirit of prayer, while the spirit of supplication will envelop the soul that is ever conscious of needs which human energies alone cannot supply.

The form of prayer may be a mockery of idle words, or the pleading of a selfish soul for favors that will satisfy merely the human propensities. Such petitions are merely the form of prayer, and are not even related to real heart communion with the Father.

As a denomination we have entered upon a new era; we are facing new responsibilities and new duties.

Whether we wish it or not, American Friends cannot blot out the record of the last Five Years Meeting at Indianapolis, nor can we obliterate the vision that came to the church there assembled in its representative capacity. We may turn aside and refuse arbitrarily, or fail through ignorance to go forward into the promised possessions. While retaining the same name, the same form, the same polity, and the same doctrines, yet essentially we occupy a different relationship to our mission and the problems growing out of it than we did before. We cannot stand again where we stood prior to that event, without a serious loss in energy and prestige. We cannot go backward without suffering the penalties of the unfaithful and disobedient; nor, having seen the vision of a larger life and heard the command to "go forward," dare we stand still.

We would not be misunderstood. We have not become a new denomination. That is not a factor to be contemplated. We are the same body, with the same tenets, and the same faith. But we face new obligations, and our commission as a church has been broadened.

What is to be the character of our life and service henceforth, will depend in the first instance upon the degree of our faith and our willingness to be led by Him who declared "I am the Way." And this is the burden of our heart, that the Society of Friends, individually and collectively, shall not turn aside from the path of duty but in true humility, implore the Divine guidance with a persistence that will take no denial.

Who can know the magnitude of the possibilities that are ours, if only every member of our body were found in the spirit of prayer during the coming weeks, diligent in seeking to know the Divine will? Let us pray that the unity that was so manifest at Indianapolis will envelop our entire membership; that the revival spirit may permeate every Yearly Meeting to the remotest meeting within our borders; that we may be willing to be led into the open door that has been set before us; that wisdom and direction may be given to all our organized endeavors; that light may dissolve the darkness of doubt or uncertainty that may linger in any mind; that God's blessed presence may be realized in every heart; and that the power of the Divine Father may come upon the Church in its entirety as a Holy benediction.

We cannot go forward without the conscious presence of Jehovah, leading as by the pillar of cloud by day and the pillar of fire by night. It is a time for self-surrender, for complete dedication; that we may be set apart for the Master's service. In the meetings for worship, at the family altar, in the secret chamber of communion, let us pray for that full preparation and equipment that will enable us to enter into the full inheritance of blessing that belongs to the obedient children of a Divine Father. "Pray without ceasing. In everything give thanks; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you."

Editorial Notes and Comment

The Kenyon-Sheppard Bill

This measure, designed to protect prohibitory territory in the several states against the unlawful interstate traffic in intoxicants, will come to a vote in the United States Senate on February 10th. This is the occasion toward which temperance activities have been tending for more than twenty years. Now that the goal seems so near, nothing should be left undone to insure a decisive victory. Friends are a small denomination, but it would count tremendously, if every reader of the AMERICAN FRIEND would write or telegraph his or her United States Senator in behalf of the pending bill, and get at least one other person to do the same. The member of the House should also be appealed to, but this can be done by letter. Now is the time for all Friends to do a practical thing for temperance reform.

Thanking Our Friends

The management of the AMERICAN FRIEND finds it quite impossible to respond personally to every note of congratulation and good wishes which has found its way into the office during the past month. The accumulation of office details has rendered this impracticable. We take this occasion, therefore, to express our deep appreciation of these kindly messages that have come from far and near. They are all the more welcome, coming at a time when we have been well nigh overwhelmed with the task, and the responsibilities which it imposes. The management implores continued patience while important matters of detail are being worked out, and above all asks the constant sympathy, prayers and co-operation of all our membership.

If Christian men would cease being content with merely doing some thing, and be more concerned about doing the right thing, their efforts would be more effective. Well directed service always counts.

Theories have no standing room in the face of a fact. The consciousness of peace that comes to a redeemed soul is worth all the philosophies of the ages.

Comparing the American and English Methods of Quakerism

[The following article from Clarence E. Pickett, a young American Friend, who spent last summer in England, is copied from the January edition of "Friends Fellowship Papers." The comparison of methods, and the analysis of their effects will be interesting to AMERICAN FRIEND readers.]

In the three months' association with English Friends the most outstanding impression is the splendid feeling of fellowship among both young and old. Whether it be a little group of Friends who have collected in a home to meet the "American Team"; or in a Summer Lecture School where Young Friends are met for study; or at one of the Tramps where the very shibboleth is comradeship; or at Woodbrooke where the ideal of fellowship is so beautifully practised and so impressively transmitted, it makes little difference. Fellowship is the most apparent trait. Seldom do two young Friends meet but the first thing one hears is the recalling of a former happy experience which they have had in common, and together they live over that former meeting as a prelude to a deeper fellowship at the present. * * *

The meeting for worship, with English Friends, is a meeting for work. Ideally, each one who attends a meeting for worship comes with a concern for the meeting. Together he meets with his co-worshippers and co-workers; together they perform the work of the meeting, not by delegated, but through individual service. We "Pastoral" Friends may insist that our meetings are more scattered, that our Young Friends are less highly educated, that we have suffered from separations, above which we have not yet arisen,—all of these are true and figure largely in our problem. But we realize that in the passing of the purely democratic form of meeting, we have laid ourselves open to the danger of surrendering one of the chief methods of fostering fellowship. * * *

When one approaches the Meeting for Worship, he enters the very citadel of English Quakerism. And far be it from anyone who has entered into the spirit of a true Friends' Meeting, to criticise its value, or slightly estimate its worth to the participants. Of course, there are dead meetings; so there are everywhere. We speak now only of those which live, which are not the dead semblance of the glory which once existed, but which are living and active. Such meetings are a true Communion Service. More than that, they are the dynamo which electrifies the whole Society. They are the inspiration point of the friendly life. At least, this they are meant to be,—this they are to some.

The point at which the Pastoral Friend begins to ask questions is when he discovers Adult Schools of two hundred men,—busy, practical men of the world,—held on Sunday morning, and followed by a Friends' Meeting for Worship, at which perhaps a paltry half dozen of that enthusiastic artisan class may possibly remain. He begins to ask why, and he finds that the hearty welcome which is accorded these workers in the Adult School is supplemented in the Meeting by—no greeting at all. He finds further that if such men should desire to partake in worship and membership with this select company, they must serve a long apprenticeship. Then, if he begins a comparison with his own meeting, he recalls that the chief part of the membership of the Pastoral Meetings comes from this tabooed class. It is then that he begins to enquire whether this beautiful, quiet meeting is filling the whole place that such a meeting should fill; if such a meeting may not become supremely selfish. Of course, the Pastoral Friend must always remember that there are class distinctions in England, so bound up with tradition that they figure largely in any system of worship. Such class distinction we have little of in our rural communities. Yet we cannot help feeling that there is something selfish about a system which does not welcome these hardy men into its fellowship and into its worship, even though they may dilute the solution. Those who by education and temperament naturally prefer undefined organization and untabulated results of Christian service will find their place easily in the English method. But minds dulled by the monotonous toil of everyday life demand more specific organization, more tenable evidences of religion, more concrete spoken truths. While the Pastoral Friend may not have held so closely to the ideal form of worship for some, he may also feel that he has let a great army of useful, practical men into the full fellowship with the Society, which he would by no means rule out for the sake of a few more highly developed specimens. The society which does not evangelize is not an ideal type of Christian society. Evangelism, to be effective, must have a definite objective, and at least some tenable organization. No diffuse object or mere spiritual organization will appeal to the work-a-day man. While we of the Pastoral System may have yielded too completely to the cardinal American sin of over-organization, we feel that English Friends have weakened their work among this class, by too mystical a conception of organization and message. The grim fear of form may become as destructive as too much form is deadening.

In conclusion, let me say that I have been frank both in appreciation and in criticism. It remains to suggest what seems to be the fundamental difference between English and American (Pastoral) Friends. I believe that we have in mind two different goals. The one is to build up a society of spiritually elite which shall be tremendously powerful out of all proportion to its numbers, in the community in which it exists. It shall not, however, admit to its fellowship those who will dilute its strength, even though it might be helpful to them. It can never hope to be a large body. It can only hope to draw together those of the community into full fellowship who are in sympathy with its ways of doing things.

The aim of the other is to minister to the whole community in which it is located. Rich and poor, educated and non-educated, evangelical and mystic alike constitute its membership. Each is allowed to exert his own influence and affect the general tone of the meeting. The effort is not to be exclusive but inclusive. The mystical standard may suffer, yet the objective is to make the Society serve the whole community.

In one case we are attempting to serve as a laboratory for trying our spiritual experiments and pioneering in the discovery of new mystical experiences. We are attempting to develop the type, though the individual may suffer by the way. In the other case, we are allowing our Society to take the form most adapted to the immediate call and demands of the community as a whole. We are attempting, feebly though it be, to "preach the Gospel to every creature."

This summer's interchange of visits has put the problem and the two methods of solution before Friends on both sides of the water. It has taught us, also, that although we differ in method, we do not differ in the spirit of our work. We of the Pastoral Meetings have returned with a deep appreciation of the consecration of English Friends to their task, viz.: proving their method practical. Their success or failure will deeply influence the course of our development. May it not be that the inter-play of each upon the other will in the end show us more clearly the mind of the Master than either would discover alone?

CLARENCE E. PICKETT.

An Old Sermon by Robert Barclay

BY S. ADELBERT WOOD

The following sermon by Robert Barclay is so perfectly scriptural, and so in harmony with my own experience that I have a desire that my friends may have the benefit of its teaching. The oftener and the more carefully I read it, the more I see in it.

That there should "be an agreement between the members" of Christ and Christ "the head" is so evident, we should all desire to know whereby this agreement can be brought about. That the life of the Son of God is in agreement with himself is so self-evident that there can be no question but that we, the members of Christ, shall be in agreement with Christ our head, when we are partakers of his life.

When Robert Barclay says, "It was through dying that He (Christ) obtained this life," he indicates that it is the resurrection life, or, the life of the resurrected Christ of which we partake. Also that it is the risen Son of God that we are to have in order to have life.

That Christ "obtained this life through dying" is conclusive evidence, when viewed in the light of the Scriptures, that our only way of obtaining the life is "to receive the sentence of death to that life which we derive from Adam." That this "sentence of death" was obtained for us by Christ's tasting death for every man, by his "dying unto sin once," is evidenced by the statement that "Our old man was crucified with Him, that the body of sin should be done away, that so we should no longer be in bondage to sin." It follows that the death by which life is obtainable is the death of Christ, in which he died for the unjust.

We come into "the likeness of his death" when we are baptized into Christ. Then it is that "we shall be also be in the likeness of His resurrection."

In short, it is as Robert Barclay says: "If they have Christ, they have the benefits of His death, and of His blood and sufferings. They that have this life in them, they are in the faith, they are partakers of justification, and sanctification and adoption."

[Sermon Preached by Robert Barclay at Grace-Church Street, May 16, 1688.]

This is the testimony that was borne of old, and it is also borne this day, that there may be an agreement between the members and the head, the word and the power, the notion and the substance: He that hath the Son hath life, and he that hath not the Son hath not life. So that in this the substance is known, whereby men are redeemed to live unto God; and to live for God, and to glorify Him. This is the end of the testimony of the gospel of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ, that we may all come to partake of His life, and that by partaking of it we may live upon it; and being made alive to Him we then shall be made able to serve Him; then shall we be enabled to worship Him, to glorify Him, and to declare of His glory and of His power, and of His wisdom, and of His goodness, to those that are strangers to Him, and to invite all to be partakers thereof. Let all your eyes this day be towards Him, and to the enjoyment of His life, that you may be sensible, and that you may be witnesses of His life.

And this life is not to be obtained but by death; there is a dying before there is a living. Every plant, seed, or grain that is placed in the earth, dies before it grows up. Those that come to the life of the Son of God, they come to it through death; for it was through dying that He obtained this life: it was necessary that the Son of God, the Prince of Life, should die, that He should be crucified, else He could not finish the work of our salvation and make way for the revelation and the sowing of that seed, and the dispensation of that grace, whereby we might come to have a share with Him in that eternal life He obtained for us. They that come to the life of the Son of God, they must obey Him, for they must receive the sentence of death to that life which they derive from Adam, that cursed, that corrupt life of unrighteousness, that life of ungodliness, that life wherein self and the will of man delights, wherein the natural man, the animal man, hath a life. We must die, and by dying come to be partakers of the life of Jesus. He communicates Himself to us; and by our receiving Him, we receive life: He that hath the son hath life, and he that hath not the Son hath not life; and the consequence is, he that hath not this life, hath not the Son of God.

This is the true way for every one to try and examine themselves by, and to make a true judgment of themselves, that they may know whether they have the Son of God or not; whether they have Christ or not. If they have Christ, they have the benefits of His death, and of His blood and sufferings. They that have this life in them, they are in the faith, they are partakers of justification, and sanctification, and adoption; and all those that are under the dispensation of the Gospel, that have the benefits of Christ's death, to those He giveth Himself; and to those to whom He giveth Himself, He giveth this life. This is not the life of Adam, a life of unrighteousness, but a life that springs from the heavenly incorruptible seed. Such as partake of it are born again of the Word of the Lord, that remains forever.

This is a life that comes from the Lord from heaven, the quickening spirit; and this life tends heavenward; it looks heavenward; it carries the affections towards the things that are above; it dwells not in them that have their pleasures in this world; it looks not to the things of this world; it comes from heaven, and tends to heaven again; it raiseth the soul that is quickened by it. They that are born of it are made heavenly by it; it makes all heavenly that are quickened by it. By this we may know that we have the Son of God; by this we have an understanding of Him, and are brought into Him that is true.

And this is the living manifestation of Christ, whereby He cometh into thy soul, and into my soul. This is the gift of God. We receive God's gift, that we may receive life, from and by Him; that we may live this life. This is that which makes the yoke of Christ easy, and His burden light, and His commandments not grievous to us. The life of Christ doeth the work of Christ naturally. Those that are in the flesh, mind the things of the flesh; those that live a carnal life, they mind the works of the flesh; it is their joy, their delight and their pleasure, that which their hearts are carried after. They rise early, and lie down late, and all for this end, it is that which their hearts run after all the day long. What is the reason of it? They are in the flesh, in the life of lust; that life moves them, and acts them, and governs them; that life useth and employeth all their faculties, their understandings, wills, affections, and imaginations; and it useth all the members of their bodies to please the flesh and fulfill the lusts thereof; these are the consequences of a life of unrighteousness in those things that are unrighteous.

But those that have received the Spirit of God, they have received Jesus Christ the Son of God; and this is the consequence, they are become dead to the life of unrighteousness. All that are dead in sins and trespasses, He hath quickened. Now when you have received the Son of God, you have received a new life, another life; then your affections are set upon things that are above, and you are come to sit in heavenly places in Christ Jesus. You sit no more in the earthly place, nor live an earthly life, but in the heavenly place where the heavenly life abounds. For this end the Eternal Son of God came into the world, that we might have life, and that we might have it more abundantly; that we might abound in the life of Jesus, and in the abundance of it. This is that which is recommended to us, that we might receive the Son of God into our souls; and, by receiving Him, partake of His life: and then let this life produce its actions. Let the word of God dwell richly in you, in all those things that are Divine, in all those consequences that it brings forth amongst the children of God.

For it is not the things of the earth that we are to remember, and to have dwelling in us, but the Word of God; and that which proceeds from the life of the Son of God. All words and testimonies, preachings, prayer, exhortation, and spiritual counsel, if it be not from the life of the Son of God, it edifies not the body of the Lord Jesus Christ in love. Let us receive that which comes from the life of the Son of God; which is manifest amongst us, and shed abroad in our hearts. Let us watch and take care that whatsoever is not of this life may not appear, may not be manifest and made known among us. And this life that we receive from the Son of God, is that which will stand us in stead in the day of trial; and as many as live unto God in this Divine life, He is well pleased with them; and the tempter, the wicked one, cannot touch them at all, nor reach them, nor hurt them.

This is my testimony unto you from the life of God, which to the glory and praise of His name hath risen into my soul, in some measure. It is the desire, and labor, and travail of my soul, that you may be inwardly gathered into this heavenly life; that all my dear brethren and sisters who are of the household of faith, may be inward in this life; that the fruit thereof may be manifest; that the notice thereof, the sound thereof, the language thereof, may be heard in this assembly at all times; that the Lord our God may be made known to us, through this Word of Life in our hearts, to the praise, honor, and renown of His name, who alone is worthy. To whom be glory forever and ever. Amen.

Doing nothing for others is the undoing of ourselves. We must be purposely kind and generous, or we miss the best part of existence. The heart that goes out of itself gets large and full. This is the great secret of the inner life. We do ourselves the most good by doing something for others.—Horace Mann.

Missionary Conferences in New York

BY CHARLES E. TEBBETTS

The recent Missionary Conferences in New York have been times of peculiar interest. On the 14th of January an all-day conference considered the work among Moslems. It was strongly emphasized that the old feeling of animosity must be done away. It is specially important that Christians should think and speak of the Moslem world without bitterness. Quotations from recent editorials were read which referred to the Moslems in language in which the spirit of Christ was not very manifest.

Several missionaries from Moslem lands referred to a greater openness to Gospel teaching. The present seems to be a time of enlarging opportunity for successful work among them. The methods of such work were discussed, emphasizing the importance of a full appreciation of their way of thinking and of those elements of their faith that furnish the best foundation for an intelligent presentation of Christianity.

The Annual Conference of Foreign Mission Boards was held at Garden City, L. I., January 15-17. The reports of the committees on Reference and Counsel, and Home Base were of special interest. The former reported on "Schools for Missionaries' Children in the Mission Field"; "Homes for Missionaries in the United States"; "Missions to Lepers in India and the East"; "The Conference on Situation in China"; "Conference on Moslem World"; "The Relations of the Regular Boards to Special Missionary Movements"; "An Incorporated Body to Hold Title to Property of Union Institutions"; "The China Famine Relief"; "Relations to Governments" and "Spiritual Emphasis."

The section of the report on "Relation of Regular Boards to Special Movements" is as follows:

"The Committee of Reference and Counsel has been approached during the year by the representatives of several regular missionary boards, and asked to give counsel and co-operation in the adjustment of certain difficulties which have arisen between these boards and certain independent missionary movements and organizations which had entered the areas within which these boards were working. The Committee on Reference and Counsel has not seen fit to take any action as yet, but is giving the whole question a thorough study with the hope of formulating a policy for dealing with such cases. There are several elements in the problem which present serious difficulty. The independent movements of missions involved are frequently under the leadership of some individual whose motives or policies in promoting missionary work are without check from any definite boards, missionary organization or even missionary constituency to which appeal could be made. It is largely, therefore, a question of dealing with certain individuals and personalities. In addition to this, there is frequently a measure of irresponsibility and of inexperience, due to the fact that these missionary movements have been in existence for but a short time and their continuance is not altogether assured. The difficulty of arriving at an understanding with some of these independent movements is aggravated by the fact, that their promoters are often located in remote sections of the United States or of Canada so that personal interviews with the leaders are not always possible, while it is equally difficult to bring these leaders into fellowship with regular boards and their leaders.

"Several steps are suggested to be taken with a view to relieving the situation, and especially to establishing with these independent missionary movements such relationships as may conduce to a better understanding between them and the regular boards. Information requires to be gathered as to the headquarters of these movements and the individuals who control or direct their activities. A friendly correspondence or even personal visits, together with an exchange of the literature, may establish points of contact which will be serviceable. On the field, a friendly attitude may be wisely urged upon missionaries, with the hope that through Christian courtesy, forbearance and kindness, conflicts of missionary policy may be avoided on the basis of personal friendship. Most important, however, is it to press upon the constituencies of the Christian Churches of America the wisdom of withholding endorsement from special missionary undertakings, unless a thoroughly responsible leadership has been first assured, and these special efforts have been properly correlated with the regular and established lines of missionary work undertaken in the name of the organized Church. The evils of independent and uncorrelated missionary efforts are so great that we cannot permit ourselves to relax in any effort to educate the Christian public with reference to these dangers. The difficulties of overlapping in the cultivation of the field at home are great, but the most serious and lamentable consequences are to be found in the friction and the working at cross purposes in the foreign field itself, wherever such independent and uncorrelated missionary efforts are to be found."

This report should be carefully considered by Friends in view of the unfortunate situation in Africa in the Lumbwa Mission, better known as the Hotchkiss Mission. It is pretty generally known that nearly all the missionaries left that field in a body last summer, because they felt the conditions there to be intolerable. Eleven came to Kaimosi, and were provided for there until they could arrange for their future work. Four, Dr. Andrew B. Estok and wife from Oregon and Fred Hoyt and wife from Kansas, have connected themselves with the Friends Africa Industrial Mission and are proving themselves valuable helpers there. They were accepted by our Board provided their support could be arranged. Such a situation is most unfortunate both for the mission where the trouble arose, and because of the lack of confidence in all missionary work that is to follow from it. A similar case was that of the Holding Mission in China a few years ago, with which several Friends were connected. Friends would do well to carefully heed that part of the above report which we have emphasized in bold-face type.

Evangelistic and Church Extension Board

In the issue of the AMERICAN FRIEND of November 12, 1912, a statement was made of the condition of this branch of church work under the caption of "Pressing Need and an Urgent Appeal." In brief, we pointed out the limitation under which we existed, both as to the lack of our own field officer and of funds. It was shown that in ten years the total amount which passed through the hands of the Board was $3,814.27, the major portion of which was received from 1907 to 1912, as a result of the subscription taken at the session of the Five Year's Meeting, and augmented by collections taken each year at Thanksgiving.

Attention was called to the fact that no such subscription was called for at the meeting of the Five Years Meeting, and that four meetings in addition to the Yearly Meeting were dependent upon the Board for a measure of existence, and it was therefore resolved that an appeal be made for liberal contributions on the First-day following the last Thanksgiving Day, in order that we might at least continue to assist in the maintenance of these meetings, and it was hoped that we might be able to assist others also in need.

I have just received the report of the treasurer of the Five Years Meeting as to the result of that appeal. He informs me that he has received the sum of $29.77, together with $22.00 of pledges that were unpaid prior to the meeting in October last, and that the total sum in his hands January 20th to the credit of our board was $51.70, which is considerably less than one month's aid given to the four meetings referred to.

It will be seen from this that the "Pressing Need" has become a "Dire Necessity," and we are therefore compelled to again urge the rendering of financial assistance commensurate with the need. Otherwise, these places must decline, as they are not yet near the stage of self-support.

The policy of the Board in rendering assistance is on the basis that the Yearly Meeting's Board shall pay an equal amount monthly to that given by our Board, and that it shall be upon a sliding scale, with a view to such meetings becoming self-supporting within a limited period—say three years—and that these meetings when able shall be encouraged to contribute systematically to the funds from which they were aided.

In this day of awakening to a sense of opportunities and larger responsibilities on the part of our church, and when financial appeals are being made for various branches of church activity, it needs to be emphasized again that this work is the foundation upon which all others must rest, and the ground from which their existence and support must be derived.

We need $1,000 for the continuance this year of the support of the work already undertaken, and for which the church is morally obligated, to say nothing of the pleas for assistance which reach us from other quarters, and to which we should be glad to respond, if our membership will enable us to do so. Inasmuch as the Thanksgiving offering failed to bring the needed result, and while we are waiting for the field officer who shall seek to secure a permanent endowment fund for national church extension, we must have voluntary contributions to meet the crying demands of the present. As a Board, we are compelled again to urge that meetings and individual members prayerfully to consider this matter and send help as speedily as possible for the use of the Board, to the treasurer of the Five Years Meeting, Francis A. Wright, Jr., 520 American Bank Building, Kansas City, Missouri.

On behalf of the committee,

H. R. KEATES, Chairman.

Des Moines, Iowa, January 28, 1913.

Meaning of the "Angelus"

Millet's "Angelus" does not present some great general, or hero, or martyr. It includes a potato patch, a few brown clods, a large rake, with two peasants in humble garb. These peasants, however, have accepted their task and their temperament. Above all else, they love each other, and they love and trust God. When the evening bell rings, in beautiful resignation and in happy hope they bow their heads in gratitude to the unseen Father. And the happiness in their hearts appears upon their faces in the moment the setting sun falls upon them with heaven's own tender benediction. For a heart gentle and sweet can flood with spiritual beauty the anvil, the yardstick, the plow, until all tools and tasks become sacramental and divine.—Newell Dwight Hillis, D.D.

"We take our share of fretting,
Of grieving and forgetting,
The paths are often rough and steep,
And heedless feet may fall,
But yet the days are cheery,
And night brings rest when weary,
And somehow this old planet is a good world after all."

No matter how humble the abode, if it be sweetened with kindness and smiles the heart will turn longingly toward it; and home, if it be ever so homely, will be the dearest spot beneath the circuit of the sun.

Thy Will Be Done

LIDA E. CURTIS

In dumb despair I gaze upon my prison walls,
In silent misery I beat upon the bars,
I see no hope—no chance to e'er escape!
And is there then no God of pity or of love?
Or is it that He will not listen to my cry?
Have I so sinned against thy laws, O God,
That thou in anger turn'st away thy face,
Nor will relent, though I in anguish call?
O God, have mercy! Harken to my plea!
The way is dark; I see no light—no light.

I slept and dreamed. And as I dreamed there came to me
A vision of the Christ, and of His life on earth,
A life for others, with no thought of self. He, too,
Was hedged about with trouble and with stress, and He
In anguish prayed that God would send release. For Him
It seemed that there was no escape. And so He prayed.
But at the last, "Not my will, Father, thine be done."
This is the way—the only way for Him or us—
To bravely live, and then if need be, bravely die;
And God will send the grace to bear whatever comes.
He only asks submission to His will, and then
He gives the courage for the task, whate'er it be.

Submission to His will, Ah, that is where I failed,
I wanted my way, Lord. Thine seemed harsh and cruel,
And I could not understand how love could lighten it
And make it sweet. But now the Christ has made it plain
To live for others, with no thought of self. There, Lord,
The secret lies. Thou dost not offer me release
From bondage; only grace to bear the yoke, and bear
It patiently. And Father, I submit, I give Myself to thee to do with as thou wilt, only Give me courage, Lord, to smile beneath the burden
That I bear, that thou be glorified; and that men, Seeing my life, may say that I have "walked with God."

He Prays With Power

In November, 1912, we had in Tokyo three evenings of special gospel meetings. M. Mishima, of Shimodate, came to Tokyo and in one of the meetings when he was speaking on "Faith" and "How to Believe" he said: "There are two incidents I feel I must relate which I have experienced recently in my own field of work. One was this: Last spring Gurney Binford and C. Kaifu came to Shimodate for three evenings of meetings. In order to announce the meetings, they took a large lantern with the announcement written on it and went about telling everybody. The hour came and it was pouring rain. A half hour passed and we were just preparing to have a time of prayer together and go home, when one man came in.

"We at once began the meeting. This man was strongly under the influence of 'Sake.' He was a photographer. Twenty years ago, while in Tokyo, he attended church with Shimada Sahuro. He knew enough to believe, but his love for 'Sake' had always kept him from accepting Christ. For three hours first T. Mishima then C. Kaifu talked with him. He knelt in prayer. He got up a new man. He went home sober. The next morning he brought his wife and said, 'I want her made new, too.' Mr. Mishima taught her; she repented, believed and was most happily converted. She confessed to T. Mishima that any power that could so completely change her husband she wished to know about. Then they brought children and they were all brought into the fold. Then this photographer came one day with his wife and said, 'We want you to come over to our house and cleanse it and make it really a Christian home.' This meant the taking down of the God-shelf and the ancestral tablets and establishing instead the family worship, which he did. Since then this has been a truly consecrated home with daily family worship.

"Some of you read of the severe typhoon in Ninth month last. At that time every pane of glass was broken in this photographer's studio, and his house was badly injured in other ways. He had been a drinker and had saved no money. He knew not which way to turn. He knew his credit was bad and he could not borrow. He and his wife went into a room and said, 'We will pray to God to know what to do.' While they were praying there came a call at the door. Mr. Izumi, the photographer, got up and to his surprise there stood the leading merchant of the town, his next-door neighbor. He said, 'I have come to ask if you are injured and to express my sympathy. Mr. Izumi was so overcome at this, for he had felt himself far below this man. The merchant came in and saw the sad condition. Before he left he said, 'If it would be any accommodation to you I shall gladly lend you the money for repairs.' Mr. Izumi thanked him but thought he did it only to be polite and that he did not mean it.

"The merchant went to T. Mishima and asked him to find out how much the repairs would cost. That evening the merchant sent the full amount. Then the photographer had a second meeting, this time to give thanks. This man's changed life is known about all over the town. The whole family next door have since become Christians and a number of others all through the influence of this one man. The regular meetings for worship have increased in numbers and daily from here and there in unexpected ways the Spirit of God is leading those who are hungry to inquire about the True way." GURNEY BINFORD.

Destroying Vicious Literature

Our friend, William G. Hubbard, of Columbus, Ohio, who is the general superintendent and treasurer of the "American Railway Literature Union," has made an interesting report of his work during the year 1912. During the year he has traveled about 12,000 miles in the interest of his work and has secured the removal of more offenders, who sell vicious literature, than in any previous year. He says, "I take as much satisfaction in this as I would in striking down a tiger that was about to destroy our children." The superintendent has given about thirty-five addresses on peace, in colleges, high schools and churches and has preached the gospel nearly every Sabbath. He makes an appeal for contributions to help carry on the work during the coming year.

The Federal Council Projects—Its Plans

The newly elected Executive Committee of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America met at the Aldine Club, New York, January 13, with between forty and fifty of its ninety members present, representing about two-thirds of the denominations in the Council. The Chairman, Rev. Frank Mason North presided and the President of the Council, Dean Shailer Mathews was present.

The report of the Secretary announced the appointment of the Joint Commission representing the Conference of Theological Seminaries and the Federal Council, appointed for the purpose of recommending courses of instruction in theological seminaries on social, industrial and allied subjects.

A committee has been appointed to arrange co-operative plans between the Commission on Foreign Missions and the Foreign Missions Conference of North America.

The propaganda for one-day-in-seven for industrial workers, which has been taken up with renewed vigor the past month through co-operation with the American Association for Labor Legislation, was the most important item reported on behalf of the Commission on the Church and Social Service.

The Executive Committee authorized the Administrative Committee to arrange for an office of the Council at Washington and to select a Secretary for it; made provision for a thorough consideration as to the possibility of a co-operative religious campaign to include all possible denominational and interdenominational agencies and movements in connection with the Panama Exposition; and appointed a committee, consisting of Rev. Albert G. Lawson and Secretary Macfarland to prepare a memorial to the government in behalf of a large increase in the number of chaplains in the United States navy.

Special attention was given to the proposed work of the Commission on Religious Education, especially with regard to concerted plans and action in relation to the religious education of young people.

It was voted that the Administrative Committee should proceed immediately with the incorporation of the Council, and a resolution was adopted expressive of interest in the proposed celebration of the Treaty of Ghent.

Seed Sowing Bearing Fruit

Through the kindness of our friend, Joseph Elkin-ton, of Philadelphia, we have been put in possession of the following facts, which will be of interest to Friends generally as showing some of the fruitage of the Freedmen's work carried on by Friends following the Civil War:

Almost immediately after the close of the war, Friends conducted a school for colored people at Stevenson, Alabama, where they enrolled as students, William H. Councill, Elias C. Morris, Samuel J. Carter, William Morris, Mrs. C. O. Booth and others. William H. Councill established "a Normal and Agricultural College for Negroes in Alabama," located near Huntsville. Elias C. Morris for the past thirty years has been the leading man among the colored Baptists of Arkansas, and for the last seventeen years has been president of the National Baptist Convention of the United States of America. S. J. Carter has been prominent in the educational work of Alabama for twenty-five years. William Morris is a leading Methodist minister, residing in Arkansas. Mrs. C. O. Booth was the organizer and for years the president of the colored W. C. T. U. of Alabama; for the past twenty years she has held a life certificate under the educational board of Alabama as a missionary laborer, and is a speaker of power.

While the school was being conducted at Stevenson, the building was burned down and the teachers ordered to leave town. They went, but their work remained and brought forth fruit in these "living epistles." A message of encouragement to Friends is sent by Mrs. Booth with the exhortation, "May they still sow by all waters!"

Fourth National Peace Congress

Preliminary arrangements have been made for the holding of the Fourth National Peace Congress at St. Louis, the first three days in May of this year. The Business Men's League of St. Louis has undertaken to finance and organize the Congress, and arrangements are already well under way. It is expected to be a great and memorable success, and many of the noted peace advocates of America will be on the program. Many Friends attended the last one held in Baltimore, two years ago, which marked an epoch in the peace movement in this country. The sessions of this Congress will be open to all the friends of peace and arbitration and the Society of Friends should be largely represented.

"A large soul is possible in the smallest places. Riches cannot make it, nor even power. The habit of getting out of oneself is the habit of largeness of soul, and anyone who cultivates this habit becomes large-souled because he or she cannot help becoming so."

"Have you found the heavenly light?

Pass it on.

'Twas not given for you alone,

Pass it on.

Hold thy lighted lamp on high,

Be a star in some one's sky,

Pass it on."

The secret of happiness, like the kingdom of heaven, is within. If one has not found it in America it can not be found in Europe, for it is not in this place, nor in that place, nor in any external surroundings. It is within the soul.

There are many troubles which you can not cure by the Bible and the hymn book, but which you can cure by a good perspiration and a breath of fresh air.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

A "National Call to Prayer" has been issued in behalf of the Interstate Liquor Shipment Bill, to be voted upon in the United States Senate, the afternoon of February 10. It is urged that wherever possible joint prayer meetings be held in communities. Where this is impossible, individual supplication in behalf of the measure is invoked.

Wellington, Canada, Friends are being congratulated upon their successful efforts to retain their local option by-law.

The Friends at Hartney, Canada, enjoyed a social evening with games and program, on January 10. About seventy-five were present.

A number of Friends in eastern Indiana and western Ohio attended the great Laymen's Missionary Convention at Richmond, January 30-31.

Pelham Quarterly Meeting, Canada, will be held at Pelham, February 22d instead of the 2d. This privilege was granted by the last Yearly Meeting.

We notice from the Pacific Friend that L. Maria Deane, known to many Friends, who has been quite ill at the Training School at Huntington Park, California, is now convalescent.

The British Friend celebrated its 70th anniversary on January 31st. The AMERICAN FRIEND extends heartiest congratulations and best wishes for a long life to such excellent journalism.

Our friend, John Henry Douglas, has moved from Pasadena to Whittier, California. Friends will notice the change in address, which is 501 South Painter Avenue, Whittier, California.

Viola Smith, of Grinnell, Iowa, recently held a series of meetings at Richmond in that state, which resulted in a number of conversions and renewals and a general up-building of the church.

By an arrangement with the Home Mission Committee of Canada Yearly Meeting, Alfred Young will devote half a year to the work of the Yearly Meeting at large, and began a series of meetings at Uxbridge on January 19.

The Quarterly Meeting at Pasadena, California, on January 25 and 26 was largely attended, the interest good and the fellowship most inspiring. The missionary zeal and the work by the young people were most encouraging. The ministry of Emma Coffin and R. Esther Smith was especially helpful.

The attention of our young people is called to the announcement of Rally Day on March 2, found in another column of this issue. They will also note the date of the opening of the annual gathering at Winona, Indiana, July 23, next.

Luke Woodard, of Fountain City, Indiana, attended East Main Street Friends Meeting at Richmond, Indiana, in company with his wife, on Sabbath morning, January 26th, and rendered acceptable service in preaching a full gospel.

The program for Kansas Yearly Meeting for 1913, as appearing on the back of the minutes, is improperly dated. Instead of Tuesday, October 9, 1913, it should be Tuesday, October 6, 1913, and the dates following should be 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13.

Frank Stafford, of Quaker, Indiana, has closed a meeting at Hopewell, his home meeting, in which he had as an excellent helper, Alice Kennedy, of Cuba. Several persons were definitely blessed and the gospel was preached in the power of the spirit.

Austice M. Harvey, who with his family came to the Traverse City (Michigan) Meeting last fall as pastor, is doing efficient work in that community. He is fast winning his way into the hearts of the people, both of the city and the congregation.

Arthur Haworth, a young minister of Bloomingdale Quarterly Meeting has the pastoral care of three meetings in Sullivan County, belonging to Bloomingdale Quarter. He is now engaged in a special evangelistic effort at Providence, one of his country meetings.

Daisy D. Barr, pastor of the Muncie (Indiana) Friends Meeting, began a series of meetings at Lynn, Indiana, on January 15. On the 19th, Charles W. Sweet, former pastor, conducted the services at Muncie and was blessed in preaching the truth. On the 26th, President Kelly, of Earlham College, preached to the congregation.

Deer Creek, a small country meeting near Marion, Indiana, was greatly blessed by a two week's series of meetings conducted by Isaac H. Hollingsworth, of Lynn, Indiana, during the early part of January. He was assisted by Nathan Fosnight, of Sheridan, Indiana. A revival of spiritual interest was manifested. Isaac Hollingsworth preached the gospel with great power, and his teaching was convincing and edifying to all who heard him.

Mount Ayr (Kansas) Quarterly Meeting will be held on February 14-16. Friends there are always glad to welcome those who feel drawn to attend. The pastor also invites the attention of any who are looking for a home to the healthy climate of the neighborhood. It is announced that a few farms in reach of Friends' meeting can be purchased at reasonable rates.

Adelbert S. Wood, of New Hampshire, held meetings at Stafford, Kansas, from January 1st to 5th; his ministry was greatly appreciated. Stafford Monthly Meeting was held on December 28th, at which time five persons were received into membership. Prayer meetings are well attended and a deep spiritual interest prevails. There is a good, live Christian Endeavor Society and the missionary department is doing good work.

The Bible School at Sabina, Ohio, has increased its enrollment almost one-third with the beginning of the new year and a large proportion of the school remains for the church service. The feeling prevails that the meeting has the best Bible School which it has ever had, and those in charge are hoping to go ahead to the front rank. Eliza Thorne, who is a resident minister, is serving as pastor and is doing excellent work.

L. Clarkson Hinshaw began a series of meetings at Argonia, Kansas, January 5th, which continued until the 26th. There were eight conversions, of whom five were young men. Four have applied for membership, and others are expecting to do so soon. Stormy weather and sickness in the neighborhood detracted from the interest somewhat, but the meeting was greatly strengthened by the clear gospel truth that was proclaimed in the various messages.

In the account of the reception given the AMERICAN FRIEND by the members of the four Richmond meetings, as found in the columns of the AMERICAN FRIEND last week, it was stated that "This was the first time Richmond Friends have endeavored to unite in any function, religious or social." This statement was not quite accurate. It should have been made clear that the reference was to the four Friends Meetings as such. Friends as individuals in many ways have co-operated together in mission, evangelistic and social work. The statement as given might easily create a wrong impression.

A series of meetings has just closed at New London, Indiana, conducted by the pastor, Wm. J. Cleaver. He was greatly blessed in preaching the gospel and his messages were filled with loving entreaties to the unsaved, to which some responded. The church received new inspiration and strength. The faithfulness of the young people in the song service was greatly appreciated. Increased interest is being shown by the local meeting in the Missionary, Sabbath School and Christian Endeavor work.

Fred E. Smith, of Fountain City, Indiana, held a ten day's series of meetings at Black Creek Meeting, Sedley, Virginia, beginning on January 16. The attendance and interest was good throughout. The claims of the gospel were presented in a logical and forceful manner, appealing to the better judgment of men. The standard of Christian living was raised and some were moved to seek its attainment. Several professed faith in Christ and seven united with the church. The meeting was greatly strengthened.

Butternuts Quarterly Meeting was held at Upperville, Chenango County, New York, January 17-19. Richard R. Newby, Yearly Meeting superintendent of evangelistic and church extension work, was present and rendered acceptable service. The pastors and ministers of the Quarterly Meeting were also present. On the night of the 18th, the Bible School Conference was held, the chief feature being an address on "The Influence of the Bible School on the Children of the Church and the Community," by Ralph Woodward, pastor of the West Branch Meeting. On Sabbath evening a union temperance meeting was held, addressed by Richard R. Newby. As the license question is soon to be an issue at the polls in Upperville, the meeting was timely and much appreciated.

Oskaloosa (Iowa) Sunday School Institute was organized on January 13, with Prof. W. Irving Kelsey, of Penn College, as director. The ministerial association of the city is back of the movement and all the churches are represented in the enrollment. At the second meeting eighty-six were enrolled. The institute is really a college of religious education, the course of study covering three years and is as follows: Child Psychology and Methods; Life of Christ; The Sunday Kindergarten; Boy Training, and Social Service. The institute meets every Monday evening, the first forty-five minutes being occupied by Prof. Clarence M. Case in lectures on Social problems. The rest of the time is spent in the class rooms, under various instructors, three of whom are professors in Penn College.

The death of Jacob Baker, of Adrian, Michigan, notice of which is given in another column, removes one of the best known ministers among American Friends. As a delegate from Ohio Yearly Meeting, he participated in some of the conferences that led to the establishment of the Five Years Meeting. His clear ringing voice and virile Christian messages have been a blessing to thousands. While strictly moral from his earliest youth, he was 36 years of age before he was converted. Seven years later he received in a definite way the baptism with the Holy Ghost, which was ever afterwards the burden of his message for others. Early in December he journeyed to California in the hope of regaining his health, but to no avail, and he passed away suddenly and peacefully. A memorial service was held for him on January 5th at Whittier, after which his body was taken to his home at Adrian, Michigan, for burial.

Martilia and Mary A. Cox recently held a series of meetings at Tangier, Ind., in Bloomingdale Quarter. These services continued three and a half weeks. New life and interest were taken on by the church and the community. More than thirty made definite profession of blessing to their souls—in pardon for their sins. Among these were three or four teachers of public high schools. Eight gave their names for membership in the church. A Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor will be organized and also a Junior Society. The Sabbath School and prayer meeting are growing in interest and members, and several will give to missionary work who have not done so before. A series of meetings was to begin at Rush-creek on February 2, to be conducted by these two sisters, who have the pastoral care of the three meetings composing Rush-creek Monthly Meeting. There is great rejoicing at the evidence of God's leading the people in this field, where there had almost been a famine in spiritual things.

Burning a Mortgage

The following account has been received from Ida Baldwin Jeffries, concerning a special service at the Traverse City (Michigan) Friends Meeting, at which the mortgage on the meeting house was burned:

"It was with grateful hearts to our Heavenly Father, for all His goodness and tender mercies to us that we met together on First-day morning, January 26, at our regular hour of worship; to hold our special service—that of burning the mortgage.

"Despite the stormy day, the house was well filled, and it was a time that will not soon pass from the memory of those present. It was a service of praise and rejoicing.

"The meeting opened with song service, scripture reading and prayer. A short history of the early settlement of Friends in this part of Michigan was given by Luzena Thomas, one of the pioneers of that time. She and one other were the only ones present on this occasion, that were there when the meeting was first started, over forty years ago.

"Myrtle Helm then read an interesting account of the building of our house of worship, its struggles, gains and losses, and of the final effort to lift the debt that has been over us for so long a time. A poem, 'Burning the Mortgage,' written by one of the members, was read by one of the younger girls. Following this, two little girls marched in, bearing the mortgage on a tray led by another little girl, who very effectively recited some stanzas—also composed by one of the members.

"Our pastor received the mortgage, and with a few appropriate remarks, handed it over to one of the trustees, who, in the presence of the congregation, burned it, thereby literally freeing us of all encumbrance. The pastor said he believed every one present wanted to praise the Lord, and together with him, as with one voice the congregation repeated the words, 'Praise the Lord,' while God's smile and approval seemed to rest upon us. He then spoke a few well-chosen words from the text, 'Thou shalt be like a watered garden.'

"There was a solemn hush over the meeting during the entire service, and as it drew to a close fully one-half the audience were in tears. We ask the prayers of Christian people that our little church may ever be 'like a watered garden,' and ever be found bearing fruit for the Master."

Relief for War Victims

To the Members of the Society of Friends and others in the United States of America:

We feel sure that your sympathies have been aroused as you have read of the suffering populations of South-eastern Europe in the lands devastated by war. We are trying to do what we can to mitigate their sorrows, and we ask for your co-operation.

Soon after the outbreak of the war, the Society of Friends in England constituted a "War Victims' Relief Committee," whose duty it has been to raise funds for the relief of the non-combatant sufferers in the districts devastated by the war.

Three of our members have gone out to Bulgaria, paying their own expenses and are actively assisting in the work of distribution, viz., James B. Crosfield, Henry M. Wallis and Edward Backhouse, whilst on the Turkish side, the long-established Friends Mission in Constantinople, of which Ann Mary Burgess is the head, is engaged in succoring some of the many thousands of destitute refugees who have fled to the neighborhood of that city from the contending armies. It is not possible to indicate the number of non-combatant sufferers, but they are to be counted by hundreds of thousands, who have lost everything, and without shelter, food and clothing, now appeal for help to the sympathetic public of all civilized nations.

We, of the Society of Friends in England, are trying to do our part therein. In this humanitarian work we appeal strongly to Friends and others on the far side of the Atlantic to come to the help of the many sufferers, and to join with us in the work that we have undertaken. The Society of Friends in England has already raised nearly £10,000 most of which has been absorbed, but the need will continue and may even increase for months to come, and we are therefore looking around for those who may feel disposed to aid us, and we pray Friends and others to be willing to give of their substance at this great European crisis, and assure them that all money given will be well and carefully applied. All administrative expenses in England are being paid from the funds of the Society of Friends.

Subscriptions may be sent to the undersigned direct or to the AMERICAN FRIEND, Richmond, Indiana, for the War Victims' Relief Committee of the Meeting for Sufferings in London.

EDMUND WRIGHT BROOKS, Clerk.

ISAAC SHARP, Treasurer.

NOTE.—THE AMERICAN FRIEND will receive and forward to Isaac Sharp, any funds sent in for this purpose by American Friends. All contributions should be marked "War Victims Fund."

Friends Rally Day Program

Lillian E. Hayes, Secretary of the Young Friends Summer Conference at Winona, Indiana, has prepared a Rally

Day program for the Friends Christian Endeavor and other Young People's Societies designed for use at the prayer meeting on March 2, 1913. Free extra copies of the program will be sent to any society upon request. It is only asked that every society using the program take an offering for the Summer Conference for the Young Friends of America, which is held each summer at Winona Lake, and it is hoped that the offering may be a liberal one.

This gathering of young Friends has come to be an important feature of our young people's activities. All who had the pleasure of attending the exercises at Winona Lake last summer will testify to the spirit of consecration and loyalty to the denomination which prevailed during the entire week of the program. This gathering will begin this year on July 23. Address the Secretary, Lillian E. Hayes, Dunreith, Ind.

COFFEE THRESHED HER 15 Long Years

"For over fifteen years," writes a patient, hopeful little Ills. woman, "while a coffee drinker, I suffered from Spinal Irritation and Nervous trouble. I was treated by good physicians, but did not get much relief.

"I never suspected that coffee might be aggravating my condition. (Tea is just as injurious, because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.) I was downhearted and discouraged, but prayed daily that I might find something to help me.

"Several years ago, while at a friend's house, I drank a cup of Postum and thought I had never tasted anything more delicious.

"From that time on I used Postum instead of coffee and soon began to improve in health, so that now I can walk half a dozen blocks or more with ease, and do many other things that I never thought I would be able to do again in this world.

"My appetite is good, I sleep well and find life is worth living, indeed. A lady of my acquaintance said she did not like Postum, it was so weak and tasteless.

"I explained to her the difference when it is made right—boiled according to directions. She was glad to know this because coffee did not agree with her. Now her folks say they expect to use Postum the rest of their lives." Name given upon request. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Postum now comes in concentrated, powder form, called Instant Postum. It is prepared by stirring a level teaspoonful in a cup of hot water, adding sugar to taste, and enough cream to bring the color to golden brown.

Instant Postum is convenient; there's no waste; and the flavour is always uniform. Sold by grocers—45 to 50-cup tin 30 cts., 90 to 100-cup tin 50 cts.

A 5-cup trial tin mailed for grocer's name and 2-cent stamp, for postage. Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

The Christian Endeavor

Topic—Bulletins from the Temperance War. Revelations XIII: 1-8; XIX: 11, 12, 19, 20.

A large map of the United States will be a convenient and helpful object lesson with which to impress the facts. Point out that Maine, North Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Mississippi, Kansas, North Dakota and Oklahoma are now free from the saloon. West Virginia, which went "dry" last November by more than 92,000 majority, will be added to this list when the new law goes into effect next year.

Point to Vermont, New Hampshire, Virginia, South Carolina, Florida, Alabama, Texas, Arkansas, Iowa, South Dakota, Idaho and Oregon as headed for the prohibitory column.

States like Kentucky, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Nebraska and Washington, with large areas of "dry" territory, will come in a little later. The best thing about the "temperance war" is that the campaign is being reduced to a system, wherein the temperance forces are moving intelligently upon the strategic points.

Point out the part that science is playing in the temperance warfare. Railroads and corporations place a high premium upon individual total abstinence.

Emphasize the opposition of the church to the saloon, and dwell upon the responsibility of all Christian people not only to practice total abstinence, but to use their endeavors to destroy a traffic which is wholly evil and has no redeeming feature. Finally emphasize the fact that the condemnation of God is upon the liquor business. In harmony with His law, the religious denominations more than ever before are uniting for aggressive work for the sobriety of the nation.

Every Christian Endeavor Society should have an active Christian Citizenship Committee, that will plan to make the membership a positive force for righteousness in the community. The "news" from the field is so encouraging that all should feel the inspiration for greater service in this "war" for the uplift of humanity.

At Christmas time, 1,714 deaths from cholera occurred at Mecca, Arabia, where ten thousand Mohammedan pilgrims were assembled.

Married.

MEGGERS-HINDERLITER—On January 15, 1913, at the home of the bride's parents, at Red Wing, Kansas, William T. Meggers, of Ellinwood, Kansas, was married to Nora G. Hinderliter, Orestes A. Winslow, pastor of Calvary Friends Meeting, officiating.

He was zealous in the cause of temperance and his whole life gave abundant evidence of his abiding faith in Christ. Funeral services were conducted by J. Arthur Wollam of Barclay, Kansas.

LAFLIN—Agatha Snyder Laflin, daughter of Joseph and Ruth Bond Teagle, was born near Webster, Indiana, December 29, 1830, and died at the home of her daughter in Topeka, Kansas, January 5, 1913; aged 82 years. She was a member of East Main Street Meeting, Richmond, Indiana, in and near which city all her life was spent. Her mother and grandmother were ministers in the Society of Friends. In 1850 she was married to Aaron Snyder. She had been educated at the old Earlham Boarding School, and their home was the abode of love and culture. Five of sixteen children and step-children are living, together with twenty-one grandchildren and sixteen great-grandchildren and two great-great-grandchildren, and so this "Mother in Israel" was permitted to put her hand of blessing upon four generations.

MILNER—Moses S. Milner was born near Leesburg, Ohio, June 7, 1847, and died January 7, 1913, while visiting his daughter, Maude M. Hoskins, at Colorado Springs. He was converted and united with Friends the winter of 1894 and ever afterwards sought to live a life pleasing to his Master. His sickness was of short duration and his death unexpected. He spoke of the grace of God being all sufficient. He leaves a wife, a daughter and son.

MOON—Hannah Moon died at Stafford, Kansas, December 18, 1912, at the age of 85 years and seven months. She was the mother of Almeda M. Cary, of Stafford. Funeral services were conducted by A. J. Bond, the pastor.

NEWLIN—Joel Newlin, son of John and Esther Newlin, was born in Clinton County, Ohio, and died at the home of his son, near Plainfield, Indiana, January 21, 1913, aged 88 years. He was a birthright member of the Society of Friends and an active and devoted worker in the church. He was an example of honesty and uprightness and his noble Christian life has been an inspiration to many. He leaves a wife and five children.

She had a superior education, being a student in two well-known educational institutions of the East. SETTLED RIGHT

HOWEVER the battle is ended,
Though proudly the victor comes
With fluttering flags and prancing nags
And echoing roll of drums,
Still Truth proclaims this motto
In letters of living light—
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

Let those who have failed take courage,
Though the enemy seemed to have won,
Though his rank be strong, if he be in the wrong,
The battle is not yet done.
For sure as the morning follows
The darkest hour of night,
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

O man bowed down with labor,
O woman young, yet old;
O heart oppressed in the toiler's breast,
And crushed by the power of gold,
Keep on with your weary battle Against triumphant night;
No question is ever settled
Until it is settled right.

Editorial Comment Upon Current Topics of the Day

The sphinx-like attitude of President-elect Wilson, while disconcerting to the politicians, is meeting with favorable comment among the people generally. Some public men talk too much. The country will appreciate a public servant who can demonstrate his ability to do his work well, without talking over much about it.

The woman suffrage cause is making progress, despite the handicap caused by the action of some of its advocates. The New York legislature has just adopted an equal suffrage resolution by substantial majorities in both houses. The resolution must be ratified by the next general assembly, and will then be submitted to popular vote in 1915.

Whether the world is becoming more charitable and philanthropic or whether wealth is trying to purchase immunity from public disfavor, may be an open question. The fact remains, however, that large gifts for educational, charitable and benevolent purposes are on the increase. Last year these contributions reached a total of not less than $300,000,000.00 in this country alone. Regardless of the motive, and in many instances it is praiseworthy, the needy public is feeling the up-lift of these benevolences.

The program of the new Spanish premier is to grant "complete religious freedom." The program also includes the secularization of cemeteries, civil marriages, freedom of education, and improved conditions for the working class. Evidently a brighter day has dawned for the Spanish people. The reforms will be no easy task in a country where intolerance and formalism have reigned for centuries, but a beginning has been made, and there appears to be a determination to establish a more liberal and modern administration.

The question of evangelism in the Sunday schools is beginning to receive merited consideration. A recent report showed that in 1907 Presbyterian congregations not a single child was won to confess faith in Jesus Christ last year. No conversions were reported in 113 Sunday schools in Illinois, having a membership of 9,000. In New York there was a similar record in 161 schools having 8,000 members, in Pennsylvania a similar record in 159 schools with 12,000 members; and in Ohio, 116 schools with nearly 9,000 members. The Bible school should not only be a place for study, but the truth should be so impressed that children will be brought into the Kingdom through its influence.

It is doubtful if the Irish Home-Rule Bill, which was passed by the House of Commons on January 16th by a substantial majority, will become a law. In all probability it will be rejected by the House of Lords. Under the English custom, however, if the bill is passed by the lower house at three consecutive sessions, it becomes a law over the Lords' veto. It is well known that there is a marked difference of opinion among the Irish themselves as to the wisdom of this procedure. Many loyal Irish, especially those engaged in reform and religious work, feel that the condition of the people is better off under English rule than it would be for years to come under home rule. Considerable demonstration has been made in Ireland against the proposed law, but if the present government continues to rule, Ireland will have home rule by 1915.

Considerable public surprise is being manifested, and some mild criticism is being voiced, because the United States has not yet officially recognized the new Republic of China. Various religious bodies are asking the government to extend recognition without further delay in the interests of Christian missionary activity in that country, and certain business organizations are beginning to manifest concern over the situation. It is hardly probable that the state department is merely negligent, and in all probability has some worthy reason for its caution. Possibly the stability of the new regime is being investigated as a factor in the problem. Unquestionably the sentiment of the American people is for recognition, but it is just as well for the authorities to exercise due caution, that the Government may not be embarrassed by the recognition of new administrations that after all might prove to be short lived and lacking in proper stability.

Legislators in many of the States, in spasms of righteous indignation, are endeavoring to strike at the professional lobbyists, by various kinds of legislation. We have never seen any method proposed yet that is worth the paper it is written on. The average lobbyist makes no secret of the fact that he is interested in certain legislation, and the requirement to have him register at the office of the Secretary of State, giving certain data and facts about his purposes, has few terrors to the average man. If it has any effect, it only serves to give the crooked lobbyist a certain degree of character and standing. It will be a difficult matter to protect our law-making bodies against the machinations of the corrupt lobbyist by any system which would not destroy the right of the people at large to be heard, either directly or through representatives. It seems to us the best plan that can be devised is to elect senators and representatives who are so far above suspicion and temptation that the crooked lobbyist and crooked corporations will no longer find a harvest at our legislative assemblies.

The bill for the incorporation of the $100,000,000 Rockefeller Foundation has passed the national house of representatives, and will likely pass the senate soon. Its objects are to promote the well being and advance of civilization of the people at home and abroad "in the dissemination of knowledge, in the prevention and relief of suffering, and in the promotion by eleemosynary and philanthropic means of any and all of the elements of human progress." The potentiality of such a vast project is almost beyond calculation if the income be used economically and the plans be wisely administered. There are nine incorporators, and their successors must be approved by the majority of a body consisting of the President of the United States, the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, the president of the senate, speaker of the house, and the presidents of Columbia, Yale, Harvard, Johns Hopkins and Chicago University. It was objected that it was dangerous to perpetuate so large a sum in its entirety, but safeguards were provided that presumably will lessen the risk. The Foundation marks an epoch in civilization building.

A religious census taken of the 4,000 students at the Imperial University of Japan at Tokio, shows classification by religions as follows: Shinto, 8; Buddhists, 50; Christian, 60; Atheist, 1,500; Agnostic, 2,000.

"Love is the Test of Discipleship"

"Feed my lambs." "Feed my sheep."

Love is the vital test of discipleship. It is the soul and life of Christian service. It is fundamental to the execution of any Divine Commission. It is the incentive for the world's greatest achievements.

Christ's lesson to Peter was that his most important duty in life was contingent upon a masterful love. No other than a loving heart could be entrusted with such a sacred mission. It was not a function to be performed by hirelings. Only a life that was guided by a supreme devotion could feed the flock of God.

No church can be successful that does not have a passion for souls, the passion begotten of the Master, who with earnest devotion prayed "that the world may know that thou has sent me, and hast loved them, as thou hast loved me." Such a passion is not the creation of human philosophy. It is not the product of psychology or intellectual attainments. It is beyond the realm of natural affections. Love that reaches out after a lost world is heaven born, and that is the love which the church must possess which is fit to be a feeder of the flock. The religion of Jesus Christ cannot be propagated by artificial methods.

Christian effort that is not prompted by genuine affection will fail. It is God's law of service. Love will win when all else is futile.

To be fed is to be nourished, to perpetuate life. But it is more than that. It is to thrive, to grow, to develop, to become strong, to take on bone and fibre and muscle and brain, to become healthy, vigorous and potential. In the spiritual sense, it means not only the sustenance of spiritual life, but enlargement of soul, broadening of vision, endowment of heart life, the vitalizing of religious energy, and the equipment for mighty service. Such are the indispensable characteristics of the rightly fed flock.

What mighty commissions have been entrusted to the church of God! Go, preach, and feed the flock. Each is the complement of the other. Both together cover the entire domain of Christian duty. Love is the genesis and inspiration of both alike. When the followers of the Master can say with Peter, "Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee," then are they ready to hear and obey the call, "Feed my lambs." "Feed my sheep."

The Power of a Living Evangelism

The Church of Christ is essentially missionary, both in its spirit and in its endeavors. No less must it be evangelistic, in its message, in its life, and in its relationship with others.

No church can thrive long upon its traditions, valuable and sacred though they be. Historic religion is important as marking the fundamentals of the scheme of human redemption, but in no sense can it be substituted for the vitalizing power of God's spirit working in the hearts of men today. No more can church formalism take the place of the living manifestation of God's ability and readiness to save men from their sins here and now.

Life is the essential characteristic of the Christian religion. "He that hath the Son hath life." "For the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." Life is more than existence. It means growth, development, enlargement, progress. No church can afford to be satisfied with its standard of Christian experience attained last year. To live is to grow in knowledge and experience, and each new experience invites to the realization of yet more satisfying ones. Truth is progressive so far as our own perceptions of it are concerned.

No church can afford to be satisfied with merely holding its own, so long as there is a multitude at home and abroad that have not heard the glad tidings of great joy in any saving sense. To aim merely at the development of a class of the spiritual élite, is to develop a church aristocracy that possesses no potentiality as a winner of souls. While the number of communicants is not the measure of the success of any congregation, yet to lay the emphasis upon that declaration is a complacent sort of attempt to excuse the neglect of duty that wins no converts for the Master's Kingdom.

Church life and church potentiality are the composite life and potentiality of the members who compose its working force. If the leaders are content to observe the forms and seasons, and have no outlook upon the field which is even now white unto the harvest, such a church is already upon the decline, and without a transformation has outlived its days of usefulness. If the working body be quickened by the vision of the joy in serving the Lord, and the fruition which is the inheritance of the saints, the church of which they are a vital part will become the inspiration of multitudes, who will be won by the sympathy of obedient discipleship.

Christ's service was missionary, and his mission was evangelistic. He gathered about him the disciples, not for their own sake, alone, but that through them he might multiply his own activities in ministering to the needs of the throngs about him. Later he poured out the spirit upon the waiting saints assembled, not for their own reassurance alone, but that they might become mighty evangelists of the truth in spreading the gospel to all people. His blessing has fallen upon the church in all ages, not as a favored class, but that by the impartation of the Divine life, the membership might become heralds of the message of salvation to a sinful world.

There is nothing worth while to do with life except to pour it out in service that will advance the Kingdom of God in the earth. Such a conception of duty will create inevitably the missionary spirit, that is bent upon the evangelization of the world in this generation. Blessed is the church that knows the experience of having a passion for souls!

There are few churches that do not need a revival of religion, not for their own sakes in the last analysis, but that they may become the potential messengers of salvation to others; that by being revived themselves, they may impart the spirit of evangelism to the multitudes.

May it not be that the fear of excitement and a revulsion of feeling against the sensational, is preventing many a congregation from being a strong evangelistic force in its own community? Sensationalism is man made effort. Pyrotechnics in religion are the product of human ambition. These are not to be considered in the category of genuine evangelistic manifestations, and all should have a care that the spurious does not interfere with the normal operations of God's spirit in the hearts of the people.

Has Quakerism lost its power as compared with the days of its founder? It was not merely the spirit of protest that won converts by the hundreds in Fox's day. It was rather the positive preaching of a live Gospel that swept in multitudes of adherents to the new faith, and why may not Quakerism be revived as in the days of Fox and Barclay and Penn? Why, except that we choke the opportunity for the operations of Divine truth, by our carelessness, our faithlessness or our prayerlessness?

Oh, that our membership might be much in prayer in these days of the new formative period that has come upon our denomination! Can we not cultivate a tenderness of spirit and a love for the erring that will give us a grip upon the masses in our efforts at evangelization? May we not wait for the voice of Jehovah directing us to go forward into a land of promised blessing? Shall we not pray for a gracious revival upon all our congregations and for the enrichment of heavenly grace upon our membership? Filled with the spirit of service for others as our denominational objective, let us gird ourselves for the task in humble dependence upon God.

When toil has become wearisome, when burdens seem too heavy to be borne, when sorrows grip the heart in anguish, when temptations press in upon every hand, when men come to the end of themselves and see no ray of light to guide, it is time to remember that the Father knows all the way, and that He will not suffer even a little one to stumble.

The psychology of conversion may not always be defined in words that have the same meaning to all persons, but the man or the woman who has accepted Christ as Savior and leader, and has the witness of the Spirit is on the road to Heaven.

Sin is race suicide, whether measured by the immediate visitation of the justice of God, or by the natural operations of the Divine law. In the last analysis, both men and nations will learn that the "wages of sin is death."

Do you want a better meeting? Perhaps the way to begin it is to be better yourself in all that the term implies. We are too prone to see the duties of others, and overlook the tasks at our own door.

The man who goes to sleep in meeting is quite as devout as he who takes the hour to plan his business affairs for the coming week. Neither has understood the first principles of worship.

There can be no substitute for obedience and faithfulness in the Christian life. These are not subject to the caprices of the will, but are the necessary consequences of being right with God.

Christ avoided not the way of the multitudes. Neither can the church shut itself in from the masses, and expect the favor of God upon its exclusiveness. God's harvest field is the world.

Missionary Conferences in New York

BY CHARLES E. TEBBETTS

(Concluded from last week)

Three large questions of relations to governments have arisen during the year. The first is that of China and its new government. The feeling was one of profound regret that the Governments of the United States and Great Britain have thus far failed to recognize the Chinese Republic.

"The difficulties which it has encountered have been no more than were reasonably to be expected, and far less than were experienced by many other nations after so radical a change of government. China is today enjoying far more settled and orderly conditions than prevailed in the Republics of France, Portugal, Brazil, Panama or any of the other Republics of Central and South America when our Government formally recognized their independence. Why, then, is there this delay in recognizing the Republic of China? Nations like those of the United States and Great Britain, which are supposed to be the most enlightened and liberty-loving of all the nations and whose Christian people have done more than all other peoples combined to communicate to the Chinese the principles of enlightened self-government, should be the first to extend to their brethren in China full recognition of an honorable place among the nations of the earth to which they are now clearly entitled."

"The second event was the war between the Balkan States and Turkey with its far-reaching significance, its possible perils to considerable numbers of missionaries and their work, and the demand upon Christian sympathies created by the pitiful sufferings of the sick and wounded Turkish soldiers, for whose proper care the Turkish Government appeared to have made absolutely no provision, so that virulent diseases raged unchecked, and stricken men lay for days upon the open ground without food, water or any surgical attention whatever. The chairman of the committee united with a little company of Christian men in forming a New York auxiliary to the Red Cross Society and in making a public appeal for relief funds. We were interested in the opinion expressed by the Hon. Oscar Straus, former American Ambassador to Turkey, to the effect that it was extremely desirable and only fair and right that the Turkish people should know that the Christian people of America who have been doing missionary work among them, while neutral as far as the conduct of the war was concerned, were nevertheless ready to respond with promptness of Christian sympathy to the dire needs of the sick and suffering Turkish soldiers. Cabled advices to the American Board, which has the largest work in the zone of the hostilities affected by the war, indicated that the missionaries did not consider themselves in personal danger, that the attitude of the troops and people toward them was friendly, and that the missionaries were, as always in such circumstances, foremost in kindly ministries to the sick and wounded combatants and to the non-combatants who were dispossessed and impoverished by the ravages of the war. Mission compounds were crowded with refugees and the medical missionaries toiled indefatigably and under heavy strain to give what skilled relief they could to the injured."

"The third event is the trying situation which has arisen in Korea in connection with what has become known as 'The Korean Conspiracy Case.' The missionaries and Korean Christians need our special prayers in this time of sore perplexity and distress, and the following Call to Prayer was issued in December:

A CALL TO PRAYER FOR KOREA

Conditions in Korea urgently call for the prayer of faith—the prayer that prevails with God. Korea has, for a quarter of a century, been one of the most open, most promising and most fruitful mission fields of the world. It has been the theater of almost unparalleled missionary activity and success. The policies and the methods adopted by the missionaries evidently have been wise and have had the endorsement of the most enlightened leaders and representatives of the Japanese Government, including the late Prince Ito. The blessing of God has rested upon the labors of His servants. Tens of thousands of Koreans have been converted and have given unmistakable proof of the genuineness of their faith by the uprightness of their lives and by their willingness to suffer the loss of all things for Christ's sake.

A situation has developed between the Japanese military police and the Korean Church which has greatly disturbed the missionary body and the Church and which is calculated to work serious injury to the cause of missions, so dear to the hearts of millions of Christians in the United States, in Canada, in Great Britain and on the Continent. Stricken and helpless, distressed by fears within and troubles without, with her old religious belief shattered and her new faith called in question, Korea stretches out her hands and appeals to heaven for the help that seems to be denied from human sources. There is singular appropriateness in making an appeal to the Church for prayer in behalf of conditions in Korea, not only because of the natural power of prayer, but especially because the situation there is so embarrassing and of such a character that it seems unwise at present to appeal to political or other influences in order to rectify the situation. A very special dependence is therefore laid on prayer to solve the difficulty of the situation.

The Committee of Reference and Counsel, by unanimous action and representing the Missionary Boards and Societies of North America, therefore issues a call for intercessory prayer:

That our brethren, native and foreign, may not be unduly anxious, but in everything by prayer and supplication with thanksgiving may make their requests known unto God.

That they shall see that none render unto anyone evil for evil, but always follow after that which is good one toward another and toward all, proving themselves blameless before Christ, the Judge of all men.

That they may be speedily delivered from all their afflictions, but while in the midst of them may be strengthened with all power according to the might of His glory unto all patience and long-suffering with joy.

That all anger, wrath and malice may be put off, and that they shall put on a heart of kindness, lowliness, meekness and long-suffering, forgiving their enemies, and being filled with that love which passeth knowledge, the peace of Christ ruling in their hearts to the which they are called in one body.

That the blessing of Almighty God be upon the Emperor of Japan, and upon those in high places who carry out the Imperial commands, to the end that during his illustrious reign, righteousness, mercy and peace shall extend to every individual subject and to the remotest bounds of the Empire."

There are many points of resemblance between this situation in Korea, and the persecution of early Friends. They are certainly entitled to our sympathy and prayers.

Concerning the "Spiritual Emphasis," the report says:

"The spiritual side of Christian activity requires careful and constant attention. There needs no apology for pressing its claims on this Conference, but in doing so let it first be gratefully acknowledged that there are very many in all the churches, and their number is increasing, who are faithfully seeking the best, who are reaching forth to the things that are before, striving for the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. With that recognition the following suggestions are submitted for consideration:

"1. There exists amongst the churches at the present time, a deepening sense of insufficiency and need. In conferences, public and private, no sentiment finds more frequent expression than this, that the Church with her present spiritual equipment is not equal to the requirements of the day. Notwithstanding greatly increased knowledge of conditions in mission fields, and notwithstanding highly developed organizations, the Church does not measure up to the opportunities and responsibilities of the hour and cannot do so without a large accession of spiritual power. So serious a charge so frequently expressed, accompanied as it sometimes is with feelings kindred to despair, should arrest attention and provoke earnest thought.

"Is it true that we are not leading, not placing the emphasis where it belongs? The inquiry demands speedy attention and frank, conscientious investigation for eternal interests are at stake.

"2. In addition to many promises and assurances in God's Word there have been given at intervals, down through the centuries, times of refreshing fitted to inspire confidence and arouse expectations. These extraordinary spiritual awakenings have been uniformly preceded by extraordinary prayer. Eternity alone can reveal how great the results were and what they meant to the world. Are the needs not as great today as they were in these former times? And with the need a new urgency in doors open in all lands as they were not open then. They may not be open long, and if closed, decades of disappointment may come to the Church of Christ. If times and seasons mean anything in the administration of Providence and Grace, is this not the time of times when the Church should awake, should 'take no rest and give Him no rest until He makes Jerusalem a praise in the earth?' We cannot force the divine hand, but we can and ought to fulfil the conditions, and God is not unfaithful who promised—'When the poor and the needy seek water and there is none and their tongue faileth for thirst, I the Lord will hear them. I the God of Israel will not forsake them. I will open rivers in high places, and springs in the midst of the valleys. I will make the wilderness a pool of water and the dry lands springs of water.' Such promises are good for all time. We have with us the wilderness and the parched land and the weary heritage. Are we not all agreed that what yet lacketh is 'the seeking' the importunity that will not let go until the blessing comes?"

The Laymen's Missionary Movement

The readers of the AMERICAN FRIEND are familiar with the Laymen's Missionary Movement, and it is not necessary to explain in detail what this movement is. The object of the movement is the extension of the kingdom of Jesus in all lands. The movement has set for its aim the evangelization of the entire world in this generation. It is a movement of the local church, and has the indorsement of the missionary boards of all denominations. In fact, the general Laymen's Missionary Movement is continued at the request of the various missionary boards.

The general office at New York has broadened its activities by the formation of divisional offices, with executive secretaries in charge, in order to get into closer touch with the various churches, and the organizing of the city and district committees with missionary conventions.

One of the popular conventions of this laymen's movement was held in Richmond, Indiana, January 30 and 31. Delegates were present, not only from Richmond and vicinity, but from many of the towns in Eastern Indiana and Western Ohio. Friends were especially prominent in the deliberations, Charles E. Tebbetts being one of the convention speakers, and Timothy Nicholson being one of the officers.

On the evening of the 30th, more than 700 men sat down to the convention supper, and were addressed by prominent leaders of the movement from New York, Chicago and other places.

As one of the first results of the gathering, there will be a canvass made in each church, to enlist a larger interest in missions. This will be followed by the holding of union missionary meetings in the various cities and communities throughout the territory covered. The weekly basis for missionary offerings was approved, and a special period of missionary information and education once each year in each local church was agreed upon.

The convention has done much to stimulate interest in the world-wide missionary movement.

Amid the howling wintry sea,
We are in port if we have Thee.

A PEACE FABLE, SUGGESTED BY COLLEGE LIFE;

or

What a Young Man Found Out About Washington's Ideals of Peace.

BY MARY DOAN HOLE

"First in war; first in peace; first in the hearts of his countrymen."

Hundreds of undergraduate students shouted as they noisily marked time to their words on the cement walk directly in front of one of the university halls on February twenty-second. It was the same structure that hundreds of college men had stood in front of just a year before and in front of which they had carried on this same boyish performance; so their higher classmates had done the year before that. Indeed, our own pulses beat in unison with their voices and their steps, and to that extent we, too, were boyishly celebrating the birthday of the Father of his Country. Can we doubt that, true to the teachings of not a few biographers, there was in the minds of many of those college men (when indeed there was any thought beyond the rhythmic step, step)—there was in the minds of these men the "glory of Washington's military achievements" and a corresponding "ignoring of his higher and finer qualities both as a citizen and as a statesman"?

Let me tell you that not far away there was a graduate student in history, whose pace quickened in order that he might get in touch with the annual celebration, though to be one of its promoters would have been far beneath his dignity. Step, step, step; he almost saw the smoke of battle and the good Father of his Country at the head of a mighty throng. Unconsciously he put his hand on the note-book which had become his constant companion, as he had painstakingly worked out the Master's thesis on "The Ideals of George Washington in Regard to Present-day Reforms."

The university chimes announced the ten o'clock period and off the celebrators hastened to lecture and laboratory. The graduate student, the "post" as his friend undergraduates called him, followed a secluded walk. As this path began to wind among the trees and to afford glimpses of the lake and the hills beyond, he stopped. In the dead calm of that February day, while the other students were busy with their languages, chemistry and mathematics, he took out the note-book which he had compiled with so much effort to give a view of the true George Washington, unaffected by the distorted stories of his life. His glance fell upon a page which contained the following quotations:

In a letter of July 25, 1785, to David Humphreys, Secretary of the Commission sent abroad to negotiate treaties of commerce, he wrote: "My first wish is to see this plague to mankind (war) banished from the earth, and the sons and daughters of this world employed in more pleasing and innocent amusements than in preparing implements and exercising them for the destruction of mankind."

The irony of the phrase "pleasing and innocent amusements" will escape no reader.

In a letter, in October of the same year, to the Marquis de la Rouerie, an officer just appointed to the command of a French army corps, he said: "My first wish is (although it is against the profession of arms, and would clip the wings of some of our young soldiers who are soaring after glory) to see the whole world in peace, and the inhabitants of it as one band of brothers striving who should contribute most to the happiness of mankind."

To the Marquis de Chastellux, who had just taken to himself a wife, he wrote in April, while "the great personages of the North" of Europe "were making war under the . . . infatuation of Mars." "Now, for my part, I humbly conceive that you have acted much the best and wisest part, for certainly it is more consonant to all the principles of reason and religion, natural and revealed, to replenish the earth with inhabitants than to depopulate it by killing those already in existence. Besides, it is time for the age of knight-errantry and mad heroism to be at an end. Your young military men, who want to reap the harvest of laurels, do not care, I suppose, how many seeds of war are sown; but for the sake of humanity it is devoutly to be wished that the manly employment of agriculture and the humanizing benefits of commerce would supersede the waste of war and the rage of conquest; that the swords might be turned into ploughshares, the spears into pruning hooks, and, as the Scriptures express it, 'the nations learn war no more.'"

The student in history was lost in thought as he felt the ideals of a great man grip him. Right, left, right; he hastened away to his labors with a deeper love than ever for the "higher and finer qualities of George Washington both as a citizen and as a statesman."

So ends this fable—a fable for both aged and young.

Horror of the Balkan War

BY ANNA B. THOMAS

Here in America, far away from the fearful war that has been devastating the Near East, we may talk quietly of this war opening the doors of freedom to the Balkan peoples; we may point out the kindly feelings that are said to exist between Turkish and Bulgarian students in some of the missionary colleges, and dwell upon the heroism of the doctors and nurses in the Red Cross work, until we lose sight almost of the unspeakable horrors that have been perpetrated, and begin to feel that after all maybe the war was God's appointed way of driving the Turk out of Europe, and that it would never do to put an end to the use of a weapon that can prove itself so effective.

I admit that under existing conditions the war was inevitable, but none the less must I regret and deplore it, nor do I feel one whit more ready to admit that war is a solution of any difficulty. Look at the Balkan peoples. They were a fine, strong race; for centuries suppressed and oppressed, deprived of civic rights and educational opportunities, living until recently under one of the worst governments of the modern world, yet they have preserved sufficient manliness and virility to call forth the admiration of all,—they have marched out to strike a blow for freedom, cheerfully sacrificing property, business, home, even their own lives; and in eight short weeks as many men have been done to death as perished in the whole four years of our American Civil War. Will they gain what they have been fighting for? It looks as though they would, but at what a price! Bulgaria has now called out all her male population under seventy years old, to be exposed, should hostilities be reopened, to minie gun and Mauser bullet, to pestilence and starvation, to moral degradation worse even than physical death, and where, I ask you, in the next generation will be that splendid physique among the Bulgarians about which we have been hearing? Where will be the strong, sturdy fathers of the coming race?

Now take another side. Christians and Turks have been at daggers drawn from earliest days. Always the sword, always hatred and cruelty on the one side, met, alas! by hatred and hostility on the other, and to this again there is no end, for "What can war but endless war,

Or hate but hate still breed?"

By this path of bloodshed we are no nearer the solution of the problem of the unspeakable Turk than before. It is not war that wins, nor the sword in any of its fearful aspects that calls forth our admiration. It is the other things, the clemency and moderation occasionally exercised even by fierce soldiers,—the heroism of unarmed civilians, doctors and nurses, who risk their lives to save life not to destroy. These are the saving elements in the situation, and these, I repeat, are not war. In short, I believe that whatever good does result will be brought about not by, but in spite of, the fearful scourge of war, and I believe we have in the present struggle only another illustration, if one were needed, of the fact that war in itself is horrible and not, like some forms of suffering, ennobling, but debasing, calling into play fierce passions and leaving in its wake pestilence and famine and a fearful harvest of hatred and lust.

I do not wish to dwell upon the harrowing details of the war, but any unprejudiced person must feel, one would think, that once more the great moral evil of war has been shown, and that the call has gone forth more loudly even than before to strive to put an end to such a scourge. Would that in driving the Turk out of Europe we could drive out with him the fierce unchristian faith in force and in the power of the sword! Would that Christ might at last come to His own, and the bloody doctrines of Mohamet disappear with his waning crescent from the western sky!

Baltimore, Maryland.

"What Prayer Is?"

The great trouble with the human heart is that it is filled with "our desires." Prayer is the God-given means of communion through which He would graciously make known His desires. Our Savior has told us that He knows "our desires," which are always uppermost, and that the Father is anxious to raise our sordid desires to His holy desires. "Thy will be done."

Is not prayer that graciously opened channel through which the human soul may have His Holy Spirit poured forth in streams of living, cleansing, strengthening, sanctifying power?

Or to use even a stronger figure: That "our desires," ambitions, affections, wills, may be crucified, i. e., killed—and that we, being new creatures in Christ, may live in Him, through Him and unto Him, that "the same mind that was in Christ may be in us," that we may "know Him and the power of His resurrection." "Not my will but thine."

From this, which appears to be the Apostle's and Savior's idea of prayer, we feel that "our desires" have no place at all, excepting as they may be assuredly His desires, in prayer.

Oh, that we may open our souls to be filled with His fulness.—The Presbyterian Standard.

"Be Ye Perfect"

A recent illustration on "Be ye therefore perfect, even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." Traversing one night a city street, I was startled by a sharp clanging above my head. On looking up, I found myself directly beneath the tower wherein a huge clock was striking the midnight hour. I took my watch from my pocket, and lo! the slender, overlying hands were pointing exactly to the hour of twelve. It scarcely seemed possible that that tiny piece of mechanism in my hand could keep time with the huge machinery that filled a whole room of the tower; but the proof was before me, and as I gazed at the two pairs of hands of such diverse proportions, I understood as never before that the most insignificant human being needed only to be clean, in running order and divinely regulated, to keep time with divinity itself—to be perfect even as the Father is perfect.—Selected.

When Mr. Gladstone once was asked what is the remedy for the deeper sorrow of the human heart—what a man would chiefly look to as the power which would enable him manfully to confront his afflictions—his answer was: "I point to something which in a well-known hymn is called 'the old, old story,' told in an old, old book and taught with an old, old teaching, which is the greatest and best gift ever given to mankind."

BIBLE SCHOOL BOARD

Graded Bible School Lessons

The following minute was adopted by the recent Five Years Meeting in regard to Bible School literature: "Believing that the lesson material should be adapted to the needs of the pupil, we recommend that the management of our respective schools adopt the International Graded Lesson System at the earliest possible date, with such adaptation of courses as seems most desirable."—(Min. page 267).

The first clause of this sentence contains the secret of the production and wide use of the International Graded System of Bible School lessons. The Uniform lessons were a great advance upon previous methods of Bible School work, but many people felt that while they were excellent in many ways, they were not meeting the needs of the pupils. This unrest caused the production here and there of private courses of study, oftentimes produced by individuals who are not competent, and of systems of Graded work on larger lines. This caused great confusion and was becoming a great detriment to the serious work of the Bible school. Then, in 1908, the International lesson committee, the ones who had been putting out the Uniform lessons, took up the matter of more adequate lessons and the International Graded lesson system is the result. Believing that their own Uniform lessons were not well adapted to the needs of the pupil, they sought something better, and the phenomenal success of the Graded work is the evidence of how well they succeeded. They still continue the Uniform lessons, but recommend the Graded lessons for all the younger grades.

In publishing the Uniform lessons, different denominations and publishers selected their own writer and published their own helps and interpretations of the Scripture portion. A very few, like the Sunday School Times and David C. Cook Publishing Co., were strictly non-sectarian. As the cost of publication was so great, the Friends were not able to publish helps of their own and were compelled to buy from another denomination or non-sectarian house.

When the Graded lessons were adopted, instead of each large denomination publishing its own helps, the M. E. Church North, the M. E. Church South, Congregational and Presbyterian Churches united their interests, and irrespective of denominations, secured the best consecrated talent possible to write the helps for the study of the lessons. These lessons and helps are all published by the Methodist Book Concern, New York City, and each of the denominations has its own imprint on the cover and its own preface or introduction. The content of the lesson material is the same for all. About thirty other denominations are now using these lessons. We have not sufficient talent or the money to put out as adequate lesson helps. We do have the privilege of using the productions of these talented people in the study of Bible School lessons. If we can order in sufficient quantity, we can have our denominational imprint on each publication.

The Graded lessons were produced then, because of the demand that lesson material should be adapted to the needs of the pupil.

The lessons were selected and authorized by the same International committee which has and still issues the Uniform lessons.

The helps to the lessons published under the auspices of the four denominations mentioned, are the work of the best men and women that could be found. They are persons who are deeply consecrated to the work of Christ and the Church, each a specialist in his or her department. The ultimate aim of each writer, is the salvation of the child.

WHAT WE MEAN BY "GRADED LESSONS"

Many people are confused by the term, "Graded Lessons." They seem to think it means examinations, day school methods, etc. It means simply that the lesson material is graded for different ages of pupils. For instance, the little tot four or five years old has a simple Bible story such as it loves to hear at its mother's knee. The child seven years old has such lessons as will show God's "power, love and care" and will lead the child to loving trust and obedience. The child nine years old is taught such use of his Bible as will lead him to read in it and love it. Here the lessons also continue to teach the "power and majesty" of Jesus Christ and by story and illustration strive to lead the child to the right choice. The child thirteen years old is taught the great lessons of heroism, and the lives of such great men of the Bible as will best awaken a desire for noble deeds and discipleship of Jesus Christ. (A grade is issued for each year from four years to sixteen.)

Thus a "Graded Lesson" means that instead of the little folks and older children all having the same lesson, on "Hezekiah's Sickness and Recovery," or the "Letters to the Seven Churches," or "Paul's Second Missionary Journey," they have lessons graded to their understanding. Instead of the teacher having to introduce such supplementary work as will fill up the time, the child has a lesson which it can understand, which the teacher can understand, and which will minister directly to the religious life of the child. Each year with the child is an advance over the last year, so that they make steady progress in the knowledge of the Bible, and are brought to a definite knowledge of Jesus as their Savior.

THE SCOPE

The Graded lessons at present affect only those classes of children from the ages of three to sixteen or seventeen. So the introduction of the Graded lessons into our Bible schools will not affect the older classes. It is recommended that they continue the use of the Uniform lessons, using such helps as they find most serviceable.

HOW TO BEGIN USING THE GRADED LESSONS

The time to begin using Graded lessons is the first of January, April, July or October. That is the beginning of each quarter. Few schools are so large that they have a class of children all of one age. But if in a class numbering twelve, three of the pupils are eight years old, five nine years and four ten years, it would be the best to take the average at nine years and begin on the first year of the Junior work. A good way to introduce them is to use them in all the younger classes and continue them each year in the Graded work.

THE DEPARTMENTS

The work is classified as follows: Beginners' grades, all under six years. Primary grades, three years, 6 to 8 years. Junior, four years, 9 to 12 years. Intermediate, four years, 13 to 16 years. Senior, four years, 17 to 20, when all completed.

EFFICIENCY IN OUR BIBLE SCHOOLS

Not only has the church lost many of its children, but it has let them drift away from God as well, because of lack of zeal and earnestness in their behalf. No better field for service is open to the church, than that already within its walls in the thousands of children of the Sunday school, who are in the forming but unformed period of life. Better that a millstone were about our neck and we in the depths of the sea, than that we by negligence or deed be the cause of their going astray. In the matter of effective work, the new Graded lessons are the greatest help that has come into the possession of the Bible school workers of the church. The Five Years Meeting made the minute as strong as possible—"We recommend that the management of our respective schools adopt the International Graded Lesson System at the earliest possible date, with such adaptation of courses as seems most desirable."

Write for information, samples, experience of other schools, etc.

Let us do effective work for our Master.

SOCIAL SERVICE BOARD

What is Social Service?

A definition of social service, as distinguished from individual service, is this: That while individual service, or that which has been common to the church for ages past, will teach people how to live good lives, social service works to establish proper conditions in which to live good lives, and as an aid to right living.

Individual service will relieve poverty; social service seeks to remove the cause of poverty. Individual service, prompted by a perfectly proper motive, that of self-protection, would abolish the danger of infection from diseases or vice in one's own house or block. To remove this danger from the community, or from the town, or even from the state, is social service.

The adjective "social" is the more important word of the term. There is a great variety of service—to one's family, to one's church, to one's political party, to one's friends; from service that includes only a few to that which embraces many in its touch. Social service is essentially service to society as a group—society en bloc; not only to men, women and children as members of society, but to society in its sociological sense.

Social service through the Church has for its immediate objective the application of the Gospel to the associated life of men. It is in no manner a substitute for individual service, nor is it the alternative of individual service. It involves the definite projection of religion into all the realms of life and all the relations of man's being. It contemplates the salvation of the whole man. It seeks nothing less than the Christianization of all the institutions of life. It is the religion that saves and the religion that serves expressing itself in social terms. Its perfect goal is a saved soul, in a saved body, in a saved community.

Social service does not declare a new Gospel. It advocates rather the enlarged application of THE Gospel.

The Social Service movement is due to the larger and truer appreciation today of the Gospel as a solvent for the problems of modern life. It squares absolutely with the program of Jesus Christ. It gains its inspiration from Him who ministered to the sick and the needy, the poor and the oppressed, and who had thought for the life here as well as the life that is to come. It involves all that personal regeneration implies, and it is keen to recognize the fact that social reconstruction does not necessarily follow individual redemption. This, in fact, is one of the great points of emphasis today as social service advances.

Social service does not carry with it any new code of Christian ethics. It does not advocate any change in the function of the Church. It does not suggest that the pulpit should be converted into a forum for the discussion of sociology, economics or politics. It is not a veneered heterodoxy, and the cynical fling that one must be theologically heterodox in order to be socially orthodox is not worthy of consideration.—

[A booklet issued by the Social Service Commission of the Interfederation of Churches in Philadelphia, of which Rufus M. Jones is chairman.]

Hope is the better side of doubt. Hope is mental therapeutics; it is the laboring oar that carries the boat inshore; it is the sail away off on the horizon that betokens the long-expected ship; it is the palm tree on the edge of the desert, promising refreshment to the fainting traveler.—*Maltbie D. INDIANA YEARLY MEETING ACTIVITIES

Bible School Board of Indiana Yearly Meeting

The Bible School Board of Indiana Yearly Meeting met at Fairmount on the evening of January 17th. All members could not be present, but Richard Haworth, chairman of the American Friends Bible School Board and Clarkson Cates, president of Howard County Sunday School Association, were present and gave helpful talks. The Board greatly appreciates the help of the Yearly Meeting's Book and Tract Committee in purchasing the following books for Reading Circle and Teacher Training work:

Sixty copies of "The Teacher that Teaches," by Amos R. Wells.

Twenty copies of "The Girl in Her Teens," by Margaret Slattery.

Twenty copies of "Our Boys and the Sunday School," by A. H. McKinney.

The last two groups are especially helpful for teachers of boys' and girls' classes of the "teen" age; also to parents. These books have been carefully selected and many demands for their use are coming to Ancil E. Ratliff, chairman of this department. Last year fifty copies of "Talks with the Training Class" were circulated among the teachers of so many schools, and with such excellent results, that the above named books have been added this year. Those wishing to take the International Teacher Training Course may choose any standard course book. We recommend "Training the Teacher," by Schauffler, Lamoreaux, Brumbaugh and Lawrence.

The Five Years Meeting adopted the International System of Graded Lessons for use in all elementary and secondary grades, just so far as schools are able to adapt these lessons. We recommend their use and ask pastors and teachers to become more familiar with this work. All graded lesson supplies should be ordered through the secretary of the American Board, Wilbur K. Thomas, 12 Hazelwood St., Roxbury, Boston, Mass.

The Board urges that the superintendent in each Quarterly Meeting hold a Quarterly Meeting Bible School Convention at some time within the year. The advanced steps that our schools will take through holding these conventions can not be overestimated. More Teacher Training and Reading Circle classes, better grading, more organized classes for work, a broader vision of the Sunday School and its possibilities will result.

A letter was read from the American Friends Bible School Board asking that this committee contribute $25.00 toward their work for the ensuing year. The request was unanimously granted. They also ask that on the first Sabbath in March, or near then, a special collection be taken in each school in the Yearly Meeting for the work of their Board. Send all collections to the treasurer, Ancil E. Ratliff, Fairmount, Indiana. Let us be loyal to these leaders who are planning broad and advanced work for us, both financially and through our prayers.

DOROTHY LUTHER, Acting Secretary.

Indiana Y. M. Christian Endeavor Union

The Executive Committee of Indiana Yearly Meeting Christian Endeavor Union met on February 1st, at the Yearly Meeting House at Richmond, Indiana. President Harry B. Reeves and Treasurer Thos. J. Kiphart of the officers, Edith J. Hunt and Mary Doan Hole of the departmental superintendents, and eight vice-presidents as follows: Mary Kelsey, Fairmount; Rena Thomas, Fountain City; Lemoine Jenkins, Wabash; Everett A. J. Roberts, Sommerville, Ohio; Earl O. Dennis, Muncie; Myrtle Hartman, Portland; Thomas J. Kiphart, Cincinnati, Ohio; Edgar S. Mote, Richmond, were present. Our secretary, Rose Mills, Wabash, was unable to be present on account of illness.

Reports from the departmental superintendents were received, and plans for their future work was discussed. The Friends' Literature Department, Mary Doan Hole superintendent, is this year furnishing a book, "The Message and Mission of Quakerism," by William C. Braithwaite and Henry T. Hodgkin, to all societies.

The Missionary Department, Edith J. Hunt superintendent, is making a very vigorous effort to raise the general average of missionary contributions from the present very low mark to at least $1.00 per member for the year. This would produce $1,200.00 or $1,300.00 annually.

The committee to arrange for the mid-year convention reported the time of the convention as May 30 to June 1, at Portland, Indiana. The program is complete with two or three exceptions, and announcements will be issued in a day or two to all Quarterly Meetings. The programs will be printed in souvenir form with copy of the Yearly Meeting C. E. song on back cover. Copies of this song, notes and words, may be secured by applying for them to your Quarterly Meeting Vice-President, and asking him to secure them for you.

For the committee,

E. S. MOTE, Richmond.

The Christian Endeavor

Topic—Mission Work at Home and Abroad. II. Medical Missions. Matt. X: 7-11.

This is distinctly a missionary age. Despite the materialistic spirit so prevalent everywhere, the burden of missionary endeavor has fallen upon the heart of Christendom as in no other period of the world's history. Modern missionary effort has become a passion with a multitude of believers, who hear anew the Master's command to "preach the gospel to every creature."

The coming of multitudes from the ends of the earth to our own land, to be assimilated into our life and customs has given new emphasis to home mission activity. The church must become the aggressor in organized attempts to Christianize these aliens, or else suffer in consequence of its own inaction.

No less truly are the world's movements, material and otherwise, rendering it imperative that the gospel be carried into every land, as the forerunner of civilizing influences that are inevitable. At home and abroad, God's spirit is moving mightily in the hearts of men, and the church must keep abreast of her opportunity.

It was inevitable that in holding up Christ as the Savior of all men, His mercy and His benevolence should be portrayed, as when He personally walked among men, healing the sick, opening blind eyes, unstopping deaf ears, and ministering to the needs of suffering humanity.

Hence the emphasis which has ever been laid upon medical missions. Both as a real act of mercy to those who have not the benefits of modern medical research, and as aid to the impression of religious truth, the relief of suffering has been a necessary part of the missionary movement. In almost every mission field, the ability to heal the sick, has been the open door to effective evangelistic effort.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

The Annual Congress of Wilmington Yearly Meeting's Bible School Union will begin at Wilmington, Ohio, on the evening of February 13th. Two sessions will be held on the following day.

The meeting at Charlottesville, Indiana, is making a study of the work of the Five Years Meeting, including the reports of the commissions. The study is being conducted in connection with the mid-week prayer meeting, and it is found both interesting and profitable.

From a letter received from London, England, dated January 25, we learn that L. Oscar Moon, of Baltimore, had recently attended Bristol and Bedfordshire Quarterly Meetings and that he was then in Yorkshire. He had previously been spending some days in London.

A ten-day's meeting was held at Commerce, Iowa, January 21 to 30, by Clark Brown, pastor of Cumming and Commerce Meetings. While there were no visible results upon those outside, the membership was strengthened and greater numbers attended than have for some years past.

The Friends Bible School, Wilmington, Ohio, organized a young men's class, Sunday, January 26, with President Hodgkin for teacher. It is composed of young men from twenty to twenty-five years of age. There were twenty-four charter members, most of whom had not been attending.

Alexander C. Purdy, who has been studying at the Hartford Theological Seminary for the past three years, has recently been awarded a fellowship by that institution granting him two years' study in foreign universities. Mr. Purdy will likely spend some time in study both in England and on the Continent.

Roy Ambrun, of Parker, Indiana, assisted by John Young, a singing evangelist, together with the pastor, David J. Coppock, has just closed a successful revival at Arba, Indiana, resulting in forty-nine conversions and renewals. There have been a number of accessions to the meeting by request. To the Lord be all the praise.

Chicago Quarterly Meeting was held at the Chicago Meeting House the first instant. No visiting Friends were present. The message of Noble Trueblood, La Porte, Indiana, delivered in the morning meeting was much appreciated. Several took part in vocal service. Dinner was served in the Bible School room, after which the regular business session of the Quarterly Meeting convened. Herman Newman addressed the Bible School and Christian Endeavor conference in the evening.

The first meeting of the Chicago Quakerism Class was held the 29th ultimo. Eighteen were present and considerable enthusiasm was manifest. The class reviewed briefly the political and religious conditions prevailing in England at the time of the rise of the Society of Friends.

A series of meetings was held at Plainview, Nebraska, December 26 to January 12, by E. G. McDaniels of Grant, Nebraska, and Edwin Ellis of Sloan, Iowa, a singer. Twenty-one persons received definite blessing, five have made request for membership, and more are expected to follow.

The suggestion has been made in some of the meetings at Richmond, Indiana, and vicinity, that the Minutes of the Five Years Meeting be sold at ten cents per copy. The proceeds to be applied in reimbursing the Yearly Meeting for its proportionate share of the cost. Some of the meetings are taking advantage of this suggestion.

At Wilmington Quarterly Meeting, Ohio, held on February 1, an appeal was made that Wilmington Yearly Meeting do its part in helping to increase the subscription list of the AMERICAN FRIEND. Monthly Meetings were instructed to appoint soliciting committees and have their local meetings canvassed for new subscribers.

Friends at Ashton, Maryland, have planned for a series of lectures on early church history, to be given in their meeting house by the high school teacher, William Boyce. The first of these was given on January 17 and was listened to by an interesting audience of seventy-five persons, many of them members of the other branch of Friends.

Adrian Quarterly Meeting was held at Raisin Centre, Michigan, January 31 to February 2. The intense cold made the attendance smaller than usual, but those who attended had a royal feast. The ministry of William Kirby was greatly appreciated. Arthur Haldy was also present and participated in the services. On Sabbath afternoon an interesting program was held on foreign missions.

During the week of January 19th, Anna D. Stabler, of Washington City, visited friends at Somerton, Va., and was much impressed with the opening for the work of Friends in that community. The members, though few in number, are earnest and faithful and are doing good service among their neighbors, who look to them for many favors.

At Purchase Quarterly Meeting, held at Chappaqua, N. Y., February 1, a committee with members from each of the Monthly Meetings was appointed to secure subscriptions for the AMERICAN FRIEND, so that every family in the Quarterly Meeting may have the benefit of the periodical. The opinion was expressed that similar action should be taken in all our meetings.

Instead of the regular prayer meeting the last week in January, members of University Friends Church, Wichita, Kansas, listened to reports of the work done at the Five Years Meeting. The speakers, who were given fifteen minutes each, were: President Edmund Stanley, Dr. William L. Pearson, Professor Edgar H. Stranahan, and Lewis E. Stout. Those who heard the reports were greatly blessed and the information given will be valuable to the membership.

Rufus M. Jones, of Haverford, is giving a series of five lectures at "The Hartford (Conn.) Theological Seminary," on the general subject, "Spiritual Reformers of the Sixteenth Century." His topics include: "The Main Current of the Reformation;" "Hans Denck and the Inward Word;" "Bünderlin and Entfelder: Two Prophets of the Inward Light;" "Caspar Schwenckfeld's Revival of Primitive Christianity" and Sebastian Franck: an Exponent of Inward Religion and the Invisible Church."

A three-week's series of meetings at the Friends Church, Knightstown, Indiana, closed December 13. The meetings were conducted by Milo Hinckle, pastor of the Friends Church at Farm-land, Indiana, assisted by Dalton Lewis and wife, of Dublin, who led in the singing. Milo Hinckle's sermons were plain and forcible and calculated to arouse a devotional spirit in the hearts of all. His gift as an efficient evangelist was very manifest and the meeting here was greatly strengthened by his labors. At the closing service, seven persons offered their names for membership.

The Young People's Conference, under the direction of Wilmington Yearly Meeting's committee on young Friends' activities, was held in the Friends Church at Wilmington, Ohio, on the afternoon and evening of February 2d. The following subjects were under consideration: "Quaker Literature and Study Circles," by Elsie McCoy; "The Inheritance of Quakers," by Albert J. Brown; "A College Student's Point of View," by Ralph Miars; "Call of Quakerism," by Clayton Terrell; "How to Advance the Cause of Quakerism," by Mary Mills. The attendance was good, and the interest excellent.

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Friends Meeting at Dayton, Ohio, is proving to be a real aid in the life of the congregation. Invitations were recently sent out for an "Everybody's Birthday Party" and an enjoyable social was held. Many who could not come sent their birthday pennies and many of them a larger sum, so the amount reached $151.05, which will be used toward paying off the debt on the church building recently purchased. Anyone desiring to contribute to this fund, may address the President, Emma H. Unthank, 27 Buckeye Street; or the Secretary, Ednah S. Peelle, 812 Neal Avenue, Dayton, Ohio.

Nixon and Minnie J. Rich, of Fowler Quarterly Meeting, Kansas, moved near Vilas, Baca County, Colorado, last September and began work at the home school house four miles south. They were chosen superintendent and teacher of the Bible class. There having been no church services, they conducted service after Bible school. This is a needy field they are taking for the Master. On January 11, with the help of Fred Johnson, of Fowler, Kansas, they held twenty-one sessions in which there were four conversions, six renewals and many others blessed and strengthened. Sixteen have applied for membership with Friends of Lone Star Monthly Meeting, Stevens County, Kansas.

Falmouth Quarterly Meeting was held in Portland, Maine, on Seventh and First days, February 1 and 2. Susan Berry Sisson, of Iowa Yearly Meeting, was present and much favored in her presentation of the Gospel on First day. At the business session time was taken for presentation and discussion of the Quaker Round Table. The need of social service in the rural communities is apparent, and the Round Table should be a center and inspiration for such activity. Careful and scientific studies of the rural problems were urged upon the meetings. One session of the meeting was taken up in listening to a full report of the Five Years Meeting, presented by Charles N. Woodman.

A series of special evangelistic services was held at Chester, Ohio (Wilmington Yearly Meeting), January 16 to 30, led by Jehu Reagan, of Carmel, Indiana. For weeks previous there had been united prayer that God would visit the neighborhood with a spirit of conviction, and that the church might more clearly see her opportunity in the center of a community with a large number of talented, enthusiastic young people, many of whom attend the Sabbath school and Christian Endeavor, but do not have Christ in their lives. The daily Bible readings, in which all took part, and the clear, forceful teaching of the Scriptures were seasons of blessing and close heart searchings. As a result sixty-four were converted and reclaimed, and there were thirty-one accessions to the church. The members are united in their consecration that these young people may become established in the Christian life, ready for effective service in the activities of the church. This foundation has been laid and the outlook for the future is hopeful.

Three interested members of the little meeting at Fishertown, Pennsylvania, have long prayed for the welfare of their meeting. Last fall one of this number built a bungalow, in which is a room specially designed for social work and neighborhood gatherings. To this room, recently the owner invited the members of a small class of the "teen" age in the Bible School, and organized them for work. They took for their class name "Win-a-fellow," and for their motto "Do and Dare for Christ." They began immediately to put this motto into practice and soon a young man, whom they were working to win, rose in the union prayer meeting and said, "pray for me," then fell on his knees and the Lord answered his supplication. The next Sabbath another member of the class confessed her Savior, and at the next class meeting it was suggested that a more protracted effort be made and it was agreed to hold meetings in the new bungalow. With no outside help these young people went ahead in faith and the Lord richly blessed their efforts. At the last accounts, nine had professed conversion and nine were under deep conviction. The owner of the bungalow writes, "Is not this a house warming of God's own planning?"

LAWRENCE—Cordelia Lawrence, a beloved member and elder of Rhode Island Monthly Meeting, died of heart failure at Portsmouth, R. I., December 20, 1912, aged sixty years. She leaves a husband, son and daughter and a host of relatives and friends to mourn her loss. Converted in early life, her later years were an exemplification of the "life hid with Christ in God" with a "heart at leisure from itself to soothe and sympathize." She was a life long member of Friends and was converted early in life. She was a consistent Christian, always ready to help in the church and faithful to the end.

With the Children

Richer Than She Dreamed

"Mamma, why can't I have nice things like Mamie Mathews?" Mrs. Bridges looked up from her sewing and across to where her daughter was sitting, "Why, Dorothy, are we not taking care of you well enough?"

"Well, mamma, Mamie has so many things; I went around to her home after school this afternoon. They have an automobile and we haven't anything of the sort; and beside she has a gold watch and so many nice things in her home. I'm really ashamed to have her come in here."

"Do we not feed you and clothe you and send you to school, Dorothy?"

"Well, anyhow, I don't think it's fair that some people have so many nice things and others have none."

"How was the baby at Mrs. Mathews's house?" asked Mrs. Bridges.

"Why, mamma, how strange you talk! Don't you know that there is no baby there? Mamie is the only child and that's why she comes over here; just to see our baby."

Just then a little cry from the crib in the next room announced the awakening of baby Bridges. "I'll speak to papa about the matter this evening; I think we can arrange to get some of the things you speak of," said Mrs. Bridges.

"O, how nice that will be!" exclaimed Dorothy.

That night Mr. and Mrs. Bridges conversed for some time after Dorothy had gone to bed. Finally Mr. Bridges said, "I think your plan is a good one, dear; anyway, we will try it."

Upon the morrow, as Dorothy was preparing for school, Mr. Bridges called her to him. "Dorothy, your mamma has been telling me that you would like to have an automobile; in fact, as many pretty things as Mamie Mathews."

Dorothy hung her head just a little but answered, "Yes, papa."

"Well, Dorothy," returned her father, "I think that can be arranged all right. I have a plan whereby I can have ten thousand dollars by tomorrow and then you shall have everything you want."

"O, won't that be perfectly lovely!" exclaimed Dorothy.

"Yes, I think so myself," added papa.

"And just think of the good things I can have; an automobile, a gold watch and so many other things," and she clapped her hands in ecstasy.

"Very well, Dorothy. Mamma, bring baby to me," and Mrs. Bridges came from the adjoining room carrying the little six-months-old baby, all wrapped up, ready for an outing.

"Why, papa!" exclaimed Dorothy, "how strange in you to take baby out this early in the morning!"

"I know it is unusual," replied Mr. Bridges, "but I thought I would get my money as soon as possible so you could have some of your nice things."

"But, papa, what has baby got to do with it?"

"Just this, Dorothy, Mr. Mathews was asking me yesterday morning how our baby was getting along and when I told him how cute and lovely he was, he looked up and said, 'I would give ten thousand dollars for a baby like that, and—'"

But Mr. Bridges could not finish. Dorothy rushed up to her papa, caught the baby to her arms, "O papa! don't, please, don't take baby away; I'll never say another word; no, never," and she cried as though her heart had broken.

"But Dorothy, see what I can buy with ten thousand dollars."

"I don't care, papa. I would rather have my baby brother than all the world; I don't care for automobiles; I don't care for Mamie Mathews's house; I want my brother; please, papa."

"Very well, Dorothy, here is baby," and Dorothy almost smothered it with kisses until the little one crowed for joy.

"And, papa, I'm never again going to say what I did last night. I never thought before that we were so rich. But we are, aren't we, mamma?"

"Yes, Dorothy," and Mrs. Bridges smiled to see how happy her Dorothy was at last.

Somebody's Grandfather

Who does not love the boy who shows respect for old age?

Recently, in one of the waiting rooms in the depot of a large city, there entered a bright-faced young boy, leading by the arm a man with snow-white hair. The latter was old and trembling, and looked around him most fearfully.

The boy escorted him to a seat, and placed the basket and bundle he had been carrying on the floor beside him. Then, with a word or two, he went away. He returned presently with a porter, to whom he spoke some words about the one sitting down. Then with a hearty handshake, accompanied by a bright smile, he started in the direction of the door. A gentleman going out at the same time, who had witnessed the advent of the boy and the old man, said, as the door was reached:

"Your grandfather, I suppose? Going on a journey?"

"Not mine, but somebody's grandfather," was the reply given with a little laugh. "Poor old gentleman! I found him on the corner as I was going to school. He had lost his way to the depot, and was in trouble. He's going to his daughter's in the suburbs. I wish I had time to put him on the train, but I should have been late to school if I had waited, so I gave him into the porter's hands."

"That was very right and kind of you," the gentleman said, with an appreciative look, that made the blood surge to the boy's face; but the latter only said, "Thank you, sir."—Exchange.

A DIFFERENCE

It Paid This Man to Change Food

"What is called 'good living' eventually brought me to a condition quite the reverse of good health," writes a N. Y. merchant.

"Improper eating told on me till my stomach became so weak that food nauseated me, even the lightest and simplest lunch, and I was much depressed after a night of uneasy slumber, unfitting me for business.

"This condition was discouraging, as I could find no way to improve it. Then I saw the advertisement of Grape-Nuts food, and decided to try it, and became delighted with the result.

For the past three years I have used Grape-Nuts and nothing else for my breakfast and for lunch before retiring. It speedily set my stomach right and I congratulate myself that I have regained my health. There is no greater comfort for a tired man than a lunch of Grape-Nuts. It insures restful sleep, and an awakening in the morning with a feeling of buoyant courage and hopefulness.

"Grape-Nuts has been a boon to my whole family. It has made of our 2-year-old boy, who used to be unable to digest much of anything, a robust, healthy, little rascal weighing 32 pounds. Mankind certainly owes a debt of gratitude to the expert who invented this perfect food." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. "There's a reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Western Work

We quote the following from the Penn College (Iowa) Bulletin, for January, which will be of interest to Friends generally.—EDITOR.

"Since 1894 Iowa Yearly Meeting of Friends has published a monthly paper called Western Work. The object in doing this has been the dissemination of news concerning the church. This purpose has been well accomplished. The various departments of Western Work have been popular with Iowa Friends.

"Recent developments, however, seem to make the continuance of Western Work unnecessary. The Friends of America have provided for the publishing of a great national weekly paper, which will meet the need of the entire Society. This new periodical will be called THE AMERICAN FRIEND, and will begin at the first of the year.

"This is a significant undertaking. It indicates a unity of purpose and action among American Friends which is most commendable. It suggests that the day for controversy is past and that of co-operation is at hand.

"The management of Western Work, wishing to join heartily in this enterprise and desiring to clear the field for THE AMERICAN FRIEND, has decided to discontinue its publication. We commend to all our subscribers the new paper and solicit their patronage. Every family in Iowa Yearly Meeting should subscribe for the new AMERICAN FRIEND.

"That the new periodical will fill the place of Western Work among Iowa Friends is not to be expected. The space which it can give to news of the entire field will not nearly equal that given by Western Work to Iowa. Yet, in spite of this fact, we should remove all obstacles so that the undertaking may not be handicapped by competition.

"Knowing full well that the news of Western Work will be missed, we purpose to make the Penn Bulletin meet this need, at least in part. The Penn Bulletin is published monthly and is sent free to all who desire it. If you do not receive it, send name and address to Penn College, Oskaloosa, and it will be sent to you.

Discontinuing The Interchange

Our friend, John R. Cary, publisher of The Interchange, made the following announcements in the December issue of his paper, which will be of interest to all our readers:

After very careful consideration it seems best to discontinue the Interchange and this number will be the last. The proposition suggested last month involving general participation has met with practically no response, and it is not feasible to continue on the present basis. The thing for us now is to do what we can to make the AMERICAN FRIEND useful to our Yearly Meeting and to the rest of the Society, by subscribing for it, persuading others to do the same, and sending items of news to our friend, S. Edgar Nicholson, the editor.

It is quite probable that the AMERICAN FRIEND has been going into a larger proportion of the homes in Baltimore Yearly Meeting than in any other. Whether this is true or not, we can do a very important work for the church by making it true for next year. The new management takes charge January 1, 1913, with our friend, S. Edgar Nicholson, editor and manager. The Board of Publication is a strong and representative one. * * *

I am extremely anxious that Baltimore Yearly Meeting should give hearty support to the new paper, for our own sake as well as for the help to the paper and to the Society at large. We are a small body, and many of our members belong to small meetings. We need the stimulus and encouragement which comes from hearing what is going on elsewhere. We need the messages from the different Boards, and we need to be reading Quaker literature as well as farm papers or technical magazines. We may not think the paper up to the standard of other weekly papers, but one way to make it better is to increase the number of subscribers and thus add to the sum which can be spent on it. Can we not have one person in each meeting trying to place the AMERICAN FRIEND in every home?

JOHN R. CARY.

HONEST TOIL

EVERY mason in the quarry,
Every builder on the shore,
Every chopper in the palm grove,
Every raftsmen at the oar—
Hewing wood and drawing water
Splitting stones and cleaving sod—
All the dusty ranks of labor,
In the regiments of God,
March together toward His triumph,
Do the task His hands prepare;
Honest toil is holy service;
Faithful work is praise and prayer.

Editorial Comment Upon Current Topics of the Day

A committee from the Department of the Interior has been investigating the status of the government care of the Indians. The report is not reassuring. On the contrary, it is found that a deplorable condition exists. The Indians have been defrauded of their property, and many are living in misery, poverty and disease. The situation calls for some speedy and heroic action at the hands of Congress.

The Women's Foreign Mission Board of the Presbyterian Church is conducting a "China campaign," which will culminate in a series of meetings in New York City, February 28 to March 3. The board has obligated itself to raise $300,000.00 of the $735,630.00 required by the church for mission work in the new Republic. China as a Republic marks an advance in civilization, but China as a Christian Republic will mark a new era in world evangelization.

Complaint is being made that the French government is gradually endeavoring to place a ban upon missionary endeavors in Madagascar. In some instances Christians are forbidden to engage in worship at all. It seems that the blight of the old infidelity of France is being perpetuated, not only to her own hurt, but to the injury of all who are the subjects of her influence. In spite of official pressure, the missionary movement is growing in the island, showing that God overrules the wrath of man to praise Him.

Striking proof that the Bible is finding an open door into the new China, is the fact that in Hunan Province, where a careful canvass of the business districts is being made, not more than one in thirty of the business houses refuses to purchase a copy of the Scriptures. The American Bible Society has just issued a Bible in the Hinghwa dialect, to be used in the Fuhkien Province, and it is significant that the English form of letter has been utilized. China evidently intends taking no backward step, now that her face has been set toward the dawn.

Last week the national heart turned toward the anniversary of Lincoln's birth. This week it is concerned with memories of the "Father of our country." They are names that will be an inspiration to American youth for ages yet to come. By force of circumstances, both had to be concerned with the bloody struggles of war. Yet both were lovers of peace. The fine sense of Lincoln's honor, and the devotion which Washington displayed are like oases in the desert of present-day political corruption and legislative subterfuge. The nation does well to remember these foremost statesmen of history, and with the passing of the years will lay emphasis increasingly upon their real worth.

The United States will be compelled to get along a while longer with a four-year presidential term. The resolution which proposed a six-year term with a prohibition against re-election, and which passed the Senate, has been postponed till another session of Congress by the House Committee. The propriety of the proposed change is open to serious question. There has been little public agitation in behalf of the measure, and it is doubtful if the public mind has any serious opinions upon the subject. If through misfortune, a really bad chief executive be chosen, a four-year term is all too long. In case of a high-grade executive, the country should not be deprived of eight years of his services. We doubt, too, the propriety of the country having to face the uncertainty of an experiment, every time it must choose its president.

The great parade in behalf of woman suffrage, announced for Washington City on March 3d, is attracting almost as much attention as the inaugural parade the day following. It is hoped that every State will have a delegation in line, and it is estimated that the marchers will number into the tens of thousands. With the New York legislature adopting the equal suffrage resolution in both houses, with the Pennsylvania house agreeing to a similar measure by a vote of 130 to 70, with the committees in both house and senate in Missouri reporting a like resolution favorably, and with the Montana senate agreeing to the same almost unanimously, the advocates of the cause are having their innings this winter. It is expected that the Washington parade will help to convince the public that women really desire the ballot. It will be one of the notable events of the year.

The text of Secretary Knox's reply to the British protest on our granting free passage through the Panama Canal to our own coastwise vessels was published on January 24. Secretary Knox claims that Sir Edward Grey's protest was written before Great Britain knew what the United States intended to do about canal tolls and expenses; that remission of tolls is a domestic subsidy; that the tolls are equitable and work injustice to none; that differences of opinion on the question between the two governments may well be settled by diplomatic conferences; but that, if this seems impossible, the matter in controversy might be referred to a commission of inquiry for examination and report. The British press comments unfavorably on the note and maintains that the United States is breaking plain treaty obligations.—C. E. World.

In a day when loose evangelistic methods have prevailed in greater or less degree, it is of more than ordinary interest to note the following from the conservative United Presbyterian, of Pittsburgh, concerning one of the most widely discussed evangelists of this decade: "An invitation is to be given to Rev. William ("Billy") Sunday to hold meetings in Pittsburgh. It has been joined in and signed by the various ministerial associations of the city, except that of the Lutheran Church. These brethren find themselves unable to overlook the unconventional and irreverent habits of speech and also attribute instability and superficiality to the work of conversion done in his meetings. There has been a very general change of opinion among many others in this vicinity who once held similar opinions and had like feelings. Closer view of his work, better acquaintance with his personality, and a consciousness of the profound way in which he is able to stir and move the life of communities have produced the conviction that no other evangelist of the day has clearer credentials as to his commission to persuade men to be reconciled to God."

Learning to Meet Difficulties

"As thy days, so shall thy strength be."

Much of human energy is wasted through worry. Forebodings shadow the vision of present opportunity, and veil the glory of that which is to be. Faith is obscured by the dread of the unseen and the unknown.

A wag has said that his greatest troubles were those that never happened. Men try to cross bridges before they reach them. Difficulties which have no existence except in the imagination enfeeble the whole being.

Worry is a manifestation of the lack of faith. It never cures an ill, but magnifies every trouble. It doubts God's ability or willingness to help, and discredits one's own capacity to receive the promised assistance. It is a species of petty infidelity that should have no place in a life that is hid with Christ in God.

"As thy days, so shall thy strength be." Every new experience brings its own blessing. With every new duty comes the strength required to perform it. An abiding faith finds no stumbling blocks that are insurmountable. Trust in God enables us to meet our responsibilities in detail with assurance and complacency.

In our secret musings, we conjure up difficulties that will probably await us in the performance of some dreaded task, only to find when we are face to face with the occasion, that all fear is gone, that grace is given for the emergency, and the labor is performed with gladness. Is not that an experience common to us all? And from it should we not learn the lesson of living in the present to the glory of God, trusting Him for all the experiences of the future?

Oh, if we could only learn to shoulder the burden that is at hand, without borrowing the burdens of tomorrow, and next year, and of all the future! How unnecessarily solicitous we are about the strength we are going to need, and not enough concerned about utilizing the strength which we now possess for the task at hand! Let us be willing to trust God, now, constantly, every moment that we live, and the future will take care of itself. It is the Master's promise to His obedient children.

A Church with a Mission

The Society of Friends, from its earliest history, has emphasized intensive religion. Personal accountability to God has been a fundamental tenet of our faith. The protest against priestly functions and high church ordinances early developed an individuality of experience, that soon found expression in our administrative forms.

The doctrine of freedom of conscience was an education against the dogmatisms of both church and state. The message centered upon the individual unit, while regarding the church as a confederation of believers, with the emphasis laid upon its constituent parts, rather than upon its corporate existence.

Out of it all grew an individualism, which, while it has intensified personal experience, has lacked somewhat cohesive power in religious service. In fleeing from the dictum of credal authority which found expression in ecclesiastical tyranny, our fathers drifted to the antipodal extreme, and fell into the error of minifying the coordinated activities of a collective body of believers, with a well defined purpose to move en masse against the powers of darkness.

Thus it was that personal service was subordinated, overmuch perhaps, to personal experience. To live right was held to be the chief object of existence, and rightly so, except that the teaching was blind to the fact that service is the corollary of life, and that life collectively has greater potentiality than life in its individual capacity.

It has only been in later years that the conception of an organic union, with possibilities of power beyond that which personalism discloses, has begun to take hold of the church in any large measure. Without lessening the value of personal religion and without in any measure diminishing the joy of personal experience, may we not have erred in failing to discern a definite and distinct mission which characterizes us as a body of Christian believers, about which to rally not only our own members, but all who come within the circle of our influence?

Our great concern for a decade and more has been the character and quality of our denominational message. But may not the uncertainty of our message have depended in large degree upon the uncertainty of our mission? Our ideals as a church body have not been identical. In fact, is it not true that many a local meeting has had no ideal, beyond aiming to hold its own, and endeavoring to establish a high grade of social relationship, tintured strongly with a Christian profession?

Perhaps we criticise more sharply than the circumstances warrant. Sometimes the surgeon's knife is the only remedy. Our concern is that the Society of Friends as such may have a mission, well defined, so pronounced that all may recognize it who will. A church without a program is apt to drift, and is like a human life without a purpose.

What is the mission of our denomination today? Who can define it concretely? For what are we aiming? To what purpose are our activities directed? For an answer, how many of us would emphasize the same things?

We would not be misunderstood. We do not believe that anything can or should take the place of the holy life to which all are called. We would have no substitute for that high grade Christian character and stability of personal experience in Christ Jesus, which has ever marked the true Quaker. Our burden now is that the thought of the entire church be directed to the certainties of our purpose and our mission, however they may be defined.

What holier purpose can we have as a denomination than the transfusion of our Christian life and experience into the needy life of the busy, material world all about us? What may we not accomplish if we set ourselves to the task of assimilating the realities of our profession into the life of the social order, which we touch at so many points? Who can measure the horizon of our influence, if unitedly we endeavor to realize upon our investment of character and experience and faith, by applying them to the practical needs of the everyday problems of human life in all its varied aspects?

As pioneers in the cause of international peace, we ought now to be its staunchest and ablest advocate. Having set a high standard of business probity, our message should be a trumpet's call to honesty in the business world, at a time when the thought of the nation is turned in this direction. Having voiced a conviction against slavery in an early day that helped to arouse a dead public conscience, let us be none the less slow to proclaim now against the slavery of vice and corruption and greed that is crushing hope out of the lives of multitudes. As an advocate of personal and public temperance in the very early days of the reform, let us not now be lax in its advocacy as a world and nation wide remedy for the debauchery of this age. As examples of the purity of life, which has ever characterized the disciples of Fox and Penn, let us seek to lead others into the experience of this blessed truth. Called of God to manifest the certainties of our faith, let us be a missionary church, intent upon incorporating our practice and principles into the social, industrial, political and national life of the masses, at the same time ministering to their spiritual necessities as evangels of the truth of God.

While disavowing all purpose to proselyte, let us be determined to let our light so shine "that others seeing your (our) good works, may glorify your (our) Father, which art in Heaven." With our intensive Christian life, we ought to be able to practicalize our experiences, by making their realities available for needy humanity everywhere.

With such a program and with such a purpose, Quakerism ought to take on the zeal and life-giving power of our fathers, making our faith and our profession applicable to the necessities of this busy, materialistic age.

The New Heading

THE AMERICAN FRIEND appears this week with a new heading, which we trust will appeal to conservative and otherwise. It appeared quite impossible for Friends to agree upon the style first selected. Many expressed their satisfaction at its selection, some were merely satisfied, while some disapproved altogether. As between a perfectly plain letter and the artistic, the Publication Board has decided upon the Old English style, which seems to be a happy medium.

The Interstate Bill

Both houses of Congress have passed the Webb inter-state liquor shipment bill, and it is now awaiting action by the President. This is a substitute for the Kenyon bill. There will be general rejoicing among the temperance people, but candor compels us to express regret that the Kenyon bill unamended was not accepted instead of the other. Fuller editorial mention will be made later.

There are no aristocracies in God's kingdom. The religion of Christ is democratic. It is intended for all men in every clime. If our churches had a larger vision of the Gospel's application, there would be more spiritual births at home and abroad.

There is too much of religious socialism in the world, and not enough of social religion. The two are widely different, and mark the difference between the counterfeit and the genuine.

"Consider Christ Jesus." Heb. III:1.

BY LUKE WOODARD.

I.

Two preliminary observations should be made at the outset, in attempting anything like an examination of the unique Person of Jesus Christ. First, the source of our information is the Bible. Second, while Scripture statements concerning Him are easily comprehended by ordinary minds, there are many things involved in them, which are beyond the power of human reason to resolve. They are addressed to our reason as statements of fact, but to our faith as to the how or the mode of the facts stated. These are often beyond, but not contrary to reason.

In treating this subject I shall quote from the Bible, but in order to economize space I shall not in all cases cite the passages quoted. Readers can verify the quotations by the use of a Concordance.

CHRIST'S PRE-EXISTENCE.

He spoke of Himself as one whose existence antedated His birth at Bethlehem. "Before Abraham was, I am." "I came down from Heaven." "What and if ye shall see the Son of Man ascend up where He was before." "Father glorify thou me with thine own self with that glory which I had with thee before the world was." "I am the First and the Last."

The evangelists and the apostles repeatedly express the same mysterious truth. The Word which John tells us was made flesh and dwelt among us (evidently referring to Him who was born of the Virgin Mary), "was in the beginning with God, and was God," hence had existed eternally. Paul says, "He is before all things."

HIS ADVENT.

Not only was his conception miraculous as pre-announced to Mary, but many extraordinary circumstances attended His birth; such as the transcendent glory of the Lord, the presence and message of the angel of the Lord as witnessed by the shepherds who were guarding their flocks in the vicinity of Bethlehem, and the chorus of a multitude of angels who sang "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, and good will toward men."

Following this was the visit of the wise men from the East, who, guided by an extraordinary star, came perhaps several hundred miles inquiring, "Where is He that is born King of the Jews, for we have seen His star in the east, and are come to worship Him." These supernatural manifestations attending His birth are in keeping with what we find to be His character and mission. It was sublimely suitable to the advent of a divine Redeemer of the world that He should be thus heralded and attested.

HIS CHILDHOOD.

The Holy Spirit who indited the record of the earthly life of our blessed Lord, has veiled with slight exceptions the entire period from his birth to the time of His entering upon His public ministry, at the age of thirty.

After His presentation at the temple, where both Simeon and Anna uttered their remarkable prophecies concerning Him, Luke tells us, "The child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom; and the grace of God was upon Him."

The next mention of Him is when, at the age of twelve, He was "found in the temple, sitting in the midst of the doctors, both hearing them, and asking them questions. And all that heard Him were astonished at His understanding and answers." The next record is that He returned with Joseph and Mary to Nazareth and was subject unto them. "And Jesus increased in wisdom and in stature, and in favor with God and man."

We are not to understand this incident in the temple as merely an instance of the extraordinary precocity of a human child, but as the fore-gleam of the super-human, afterwards made marvelously manifest to those who "beheld His glory, the glory of the only begotten of the Father, full of grace and truth." It was as the dawn before the noontide splendor of the Sun of Righteousness that was soon to be the light of the world. It was the prelude to that sublime system of ethical teaching which, in an age of comparative degeneracy and moral darkness, He introduced,—a system so perfect that the combined wisdom of the ages has never been able to improve upon it. That child in the temple was a Divine child, the IMMANUEL of prophecy.

We cannot doubt the wisdom of this reserve of the inspired biographers of the human life of our Lord. It is in striking contrast with the puerile stories of the apocryphal writers, who portray their youthful hero as a worker of wonders of no moral import or service to mankind, merely to astonish or delight his youthful companions. These apocryphal wonders are destitute of that dignity and beneficent purpose so characteristic of New Testament miracles, which were not mere displays of power to excite wonder, but were the exercise of power directed to a benevolent end, and were always consistent with a rational conception of such a Being as the Bible represents our Heavenly Father to be.

Fountain City, Indiana.

The Boy Jesus

When Jesus was a boy, in Nazareth, we are told that he was subject to his parents. We cannot imagine that in his childhood Jesus ever disobeyed his mother or did anything which gave her an instant's pain. Perhaps we do not often think of him as having been a boy who played with others, learned lessons, came and went on the streets as his companions did, and on the Sabbath attended the synagogue and behaved reverently there. Let us try to imitate the boy Jesus in what we do and say.—Comrade.

Christianizing the Social Order*

BY CHARLES M. WOODMAN.

The advance steps taken by American Quakerism within the past six months compel us as a denomination to give heed to the spirit of the age, and the call of the hour. Walter Rauschenbusch, author of "Christianity and the Social Crisis," has set forth that spirit and sounded the call of the hour in his recent book, "Christianizing the Social Order." The social spirit is dominant and the call to Christianize business is insistent. This note he sounds without vindictiveness or rancor, and yet he lays bare the sins of our economic order with unerring aim and unflinching courage. He loves the masses of men, and his spirit throbs for the downtrodden, the oppressed, and those who have no fair chance. He deserves a hearing by the thoughtful in the Society of Friends. He reflects in cogent, clear, unvarnished and very readable language the problems of our generation. "Our civilization is passing through a great historic transition. We are at the parting of the ways. The final outcome may be the decay and extinction of Western civilization, or it may be a new epoch in the evolution of the race, compared with which our present era will seem like a modified barbarism." The spirit of the book points unswervingly to the latter outcome.

Christianity has Christianized the family, the church, education and political life; it must now Christianize business. Business aims at profit, and for that it sacrifices all else. It has ruthlessly invaded "God's Country," and wantonly wasted life, beauty, the institutions of love and the common good. Christianity indicts Capitalism. The spirit of the latter is antagonistic to the spirit of Christianity; it is hard and cruel and neutralizes the Christian spirit of love. It sets material goods above spiritual values. This book is refreshing because of the clear, forceful way in which it meets the scathing remark, that big business of the twentieth century and the "Sermon on the Mount" have and can have nothing in common. Where business has broken with the teachings of Jesus (and the book leaves no one to guess where that is), it is sowing the seeds of its own dissolution. It is preparing the way for a revolution which can be prevented only as business swings to the truly Christian platform, the spirit of the Golden Rule.

The book commands attention because it not only faces the issue, but more especially because it points the way out. This way out is through no utopian dream, or vague prophecy. It lays down the fundamental principles, hopefully points out the present indications of their practical workings, and fearlessly sails between the Scilla of socialism and the Charybdis of laissez faire.

The arrangement of the book is indicative of its spirit and its outlook. It opens with a review of religious conditions in the social field; it closes with an appeal for "The Revival of Religion and the Conversion of the Strong." Within the compass of this setting and in the light of it is a discussion of the economic order, which is like the grinding of the grist between the upper and nether millstones. The mills of God grind slowly, but in the process of the grinding between the upper stone of religious idealism and the lower stone of human religious instincts the social order must be Christianized.

A Bad Congressional Bill

WILLIAM C. ALLEN.

According to a dispatch from Washington, D. C., the Warren bill, "to encourage rifle practice," etc., was approved by the senate committee on military affairs, on January 29. It permits schools to obtain out-of-date army rifles for practice, and appropriates money for carrying on shooting competitions under the direction of the Secretary of War.

I hope that all subscribers to this paper, including the women who reside in states where they have the suffrage, will write immediately to their United States Senators at Washington, D. C., asking them to use their influence against the proposed legislation. It is bad for the following reasons:

1. The most prominent educators are, for physical reasons, opposed to tactics and drill for boys of high school age as a substitute for gymnasium work and free sports.

2. It is conscience-blurring. The same institution that instructs in the higher ideals also teaches the art of killing men. We cannot afford this moral damage to our youth.

3. It is not in line with the best modern pedagogic methods.

4. It tends to direct the minds of the young at an impressionable age away from the opportunities connected with the useful occupations, towards illusive and tax-creating militarism.

5. It carries with it tendencies that are contrary to the higher patriotic, moral and political ideals that our schools are primarily intended to develop.

6. It tends to foster a spirit of toadyism towards boy captains and officers.

7. The interference of the War Department in the educational system of the United States is non-American.

8. History reveals that a trend towards military ideals does not tend to the conservation of republican institutions, but just the reverse.

9. Even Germany, which uses every available man, does not teach her children how to kill.

10. Above all, this proposed legislation encourages a system that is contrary to the teachings of Jesus Christ, and which Christians should condemn.

The Home Mission Work of the Church

BY HERBERT J. MOTT

The "New Earth wherein dwelleth righteousness" may not be so far away. Inexhaustible resource is the heritage of all who have vision and faith. The actual Christianization of our home land is commanding the attention of Christian America, as never before. The United States has become the world's University. Representatives from every land are spying out our institutions, language and laws. Our very success, prosperity and greatness have brought to us an opportunity and responsibility unknown hitherto, by any people. Darkest shores are looking to us to discover the actual fruitage of the Christ way of living. The Christ that we profess to represent is now being measured by what we are. Our real twentieth century message to the world is and will be just what we are. We have no choice. There is no way to escape the issue. What we are as a people, we are for the light and leading and eternal joy of the nations or for their unutterable confusion and fall.

Efficient home mission work is the supreme duty of the hour. To illustrate: We have been sending missionaries to Africa. But for each missionary sent we have also sent two cargoes of rum. Both have been preaching. May God have mercy on America, when bleeding Africa rises up against us in the judgment! The stupendous task of really Christianizing America, is the present hour demand of Heaven. With an awakened, willing and consecrated church, our God is well able to do just this thing. This does not mean that every person in the United States will be a Christian. It does mean that the large majority must be reached and saved, in order that every statute book shall be rewritten and every legislative act shall meet the approval of Heaven.

When Christendom becomes Christian in fact, we will not need much longer to pray "Thy Kingdom Come." Christian mission work is winning souls to Christ by one sent. The only real difference between home and foreign missions is the location of the work, with reference to the location of those who send. Regular church work is done directly. Mission work, both home and foreign, is done indirectly by representatives of the church.

Home mission service may be divided into three classes:

1. City Missions. These include gospel missions, rescue missions, relief, employment, sunshine, jail, etc. Both gospel and social service.

2. Alien Races. Foreigners, resident in our country, negroes, Indians, etc. This work also includes both gospel and social service.

3. Missions in the newer sections of our cities and in the newer States and undeveloped parts of our country.

One can hardly overstate the importance of each of these three classes. All must be done. The first reaches the very lowest classes, the dregs of society.

These missions are perpetual on account of the character and migratory habits of the people. Perhaps this kind of mission work can be best done by strong churches, located in the same city. This puts the church in closer touch with the mission and makes possible much better care and supervision.

The second is the most difficult and generally must be extended to two generations. Yet it must be done for these are to be citizens. Self-interest, as well as religious considerations, demand that the first two classes of home mission work should be done.

The third class is the easiest and most fruitful. It is usually done by the church at large under the care of its home mission board. This is the great means for the extension of the church, and because of this fact, ministers to the extension of every department of church work. Any given amount of money and effort expended here, accomplishes more in the salvation of souls and the upbuilding of the church than any other possible service. Why? Because of the character of the people reached. They are civilized, intelligent, liberty-loving and law-abiding citizens. Two results follow. In a short time, in one or two years, these missions become self-supporting and are organized into churches. Then they become supporters of every church interest as foreign missions, home missions, education, temperance, etc. In other words, money and effort expended in this class of mission work is not given; it is only lent.

It is rightfully urged that the church should consider the great need of other departments of church service even though nothing can be expected in return. True; but it is suicide to neglect this fruitful one. The largest evangelical denominations were largely built up in this way. The future of every church is dependent upon it. The ideal is the "all round" proportionately developed church. One of the very best signs of our times is the great awakening of Christendom to the necessity of efficient home mission work. "The morning cometh."

Prayer and Pains

No answer comes to those who pray,
And idly stand
And wait for stones to roll away
At God's command.
He will not break the binding cords
Upon us laid
If we depend on pleading words
And do not aid.
When hands are idle, words are vain
To move the stone;
An aiding angel would disdain
To work alone;
But he who prayeth and is strong
In faith and deed,
And toileth earnestly, ere long
He will succeed.

Can Find God

ELIZA SCUDDER

I cannot find thee! Still on restless pinion
 My spirit beats the void where thou dost dwell;
 I wander lost through all thy vast dominion,
 And shrink beneath thy Light ineffable.

I cannot find thee! E'en when most adoring,
 Before thy shrine I bend in lowliest prayer,
 Beyond these bounds of thought, my thought upsoaring,
 From furthest quest comes back, Thou art not there.

Yet high above the limits of my seeing,
 And folded far within the inmost heart,
 And deep below the deeps of conscious being,
 Thy splendor shineth: there, O God! thou art.

I cannot lose thee! Still in thee abiding,
 The end is clear, how wide soe'er I roam;
 The law that holds the worlds my step is guiding,
 And I must rest at last in Thee, my home.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BOARD

It is somewhat difficult to write of the work of our Board, when our chief work thus far has been the attempt to find out what we are going to do. The request for suggestions has brought in sixteen replies, four requesting information on the character of the Board. The other twelve contained many valuable suggestions. It is to be hoped that the list of replies can soon be made complete, and a summary made for the careful consideration of the Executive Committee and the whole Board. Our plans for strengthening and encouraging the work of young people are yet to be decided upon, and there is need of much prayer for wisdom and guidance.

Our Board will be of service, if it brings before the Five Years Meeting a report of the work that is being accomplished by young people in the various Yearly Meetings, but our service should not stop here. Our plans should aim at a real growth among young people and a real training for efficient service. In some way this Board should give an impetus to the study of the Bible, of missions and of Friends' history. The younger members of our meetings must have these things, for they are the leaders of the future,—those who will minister to the varied needs of the world if those needs are met. Young people must be ready to meet the problems of city and country, the problems of our own country and of other lands, with a far-seeing vision and a deep consecration of heart and life.

It will be an important part of the work of the Board to keep in touch with the Yearly Meeting Christian Endeavor Unions and other organizations and boards, formed in the interest of young people's work. An interchange of visits by workers in different Yearly Meetings might be found helpful. A bureau of methods, plans and suggestions might well be a feature of the work of the Board. Courses of reading and study might be outlined and furnished by the Board.

Some means should be found to help young people in isolated communities to realize their responsibility and opportunity.

A Field Secretary could assist in this, co-operating with the Yearly Meeting organizations. This secretary should also hold for our denomination, young people who are attending universities and technical schools, and not leave it to Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. secretaries to present fields of service to young people in our own colleges.

The field is great and the harvest plenteous and we may well say, "Who is sufficient for these things?" May we so abide in Christ that we shall say with Paul, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me."

George Cruishank

George Cruishank, a very eminent English artist, who died in 1878, ought to be of great interest to the Society of Friends. He published in 1848, a series of eight prints, entitled "The Bottle," powerfully depicting the evils of intemperance. They were immensely popular, and were dramatized and exhibited in eight London theatres at the same time. He was himself a victim of strong drink, with personal annals brim full of experience and adventure, studying therefore with the insight of genius the breakers and perilous rocks, directly in his course. Yet, like the man in battle, his life was charmed, it was his neighbor who was doomed, not himself.

It was William Cash, a Friend, who led him to the light, to see himself as others saw him.

This Friend, chairman of the powerful "National Temperance Society," was visited by the artist for sympathy, but more for a great market for "The Bottle," and he was rightly led, for like the lame man, at the beautiful gate of the temple, he was blessed beyond his prayer, in things temporal and Divine.

William Cash attentively examined the pictures, and with a penetrating, humorous manner, turned upon the artist, saying, "How canst thou ever have anything to do with 'The Bottle,' which by thy own showing is such a scourge?" The seed was planted by Divine Grace. "Nathan said unto David, thou art the man."

Cruishank himself says, "I was completely staggered. I left William Cash, but could not rid myself of the impression made upon me." It was the genuine conversion of a great apostle of temperance, whose mighty works still follow him. He was "not disobedient to the heavenly vision." It is marvelous in our eyes, how we are all met, in our ordinary business, on the pathways of life, each of us always in the Shepherd's care, with the benediction of Eternal Life extended to us.

Charles Dickens has left a vigorous testimonial to the power and genius in these pictures, and to the graphic, perilous lesson they teach to a degenerate race, slaves of evil habits.

It is sweet to chronicle that he held out to the end of life, steadfast, earnest, ever abounding and faithful, both in word and deed. His voice, pen and pencil were vigorous, with fresh and multitudinous productions, for the restoration of men from the chains of appetite.

Matthew Arnold met "The Bottle" in the country and at once sent his tribute to the genius of the artist, as follows:

"TO GEORGE CRUISHANK, ESQ.

"On seeing for the first time his picture of "The Bottle," in the country.

"Artist, whose hand, with horror wing'd, hath torn
From the rank life of towns this leaf: and flung
The prodigy of full-blown crime among Valleys and men to middle fortune borne.

"Not innocent, indeed, yet not forlorn:
Say, what shall calm us when such guests intrude,
Like comets on the heavenly solitude?
Shall Breathless glades, cheered by shy Dian's horn.*

"Cold-bubbling springs, or caves?—Not so! The Soul Breasts her own griefs, and urged too fiercely, says;
'Why tremble? True, the nobleness of man
'May be by man effaced; man can control
To pain, to death, the bent of his own days.
Know thou the worst. So much, not more, he can."

A similar incident is credited to the Society of Friends in 1838, when a few concerned and inspired members at Cork, Ireland, gathered in a little upper room exceedingly moved at the dangers which gathered in, like a storm, upon their fellow men. It occurred to them, through that "Light that never was on sea or land," to earnestly beseech Theobald Matthew of their town, a clergyman of the Roman faith, to join them as an apostle of temperance. He acceded. He died in 1856, but not before hundreds of thousands, on both sides of the Atlantic, had written their covenants, upon his pledges to a higher and holier life. The nascent force of his august character and influence still lives unspent, reaching out with restoring energy to the remotest bounds of human habitations.

William Cash in London and that little council in Cork, pressed the buttons, the unextinguishable currents encircled the globe in the rolling years, no more to go out, with its intense grasp upon the souls and characters of men, for God reigns.

* Dian's Horn is upturned crescent with horns, on the head of Diana, goddess of the pure moon.

"The longer I live the more I see how blessed it is to trust God for everything. It brings already for this life its abundant recompense, besides ministering comfort and encouragement to our fellow-believers. Suffer this word of exhortation. It is this—pray, above all things, for an increase of faith. Just as money to the man of the world answers everything, so does faith to the child of God. How deeply important, therefore, to cry after an increase of faith."—George Muller.

The New Task That Awaits Us

BY THOMAS E. WILLIAMS

I have been greatly interested in the spirit of the recent sessions of the Five Years Meeting, and in the way the conclusions thereof have been received by the Friends who, though unable to attend, have entered into the concerns and the spirit of the gathering.

There are many great minds and consecrated hearts in all our Yearly Meetings, who are able to lead in the different departments of work as outlined by the policies of the recent Five Years Meeting. It is the opinion of the writer that the selections so far made have been most wise, and that those who have been thus called to fill places of responsibility and leadership in this movement toward better and greater things, will fill them to the glory of God. But their hands will be tied unless there is to be the perfecting of plans that will connect them as heads of departments with the workers in the different Yearly Meetings and in the local neighborhoods. In other words, the great movements as they are contemplated will depend for their success on the rank and file of the church, upon the co-operation of all. How is this to be accomplished? How is the spirit of the movement to be transmitted to the individual meetings?

It is not enough to propose the scheme and announce it in print; nor to say merely that great things are to be done, let everybody take hold and help. There are many willing consecrated workers in all our meetings, enough to give zest and force to the work of the church in this forward step, if only they could understand what is expected of them and how it is to be undertaken. Let us be very explicit about what should be accomplished and as to the methods to be used. Let the departmental heads see in the vision what great things are to be done and how they are to train others to see. Many need a set task. The gift of planning forward movements is not bestowed upon all. All cannot be leaders. Then let those upon whom God has bestowed this gift, develop it, and become leaders. It is one thing to see a great vision, and quite another to get others to see it until they are inspired to put their life into the enterprise. This is our need just now, and the church is ready for this kind of leadership.

Some one said that the Five Years Meeting did not create the spirit of the occasion. True, but it generated it. It gathered the vibrant vapor from all quarters and poured it in a shower of blessing on the church. It could not have been felt as it has only for some such gathering. Perhaps we have grown out of the period of questionings, and of feeling the way, and stand at the dawn of a glad new day. Our first task is to enable the church to be united in the vision of the glories of that dawn and then there will be a united church, with sleeves turned back, and garments laid aside that would hinder in the greater activities, ready for the real task.

Isaac Sharpless—A Tribute Worthily Bestowed

On January 25th, the anniversary of twenty-five years of service of Isaac Sharpless, as president of Haverford College, was celebrated by appropriate exercises at a Haverford alumni dinner.

Letters of appreciation from President-elect, Woodrow Wilson, and Theodore Roosevelt were received, as were appropriate poems, laudatory of Haverford and appreciative of President Sharpless, written by Charles Wharton Stork, class of '02, Edward W. Evans, '02, and Walter S. Hinchman, '00.

The life and work of Isaac Sharpless have been a valuable contribution to American Quakerism, while no less has he stamped his personality upon the educational and civic conditions of his age. No other American Friend has been better able to weigh in exact proportions the conservatism of the east and the modern progressivism of the west, and attach to each its proper measure of merit. As educator, historian, civilian, he is a type of the modest, sincere man, whose service and whose living are the glory of the Nation, to be emulated by all American youth.

TRIBUTE OF WOODROW WILSON.

President-elect Wilson wrote in part:

It is always a pleasure to pay tribute to the work of Haverford College, and that work during the last twenty-five years has seemed to those of us who have looked on, to be in no small part an expression of the character and gifts of President Sharpless. I want to express my own personal admiration for him and to congratulate the college, that these twenty-five years have been distinguished by the leadership of a man of such character and attainments.

TRIBUTE OF THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

Ex-president Roosevelt wrote in part as follows:

My own knowledge of President Sharpless's work has been largely through his writings on Pennsylvania colonial history, in which he has made himself the foremost authority. * * * He has not only elevated the educational standards of the college, but has, by sheer force of character and conviction, markedly influenced the students under him, and has been a force for good citizenship in the whole community, because of the interest he has taken in all public questions, and because of his independence and keen sense of public obligation.

EXCERPTS FROM ALUMNI TRIBUTES.

"But who could thus enlarge the influence
Of Haverford, yet lose no tithe of good Fostered by old tradition strict and wise?
As oft before, the need evoked the man:
A man of native strength and single aim.
With steadiness unhurried but unchecked
He brought the life of Haverford in touch
With larger issues, made its name a force
For honesty in business and in state,
Gave wider meaning to the Quaker creed,
Welcoming freely all who came to take What Haverford could give. Beneath his rule
Great teachers gathered to the quiet place,
Men of world reputation, yet humane
And patient with each seeker after truth.
In happy time a loyal college pride
Striking deep root, spread outward near and far,—

A spirit not content with frantic shouts
Along the raving side-line, but prepared
To furnish men whom Haverford might own,
To give of time and substance to the things
For which her teachings stood, and to be glad
For all that each might do to grace her name."

* * * * *

"To thee, oh President,
For five and twenty years our honored leader,
No less our voices raise
A song-wreathed monument of praise,
Thou to our budding youth like some tall cedar Hast shade and shelter lent.

* * * * *

"Father are thou and friend,
For both thy thousand sons have always found thee.
Though harvests come and go,
The seed which thou hast sown shall grow
Within the earnest hearts of these around thee,
In them and theirs, for ages without end."

—Charles Wharton Stork, '02.

"Amid the din of man's unrest,
His noxious haste for show,
You saw the best and chose the best,
And, knowing you, we know
That what we do of lasting worth
Must spring from spirits clear,
Calm midst the turmoil of this earth,
From panic free and fier.

* * * * *

"For, as you lived with us and worked,
Your ways informed our ways,
Your wisdom in our wisdom lurked,—
'Twas you that won our bays!
And when within us clangs discord
And grey skies dim the blue,
Our minds run back to Haverford,—
And Haverford is you."

—Walter S. Hinchman, '00.

"For five and twenty years,
This calm-eyed man who now before us stands,
Hath been our Alma Mater's truest lover,
Had faith in her 'mid fears,
Planned, dreamed and hoped and prayed for her,
In all her needs found aid for her,
And set naught else above her
In human service; put at her command
The best he had to give,
And steadfastly did live
That she might ever stand
A gracious inn beside the way of life,
Where all who pass may stay
Awhile to gird them better for the strife,
Finding wise work and play,
And sleep in chambers windowed toward the east,
Wherein some morn, ere scarce the night has ceased,
The sun of truth may flash a beam, and place
His fingers gently on the sleeper's face,
Bid him awake, with unsealed eyes to see
A wondrous world; and set him free
To mount from what he is to what he longs to be."

—Edward W. Evans, '02.

ACTIVITIES OF THE CHURCH

North Carolina Yearly Meeting Bible School Committee

We are in a position to hold a sort of review of all the Bible schools in the Yearly Meeting. They vary much in numbers, equipment, giving and general interest. Several schools have a cradle roll and a home department. We think that Deep River Quarter leads in this particular. We want these departments to be encouraged. Some schools give very systematically and some very generously. We commend a combination of the two.

We think it is safe to say that our teaching force throughout the Yearly Meeting is steadily improving. The Yearly Meeting's Bible School Committee is planning for the holding of teacher's conferences in the various Quarterly Meetings. They earnestly desire to make them helpful to every teacher in the Yearly Meeting. The program of work for these conferences is being carefully thought out. The committee wishes every teacher to realize that his work is great, and for that reason it has a great interest in him. The committee realizes that the Bible school is a strong asset of the church and nation. It is earnestly hoped that these conferences will be full of strong interest.

We want to commend most heartily the Organized Class movement. So far as reported, New Garden Bible School leads in this respect. There are in this school two Philathea classes, and one large Baraca class, with an enrollment of 40 young men. The class of older men is organized with an enrollment of 25. The average age of the members of this class is 50 years. It is taught by Prof. John W. Woody. There are few teachers in the State who equal him in equipment and ability. We have received report of a finely organized class at Marlboro which is doing good work.

We ask that superintendents of schools report all organized classes, as we wish to know just what is the status of this good work in the Yearly Meeting. We have sent out a blank card to all our Bible schools for the first half of 1913. If any school, superintendent, or secretary fails to get blanks for reports and will let me know I will at once send blanks, and an extra card for one used.

An Old-Fashioned Revival

The Glens Falls (New York) Meeting has just closed a three-week's series of evangelistic services with Mr. H. D. Sheldon of Auburn, N. Y., and W. H. Houghton of New York, singer.

In these days the old-fashioned revival services are supposed to be obsolete. These meetings have been an unquestioned success. Interest was shown from the start, on January 23, and at the closing meeting, February 11, the Ridge Street Meeting house was filled to its capacity and many were turned away, unable to gain admittance. Mr. Sheldon preaches an "old-fashioned Gospel." In his messages he emphasizes strongly the Deity of our Lord; the awfulness of sin in its nature and end; and the redeeming grace of God in the Atonement. This has been in a community that is sadly in need of the reaffirmation of the basal teachings of the Christian religion.

There have been seventy-five cards signed in which Christ is owned as Savior and Lord. These, however, but feebly indicate the value of these meetings to the church. The whole meeting has been quickened into a new life. Deep-rooted troubles have been removed. The position of the church to the whole community has been strengthened. The atmosphere has been clarified within and without and it really looks as if this old Glens Falls Meeting was about to enter upon a new era of success.

The most felicitous thing about the revival was its sanity. The interest aroused has deepened into conviction, and has never risen to a surface excitement. Those conservative Friends who awaited the meetings with fear and trembling as a dangerous experiment, are now tearfully praising the Great Head of the Church that we have been privileged to have them.

The pastor of the Glens Falls Meeting most heartily commends Mr. Sheldon and Mr. Houghton to Friends. Their methods are adapted to ours and doubtless many of us will be glad to know of them.

ALBERT G. SHEPARD, Pastor.
Glens Falls, N. Y.

The various interests concerned are uniting in a call for the observance of February 23 as a day of prayer for colleges.

The Christian Endeavor

Topic—The Ideal Christian. III. His Practical Service. Matt. V: 13-16. (Consecration Meeting.)

This is the regular monthly consecration meeting. Has its frequency impaired its sacredness? Perhaps, but not necessarily. Much depends upon the spirit in which the members assemble in the consecration service. There should be the preparation of prayer and real heart communion with the Father prior to the gathering.

There are no idle Christians. The life that is hid with Christ in God is a life of service. It is the law of cause and effect. The burning fire gives light and heat. It can't help it. They are its chief characteristics. The only way to stop the light or the heat, is to put out the fire.

All service is not well timed or wisely directed. Mere action is not service. To be busy is not necessarily to be useful.

The practicality of service may be exemplified in a myriad ways. To live for others, not patronizingly, but because a genuine heart interest impels, is its highest manifestation. The Samaritan ministered to the unfortunate man, not for glory or honor, or for politics, but because he had a sympathetic heart.

The cause of missions at home and abroad, is calling loudly for the highest and best service. The well being of the social order, political and industrial, demands sacrificial service on the part of those who would see a better world here and now. While the brothel, the saloon and the gambling den exist, there can be no idle Christianity.

In the church, the family, the school, in the workshop or on the farm, Christian service will help lighten the load for many a tired, anxious soul, that needs to be led into the way of light and salvation.

We should aim to do the thing which we can best perform, and which in performing, will best glorify God, and help our fellows. Study the task where duty calls, and by consecration seek the guidance and help of the Spirit every step of the way. We must love the Lord with all our hearts, but it is equally important that we love our neighbors as ourselves.

A complete diary of the last ten years of John Wesley's life, written in shorthand, has been discovered.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

The Friends Bible School at Friendsville, Texas, had an average attendance last year of 98, which is 69 per cent. of the enrollment.

A reading circle to consider Friends' history and biography has been carried on at Ackworth, Iowa, for some time, under the leadership of Lida Smith Hollingsworth.

Benjamin Johnson, of Richmond, Indiana, well known to Friends on both sides of the Atlantic, recently received the congratulations of many on his eightieth birthday anniversary.

In a recent issue of the AMERICAN FRIEND, in the correspondence from Saskatchewan, it was stated that 200,000 Americans went to Canada in 1912. The number should have been 20,000.

At Falmouth Quarterly Meeting, Maine, held on February 1, the interests of the AMERICAN FRIEND were presented, and a committee of one from each local meeting was appointed to solicit subscriptions for the paper.

We have received an article from A. Edward Kelsey, written on shipboard, en route to Ramallah, Palestine. The letter was mailed in Algiers, and will appear at an early date in the columns of the AMERICAN FRIEND.

The Christian Endeavor Society at West Branch, Iowa, has a Round Table on Friends' history, conducted by the pastor, Walter Miles. One of the regular meetings once a month is given over to consideration of the subject.

As a result of a recent revival effort in the meeting at Bellefontaine, Ohio, a number of requests have been made for membership. Edgar A. Wollam, of Cleveland, and Merrill Coffin assisted the pastor, O. C. Tomlinson, in the services.

Eli H. Perisho, of Indianola, conducted a series of meetings for Chester Monthly Meeting of Honey Creek Quarter, Iowa, during January. Thirty-eight were converted or reclaimed and thirty applied for membership in the church.

The meeting at Poplar Ridge, Indiana, Carmel Quarter, has just passed through a time of revival, the pastor, Jehu Reagan, being assisted by Arthur Hammond, of Carmel. The meetings resulted in definite blessing, both in strengthening the church, and in the gathering in of souls.

Revival meetings, which began with the week of prayer, closed at Lupton, Michigan, on January 26. About twenty-five received special blessing and the church has been greatly encouraged. A Christian Endeavor Society will be organized.

The Barclay (Kansas) Meeting was favored by having the services of the Gospel team from Friends University, at Wichita, December 29 to January 5. The services were very valuable in aiding Christians to feel their individual responsibility.

The recent Quarterly Meeting at Tonganoxie, Kansas, was a time of blessing. S. Adelbert Wood and Rachel Woodard were both in attendance, and were blessed of the Lord in delivering the Gospel message. Estella Hammond gave an excellent missionary address on the evening preceding.

Next year will mark the 100th anniversary of the establishment of Ohio Yearly Meeting. A committee, of which John Pennington, Damascus, Ohio, is chairman, is arranging for a proper celebration of the event. The committee is anxious to receive any information possible pertaining to the early annals of the Yearly Meeting.

The local meeting at Russiaville, Indiana, under the pastoral care of Austin Osborne, is in a flourishing condition. The Sabbath services are largely attended, and the congregation is looking forward to a successful year. At the missionary service on the morning of February 2, over $80.00 was pledged, of which the C. E. Society agreed to raise $65.00.

Announcement was made by President Kelly at the Earlham College chapel on February 12, that the college had been presented with a cane and gavel, made from the wood of rails split by Abraham Lincoln, which were taken to Chicago at the time of the Republican National Convention in 1860. The relics will be added to the museum of the college, and were presented by Hanna W. Fisher, of Tacoma, Washington.

Gurney Binford, who has spent twenty years in Japan, gave an address at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., the evening of February 7, on "Missionary Work in Japan." He said that in 1889 the Christian faith was regarded as a joke in that country, but today it is one of the elements that is advancing Japan rapidly among the civilized nations of the earth. He said that there is no likelihood of Japan going to war with the United States.

Amistad Monthly Meeting, in eastern New Mexico, was established four years ago by Fowler Quarterly Meeting, Kansas Yearly Meeting. The pastor, Waldo F. Brown, has moved to Billings, Oklahoma, and Henry M. Vore has consented to take his place. The C. E. Society assists in the Sabbath morning services, and there is an interesting Sabbath school. The classes are being organized along the forward movement lines for more effective work.

Nine Partners Quarterly Meeting was held at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., February 7 and 8. At the meeting on ministry and oversight, the subject "The Outwardness of Friends in World of Need" was considered. A conference was held on Sixth-day evening, addressed by Gurney Binford. On Seventh-day, at the meeting for business, John Piper and Martha Bell, ministers from Cornwall Quarter, were present. There was a large attendance at all the sessions.

On February 4 nearly a hundred men gathered at the Friends Church at Carthage, Indiana, in response to an invitation sent out by the pastor, J. Edgar Williams. At 7 p. m. they all sat down to a bounteous supper, prepared by the women of the church. Following this there were a number of speeches by the men on different phases of the church life. It was a most enjoyable occasion, and a means of drawing the men closer together, and will be a stimulus to more earnest work.

A men's social function was recently held in the meeting house at Carmel, Indiana, to which all the men interested directly or indirectly in the Friends meeting at that place, were invited. A good, lively program was carried out, Morton C. Pearson, of Indianapolis, being the speaker. Following the exercises, a two-course dinner was served in the Sabbath School room by the Ladies Aid Society. It was a profitable occasion, and will be of lasting benefit in the work of the congregation.

Haviland Quarterly Meeting was held at Haviland, Kansas, February 7-9. All the Monthly Meetings were represented, and all sessions were well attended. L.

Clarkson Hinshaw, Yearly Meeting superintendent of evangelistic and church extension work, was present, and also Levi Johnson, who recently located at Red Mount as pastor. Their ministry was much appreciated. Sabbath services, both morning and evening were times of special refreshing, at which seven persons were definitely blessed.

W. P. and A. C. Haworth, and N. May Haworth, wife of John P. Haworth, wish to express their appreciation of the many letters of sympathy and love received from their friends in different parts of the country, on the occasion of the death of their son and husband. They wish to assure the writers of the great comfort all these messages have afforded them, and while they would have enjoyed responding personally to each message, in consideration of the shadow that has been upon them, and because of the press of other matters, they have chosen this method of acknowledgment.

Ferrisburg Quarterly Meeting was held at Monkton Ridge, Vermont, February 8 and 9. Richard R. Newby, superintendent of evangelistic and church extension work, was present and rendered excellent service. He addressed the Young People's Auxiliary, an organization recently formed to help in the work of the church. They plan at each meeting, to have both a program of exercises, as well as a social occasion. The messages of Superintendent Newby were helpful and inspiring, and he has endeared himself to the people of the neighborhood. Ferrisburg Quarterly Meeting is on the up-grade, spiritually and financially.

That an interest can be created in a rural meeting was recently proved in the community in which Poplar Ridge Meeting, N. Y., is located. In order to get the men of the district together, a banquet was planned, arranged by the Men's Brotherhood Bible Class. The time appointed was the evening of January 21, when one hundred and two men gathered in the banquet room. After the banquet, addresses were given by three of the local residents, and by O. W. Wood, of Auburn, N. Y., and Richard R. Newby, Yearly Meeting superintendent of evangelistic work. The pastor, John R. Walter, served as toastmaster. R. R. Newby spoke on the "Debt of the Church to the Community." It was a most enjoyable occasion, and will result in increased interest in the work of the local congregation.

Friends of Clintondale, N. Y., held special meetings during the week of prayer, under the leadership of the pastor, John D. Piper. It was a time of real spiritual refreshment, the presence of the Lord being manifest in reviving power. It is announced that the pastor will remain in Clintondale another year, the meeting having extended a unanimous call to him for that purpose. His ministry since coming there three years ago has been very acceptable and effective. His wife, Susanna Piper, has proved a valuable helper in the meeting by her wise counsel and ready service. Their daughter, Helen, has also rendered valuable service. The meeting is in a prosperous condition, and is steadily increasing in attendance. The Endeavor Society is in a live condition, and interest, especially along missionary lines, is increasing.

The first Sabbath of February witnessed the close of a sixteen-day revival meeting at Pleasant Plain, Iowa, with six at the altar. Lindley A. Wells, of Portland, Oregon, and G. A. Deshler, singer, were in charge. The preaching was clear and strong on the lines of repentance and faith, the baptism of the Holy Spirit, godly living, restitution and faithful service. Cheerful Christian giving, Bible study and prayer were the constructive lines followed. The ministry was supported and emphasized by fervent, earnest prayer, and by the gospel in song. A number made confessions and restitution, and paid up old debts. A splendid work was done among the academy students. Fifty-two were at the altar, twenty of whom came the second time, to consecrate their all to Christ, and received the baptism of the Spirit. A number have made application for membership. Lindley Wells went from Pleasant Plain to Lynnville, Iowa.

The Central Friend

The following is taken from the February Central Friend, of Wichita, Kansas, and is self-explanatory:

"Just before our last issue we took up the matter of discontinuing the Central Friend and for several reasons felt that at least one more issue should be sent out. After very careful consideration and considerable consultation with interested people, it now seems best to discontinue this publication.

"From almost the start of the Central Friend, the burden has rested upon a very few, the work becomes increasingly hard and the burdens are growing. Now as a very favorable proposition comes to us and the AMERICAN FRIEND shows every evidence of being just such a paper as we as a church need, we believe it but right that we should discontinue.

"The editors are all glad they have had a chance to serve the Friends through the Central Friend. We assure you we are not laying down our job through any other motive than that which will lead us to the greatest service of the Friends Church.

"Do You Want Your Money Back? Unless we receive notice from you by the twelfth of February to the contrary, we will send your name to the AMERICAN FRIEND and they will send you an AMERICAN FRIEND for each Central Friend due you. You get paper for paper. As the AMERICAN FRIEND is the larger paper, you will get more reading than if the Central Friend continued.

"If you desire your money back, we will send you four cents for each month due, deducting two cents for postage. Please write your names, address and the date of expiration of your paper if you want your money back. It is very important to send us the date of expiration as shown by your paper, otherwise we cannot tell how much to send you.

"It is only fair to say that we will not be able to refund money until the Yearly Meeting Treasurer has funds on hands to pay the appropriations due this paper. We will file all requests and send as early as possible.

"Not for this reason, but because we want you to get acquainted with the AMERICAN FRIEND we hope you will not ask for refunds."

The Friends Messenger

The January Friends Messenger, published at High Point, N. C., has the following:

"The establishment of the AMERICAN FRIEND, under new management, at Richmond, Indiana, is a very important event in the history of our denomination. It is to be hoped that the new paper will receive hearty support and become a mighty force for the promotion of united and aggressive effort along all lines of Christian work. The editor, S. Edgar Nicholson, is a man of ability, force and achievement, and will give the undertaking the benefit of his wide experience. The establishment of the new paper will not affect the publication of The Messenger at present,—changes may be made, however, some time during the year. The editor trusts that the new paper will have a large subscription list in North Carolina.

"The work of Rufus M. Jones, Herman Newman and others is greatly appreciated by a wide circle of readers. They will retire from their duties with the good wishes of a host of friends."

With the Children

Day By Day

Just a little every day,
That's the way,
Children learn to read and write
Bit by bit and mite by mite;
Never any one, I say,
Leaps to knowledge and its power.
Slowly, slowly, hour by hour—
That's the way,
Just a little every day.

—Ella Wheeler Wilcox.

FUN FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

A Lesson in Eggs

BY MELISSA S. FELLOW

Frank and Joe were given the delightful task of gathering the eggs at their homes. One day they met and told each other of the fun they had hunting new nests.

Frank said, "Guess how many dozen eggs I found last week."

Joe replied, "Fifteen dozen."

Frank—"More than that; I'll tell in numbers we've gone over in our Bible School lesson, if you will count it up."

Joe (after getting pencil and tablet) —"All right, begin."

Frank—"Here goes. Multiply the number of great lights God created by the number of the day in which he created the whale, and that result by the number of the day He rested, then add the age of Adam, subtract the age of Methusala, add the age of Lamach, add the number of cubits in the three dimensions of the ark, then divide by the number of stories high the ark was, and add half of the number of people saved in the ark, then divide by the days it rained, multiply by the cubits high the water extended upward, and add the days the waters prevailed, and you will have the number of eggs. How many dozen were there?"

Joe—"I have it. That is fun. Next week you may find out how many I will gather."

What Nettie Learned

Nettie was sitting near a window, and the rays of the sun fell upon her, making her warm and comfortable. Outside the weather was decidedly disagreeable.

As she sat by the window, Nettie wished that she could do something great. She had been reading a paper about a woman by the name of Florence Nightingale, who became famous by her kindness in nursing the sick.

"O, I do wish I could make people happy like Miss Nightingale did," said

Nettie almost aloud. "If I could do something like that, why, I would be the happiest little girl in the world."

She slid from her chair to the floor, and, going to the dining-room, she asked her mother many questions about Miss Nightingale and her great work in caring for the sick. The more she heard of this remarkable woman, the more Nettie wished that she were older, so that she could equal her achievements.

"I wish I could be a Florence Nightingale," said Nettie to her mother.

"You can be a Florence Nightingale, if you will," said the mother, "and you will not need to leave home either. Maybe the world would not know much about the nice things you would do, but every night before you fell asleep, you would feel very happy to know that you had performed many acts of kindness."

This little talk with her mother set Nettie to thinking, and she promised herself that from then on she would try to make those about her happy.

At noon, she helped the maid wash and dry the dishes, and received a kiss in reward for her kindness.

When papa came home from work, she had his slippers ready for him by his armchair and he gave her a hug and kiss for being so thoughtful.

Even sister, who was often very cross when anyone bothered her while she was studying, gave her a kindly tap on the cheek for being so quiet.

Then she rocked the cradle until baby went to sleep, and before she herself went to sleep that night, both her mamma and papa had pressed many warm kisses on her lips.

As Nettie knelt in prayer beside her bed that night, her heart sang a glad little song, for she had been a Florence Nightingale in her own little world.—Exchange.

Helping One Another

The basket of blocks was on the ground, and three rather cross little faces looked down at it.

"It's too heavy for me," said Jimmy.

"Well, you're big as I am, 'cause we're twins," said Nellie.

"I won't carry it," said the little cousin with a pout.

Mamma looked from her open window, and saw the trouble.

"One day I saw a picture of three little birds," she said. "They wanted a long stick carried somewhere, but it was too large for one of them to carry. What do you think they did?"

"We don't know," said the twins.

"They all took hold of it together," said mamma, "and then they could fly with it."

The children laughed and looked at each other; then they all took hold of the basket together, and found it was very easy to carry.

"The way to do all hard things in this world," said mamma, "is for every one to help a little. No one can do them all, but every one can help."—Christian Leader.

How to Be Happy

A little girl was asked why she and her little sister always seemed to be so happy together. "I s'pose it's because Addie lets me, and I let Addie."—Olive Plants.

AS TO FLAVOUR

Found Her Favorite Again

A bright young lady tells how she came to be acutely sensitive as to the taste of coffee:

"My health had been very poor for several years," she says. "I loved coffee and drank it for breakfast, but only learned by accident, as it were, that it was the cause of the constant, dreadful headaches from which I suffered every day, and of the nervousness that drove sleep from my pillow and so deranged my stomach that everything I ate gave me acute pain. (Tea is just as injurious, because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.)

"My condition finally got so serious that I was advised by my doctor to go to a hospital. There they gave me what I supposed was coffee, and I thought it was the best I ever drank, but I have since learned it was Postum. I gained rapidly and came home in four weeks.

"Somehow the coffee we used at home didn't taste right when I got back. I tried various kinds, but none tasted as good as that I drank in the hospital, and all brought back the dreadful headaches and the 'sick-all-over' feeling.

"One day I got a package of Postum, and the first taste of it I took, I said 'that's the good coffee we had in the hospital!' I have drunk it ever since, and eat Grape-Nuts for my breakfast. I have no more headaches, and feel better than I have for years." Name given upon request. Read the famous little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Postum now comes in concentrated, powder form, called Instant Postum. It is prepared by stirring a level teaspoonful in a cup of hot water, adding sugar to taste, and enough cream to bring the color to golden brown.

Instant Postum is convenient; there's no waste; and the flavour is always uniform. Sold by grocers—45 to 50-cup tin 30 cts., 90 to 100-cup tin 50 cts.

A 5-cup trial tin mailed for grocer's name and 2-cent stamp for postage. Postum Cereal Co., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich.

BROWNELL—Phebe E. Brownell died at her home in Hartland, N. Y., January 29, in the 76th year of her age. She was a life-long member of Hartland meeting, and a noble example of the value of birthright membership. She was a valued elder for many years, had served acceptably as overseer, and for a long period was clerk of her Monthly Meeting. Mainly through her influence and that of her mother the meeting house at Hartland was repaired and a pastor stationed there 22 years ago. She was prominent in the work of the Quarterly Meeting and recently had contributed $1,000.00 toward the building of the meeting house at Gasport. Funeral services were conducted by George Hull, speaking from 2 Tim. 4: 7.

She was a life-long member of Friends, and served as overseer for a number of years. For several years she and her husband conducted the Orphans' Home at Westfield, Indiana, and when the Home was moved to Hadley they went and continued in charge. She leaves a husband and six children. Funeral services were conducted by Morton C. Pearson, of Indianapolis.

CARTER—Asa Carter, son of John and Hannah Carter, died at Sylvia, Kansas, February 5, 1913, aged 82 years. He died trusting in the merits of Jesus' blood.

CARTER—William Carter died of tuberculosis, at his home at Russiaville, Indiana, February 3, aged 52 years. He was a life-long member of the Friends Church at Lynn, and was held in high esteem. He is survived by his wife, three daughters and several brothers and sisters.

FLEMING—Sarah C. Fleming, daughter of Simon and Ruth Martin, was born in Yadkin County, N. C., October 3, 1824, and died at Fowler, Kansas, January 17, 1913, aged 88 years 3 months and 14 days. She was converted early in life and joined Friends from conviction. In 1865 she was married to Samson Fleming, who died in 1878. She was greatly interested in education, and rendered assistance to Fowler Academy. She leaves a daughter and family, a sister, step-children, and step-grandchildren.

JACOBSON—Andrew Jacobson was born in Stavanger, Norway, January 29, 1842, and died at Keokuk, Iowa, January 30, 1913, after a lingering illness, aged 71 years and 1 day. He had been a member of Friends Church since 1870, and was well known in Iowa Yearly Meeting. Eight children, one brother and two sisters survive him.

JOHNSON—Elijah Johnson, son of Exum and Alice Johnson, was born in Logan County, Ohio, January 25, 1826, and died at his home near Hesper, Iowa, February 7, 1913. For a long time he was an elder. Though an invalid for the last several years, he bore faithful testimony to the all sufficiency of saving grace. He is survived by his wife, Louisa T., to whom he was married in 1854.

PEARSON—Mary R. Pearson, wife of John Pearson, and daughter of Caleb and Phebe Ray Miller, was born in Montgomery County, Ohio, April 20, 1821, and died at her home at Springdale, Iowa, February 4, 1913, aged 91 years 9 months and 14 days. She was a birthright member of Friends, and was a faithful elder for many years. For fourteen years she could not walk except by the aid of crutches, and for the past few years was confined to her chair, yet through it all her cheerfulness drew to her many friends. She leaves a husband and one son. Funeral

CURRENT COMMENT

Japan is said to be in a transition state, so far as her religious faith is concerned. Having lost confidence in the old religion, the people are slow to adopt a new one. The issue is not between Christianity and idolatry, but between Christianity and Agnosticism. The responsibility of the Christian Church is tremendous, for there is grave danger of Japan becoming a land without a religion.

* * *

The Sherman anti-trust law is proving effective after all. Witness the conviction of high officials of the National Cash Register Company, and their sentences to imprisonment by a Federal judge a few days ago. We know nothing of the testimony in this particular case, but the statute under which proceedings were had, seems, after long and devious wanderings, to be coming into its own. A few more penalties of this sort will have a rare effect in compelling the observance of law upon the part of all corporations, whose operations are in any manner questionable.

There will be general rejoicing that the deplorable civil war, which has rent the capital of Mexico, is apparently at an end. It is to be hoped that the forced abdication of Madero will be followed by substantial and permanent peace and order throughout the Republic. There appears to be a question whether or not all the rebel chieftains will follow the lead of Diaz, and accept the presidency of Huerta, who has temporarily succeeded to power. Mexico evidently needs a stronger and more vital religious spirit as the ruling motive of her national life. Nothing less will insure permanency and good order in a democratic government.

With the death of Joaquin Miller, poet and pioneer, there passes away one of the unique characters in American history and literature. Born in Indiana, he later heard the call of the West, and migrated to the Rockies as one of the most vigorous pioneers of his day. There is a ruggedness about his musings that is in keeping with his romantic life and the land where his activities were mostly spent. There is both beauty and power in his writings, and despite blemishes which appear now and then, he is entitled to rank among the poets of this day. Known as the poet of the Sierras, it is natural that among his best works are, "Songs of the Sierras," "Songs of the Sun-lands," and "Songs of the Desert."

Board on Legislation and Temperance

The International Sunday School Association, through its temperance department, has issued a definite outline of its position on the temperance question, which in part is as follows:

1. Temperance Education—Educate every Sunday School member for
 - a. Total abstinence.
 - b. The destruction of the liquor traffic.
2. Regular time for temperance teaching.
- a. Observe all the quarterly temperance Sundays; let the World's Temperance Sunday, the second Sunday in November be emphasized as Christian Citizenship day.
3. Organization—A Temperance department in every Sunday School, conducted by temperance superintendents.
4. Pledge signing—Enroll every Sunday School member of proper age as a pledge signer.

In its report to the Federal Council of Churches at Chicago in December, the Temperance Committee said:

"It is a legitimate work of the Christian Church to disseminate information, to educate the young and to enlist its members in behalf of total abstinence for the individual and no saloons for the state."

This entire program is in harmony with the purposes and aims of the Board on Legislation and Temperance of the Five Years Meeting. The Sabbath School has not been made use of enough in the temperance movement. No other institution in the land is so popular. Charged in large part with the moral and religious teaching and training of the children, the opportunity is golden to teach correct temperance principles that will enable the coming generation to solve the liquor problem.

In every one of our Friends Bible Schools there should be a live, up-to-date temperance committee, that will rescue the temperance question and give it a place of first importance in the consideration of all our schools.

Pledge signing is considered out of date in many of our schools, and yet no one who has studied the question can doubt the great value of this method of enlisting the children upon the right side of the question. If every child that comes into the Bible school were pledged to total abstinence and opposition to the liquor traffic, the Friends Church of the next generation would be a veritable tower of strength in the warfare upon this evil.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

Topic—Obeying Conscience. I John III: 18-24. (A leaderless meeting.)

The concluding words of the lesson furnish the keynote to the topic. "And hereby we know that he abideth in us, by the Spirit which he hath given us." This is the ultimate test for every Christian. When the Spirit of God bears witness with our spirit, then we have knowledge that cannot be controverted.

An acute conscience is a blessing for which to be devoutly thankful. It will keep a sincere young man or woman from dangers that would be disastrous. It will turn youth away from temptations, when its dictates are obeyed.

Conscience is subject to training and education, but no matter how persistently it may be disobeyed, it probably never quite loses its effectiveness. No man, however hardened, loses altogether his consciousness of right and wrong. If that point ever be reached, the law accounts such an one an irresponsible being, and his sanity is questioned.

It is important that conscience be obeyed, and cultivated with the aid of the Holy Spirit, to a fine sense of distinguishing right from wrong. Sometimes it is difficult to distinguish between conscience and individual judgment and desire. At such times, the need of the light which comes by association with the Spirit of God is made more manifest.

There is a national conscience, a political conscience, a social conscience, a business conscience, an industrial conscience, a community conscience, a church conscience, a family conscience as well as an individual conscience. How important that in each instance, the conscience be not seared, and being clear, that it be obeyed.

Daniel Webster said: "A conscience void of offence, before God and man, is an inheritance for eternity." He is doubly blessed, who, having faced temptation, still has a conscience clear that points no accusing finger at any thought or word or deed.

The Perfection of Daily Living

"Mark the perfect man."

God's emphasis is always upon perfection. He marks it as the guide-post for human life. It stands as the goal of human endeavor. It is the vision of possibilities not yet attained, which beckons us on to larger enjoyments and blessings.

God's standards are the acme of moral responsibility. His ideals for human conduct are neither chimerical, nor are they impossible of attainment. He makes no requirement beyond the ability to perform. "My grace is sufficient for thee."

We are not now concerned about the theological definitions of Christian perfection. We are thinking rather of the holy life which is the positive effect of a continuous faith and a perfect obedience, to which all men are called. All men may not accept the manner of reasoning or the conclusions of the doctrinaire, but no one can escape the obligations of a life consecrated to the service of Jehovah, the essence of which is "to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God."

Upon two commandments hang all the requirements of the children of God: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind," and "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." This is the summary of Christian discipleship. It is perfection incarnated. It indicates the height of human attainment. It embodies the fulness of Divine fellowship. It marks that ideal of perfection which was in the heart of the Psalmist.

The perfect man is one whose living accords with his testimony; whose relationship to God is one of faithful obedience and constant devotion, and to men of unselfish ministry and brotherly sympathy. No wonder David set him upon a pedestal as the example for all the ages. "Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright; for the end of that man is peace."

Gleaning Up the Dark Places with the Gospel

In an Indiana city there is a district, popularly known by a slang name, that ill describes the wretchedness of the hovels that serve as homes for a hundred or more equally wretched human beings. It is not more than ten minutes' journey from the homes of affluence and culture, and a population ministered to by a score or more of churches.

To describe it would be to portray the heartaches and endless misery and the deepest sufferings of men and women, whom Christ came to save. Poverty is the least of the ills which have befallen this territory. Sin, dark and terrible, manifested in its last and most deplorable phases, stalks in at every door, sweeping all into a vortex of moral death, with hardly a chance to behold even a ray of hope. It is humanity rotten with disease and vice and crime, a festering and running sore upon a civilized community.

This stricken district does its full share and more in government building, municipal, state and national. At a recent election it cast more votes than there are male inhabitants, and demonstrated its readiness and ability to foist upon the balance of the city a reign of law suited to its own ideals.

The popular estimate is that this is a political problem. But is it? Not wholly by any means. In the first analysis this motley and unfortunate population is a mass of integral parts, each with an immortal soul, that was included in the wide reach of the scheme of human redemption. In the last analysis, a political system that will create and perpetuate such inhuman conditions, is not only wrong economically, but morally, and needs the regenerating touch of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

Viewed from any angle, the misery and suffering and degradation and heartache and vice and crime and sin of the world is primarily and always the church's problem. This particular district is by no means an isolated case. The same problem in varying degree confronts almost every city in our land and in all lands.

The organization of the church is founded upon the theory that the fellowship of believers is mutually helpful, and that collectively in a corporate capacity the membership should minister to the needs of others. The gospel of a Divine Saviour reaches to the farthest needs of a sinful world, else it does not save to the uttermost. But there is no lack of potency in Christ's gospel. The lack, if lack there be, is in its application by the instrumentalities that have been created for this very purpose.

Too long have the problems that affect humanity at the point of their greatest necessities, been relegated to other supervision than that of the Christian church. Christ's mission was to seek and to save that which is lost, and this sets no boundary that will exclude any suffering, sin-scarred son or daughter of Adam. At a time when the Church is beginning to awaken to a consciousness of its obligations, it should not stop short of recognizing that its ministry is for all men, applied no less to the saving of individuals than to the creation of conditions, in which the Gospel will have at least a fair chance to reach the hearts of needy men and women.

Friends are not a numerous body, and may feel that they can do little in the aggregate to clean up the plague spots which sin has set at our very doors, but if in every community where Friends reside, they will set themselves to the task not only of living the Gospel, but seeking to make practical application of it to their neighborhood necessities, a revival spirit will come upon our church such as has not been witnessed since the days of our founder. O, that men would see that it is a part of discipleship to build up the waste places of human life. "For this purpose was the Son of God manifested, that He might destroy the works of the devil."

Christianity applied, properly and with well directed attention, will prove to be the remedy for such stricken districts as that to which we have referred. There is a standard of right, the moral rule of Jehovah, by which every human problem should be measured and solved, and the church of Christ, spirit-led and Divinely guided, holds the key to its discovery.

The Webb Bill

The Webb inter-state liquor shipment measure, recently passed by a large majority in both houses of Congress, is at this writing still in the hands of the President. It is inconceivable almost that he will veto it. The strongest pressure is being brought to bear upon him by both friends and foes, which reveals the public interest in the question.

In all justice the bill should become a law, although we regret that the Kenyon bill did not have the right of way.

In brief, the Webb bill prohibits the shipment of all intoxicants from one state into another, intended to be held or used in violation of the law of the state to which shipment is made. The Kenyon bill contained this identical provision, but in addition, by the terms of section two, all intoxicants were subjected to state control as soon as they entered the state and before delivery to the consignee. The difference between the two is a long story, involving twenty years of campaigning, wherein the question of constitutionality has played an important part.

Prior to 1888, it had been the recognized policy of the Supreme Court to regard all inter-state shipments of liquor as subject to state control immediately upon entrance therein, in the absence of any congressional action to the contrary. Between 1888 and 1890, our highest judicial tribunal reversed its policy of half a century, and in the famous "Original Package" decision, decided that in the absence of any congressional action, all inter-state shipments were under Federal control up until the time the package shipment was broken, and the commodity thereby became mingled with the domestic commerce of the state.

This led to the enactment of the Wilson law of 1890, in which Congress evidently intended to relinquish Federal control at the state line, but the Supreme Court construed the wording of the act to mean that Federal control remained until delivery had been made to the consignee. Under this construction, it has been easy for the violators of law to be supplied with liquors, and in addition, an inter-state traffic has continued to supply local trade through the medium of the express companies.

The Webb bill marks the close of a twenty year campaign to secure some relief for the prohibitory territory of the several states. Its effectiveness will depend upon law-enforcement legislation which may now be enacted in the different commonwealths. Probably Oklahoma is the only state which can take advantage of the provisions of the Webb measure without additional enactment. It is thought by the sponsors of the bill that a search and seizure law, making the charge of unlawful intent as applied to an inter-state shipment, prima facie evidence of such unlawful intent, will subject the shipment to examination and trial by a state court, and thus insure the state jurisdiction that has been so much coveted. If it becomes a law, its operations will be watched eagerly by both friend and foe, and in all probability its constitutionality will have to be defended, which in our judgment will be easy of accomplishment.

The bill does not even attempt to prohibit all shipments into dry territory, as many persons have been led to believe, its prohibition being limited to the showing of facts as stated above.

No amount of man-made machinery in church work, no matter how valuable, can ever take the place of humble, faithful obedience to the call of the Spirit.

Home Missions Among Friends

BY HERBERT J. MOTT

II.

(CONCLUDED)

We have seen that real Home Mission service is winning souls to Christ in the home land, in new towns, newer territory and newer parts of our cities; leading souls to the light, establishing them in truth and organizing them into societies. Are the Friends called and adapted to this service?

During our early history Friends were almost wholly engaged in just this kind of ministry. George Fox was the ideal home missionary, perhaps the greatest in all history. He devoted his life to this service, going from place to place where there were no "birthright" Friends, no membership, and building up societies. He believed that the Quaker message was adapted to all men, and wherever he went multitudes were convinced and entered into the Light with great joy. The Religious Society of Friends was raised up of the Lord to do "exploits" in the home mission field. Indeed this is our mission.

For one hundred years Friends were true to their calling, and how marvelously their labors were blessed! Had we continued loyal to our mission the Friends would ere this, have become the largest protestant church. We were intrusted with a great mission and it is not yet too late to fulfil it. The twentieth century offers to Friends far greater opportunity than the seventeenth. The eastern skies begin to glow with morning light. Slowly, but surely, the re-awakening is coming. Our real mission is but begun. At the late Five Years Meeting this conviction found expression as never before in the memory of those now living. In Volume 1 and No. 1 of the new AMERICAN FRIEND, the Chairman of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board gave the first clarion call to Friends to re-enter upon our great mission. From a multitude of those who have caught the vision, the response is coming, "We will go up at once and possess the land, for we are well able."

What are our qualifications and resources? First, the mission is of Heaven. All of the treasure in the realms of the material and the spiritual are at the command of our God. He who is calling us is well able to provide for His own. Then we have a message that never grows old. Its glory is in this, that it just fits human needs. It is the truth. With others, we will teach the A B C's of the Gospel. But we must never forget that we have been supremely honored in being called to be the Priscillas and Aquilas of these later centuries. Our distinctive message is teaching the "Way of the Lord more perfectly." Our command is to give to awakening Christendom a university course in the deepest truths of the Spirit; to reveal the very substance of Spirit-life, purity and power. We have a great mission indeed. They who go forth under the anointing of Heaven with such a message are irresistible.

Then think of our schools. The splendid educational work of the Friends is not an accident. These academies and colleges were inspired of Heaven and dedicated to the spread of truth. These consecrated institutions were built upon the sacrifice and the very lives of our best manhood and womanhood, and in the providence of the Almighty, portend momentous events.

Then there are our young people, cultured in the stillness with God, quiet, unassuming, intelligent, consecrated, spiritual; they constitute an invincible force for righteousness. We believe that the Church will open the door, prepare the way and utilize this mighty force in making America really Christian. When this shall be, the influence, the uplifting and the glory of Quakerism will discount the brightest era of its past. This generation is being re-awakened, and is receiving a new vision of the mission and message of Quakerism.

It is urged that we are limited for money; that there is a shortage of available ministers for the work that we now have. The sufficient answer is that the real shortage is not men or money, but vision. There is an abundance of consecrated manhood, womanhood and money in the church, and it will be abundantly available when the vision cometh. The real present-hour need is a forward movement that will appeal to our young people as something worth while, to live and if need be die for. Friends will supply money gladly and in abundance to any movement that makes the right appeal. The real great need is something to call out, inspire and utilize our wealth of latent resource. The blood of martyrs flows in our veins. The call to a soft life appeals only to soft people. A rapidly growing, forceful church that is doing things; that is moulding life, morally, civilly, socially and spiritually, never appealed in vain. America must be saved. All things are possible with God. "All things are possible to him that believeth."

Sunday Schools in England

BY ED. HAROLD MARSH.

The Growth of a New Idea amongst English Friends.

The Friends First-day School Association of London Yearly Meeting dates back a good many years, and during the greater part of this period, it confined its attention to schools for adult men and women, commonly known as Adult Schools, and did not concern itself with work amongst children. When the Adult School movement spread far beyond the limits of the Society of Friends, an undenominational National Council was called into existence. This organization is officered and controlled by Friends, but is quite independent and undenominational. In course of time the National Council and the Friends First-day School Association found that they were covering pretty much the same ground, so to avoid overlapping and confusion, the Association handed over its work to the National Council. At that time Friends felt the need of a far more active and sympathetic interest in religious work amongst children, so a complete change came over the work of the First-day School Association, and from that time it has devoted itself entirely to children's work.

About 1906-8, Friends in Great Britain were carrying on a great number of Sunday schools all over the country, but the work was unco-ordinated and lacked system. There was an evident and urgent need for organization, and so this work was naturally entrusted to the Friends First-day School Association.

The association found itself in the unique position of being a free agent, inheriting neither tradition nor policy, so it was in a position to look around and study impartially all the Sunday school methods which were being tried, and adopt the best. It adopted the latest and best method, which is based on a careful study of child psychology, which involves grading the children into classes according to age and capability, and the providing of Bible Lessons different from each other and appropriate to each grade. Many of the roots of this system are in America, and it was introduced into England by a Canadian, G. Hamilton Archibald, who is now in charge of the training institution for Sunday-school workers known as West Hill, at Bournville, of cocoa fame, near Birmingham.

In advocating this graded system the association found itself embarking on pioneer work; there was no literature nor lesson courses and helps suitable for them. So the association proceeded to prepare and issue both. The first important move was the publication of a monthly magazine, Teachers and Taught, giving carefully prepared notes for teachers on the Bible Lessons. The magazine was popular, and has had a rapidly increasing circulation which now extends far beyond the limits of the Friends' denomination, both at home and in the foreign mission field. A sample copy will be sent for four cents, on application to the Secretary, Friends First-day School Association, 15 Devonshire Street, E. C., London, England. Annual subscription, fifty cents. American stamps may be sent for small amounts.

Teachers and Taught is the most prominent but by no means the only publication of the association. There is also a full range of very modern literature bearing on religious education of children and Sunday-school work in particular. During the last few weeks the first five of a series of Teachers and Taught text books have appeared. These are uniform in style, and cost, post free in America, thirty cents each, bound in limp cloth, and forty-five cents in cloth boards. In addition, the association publishes, suitably mounted, sets of copyright colored pictures, many of them by well known artists, illustrative of Bible scenes, for use with the lessons and also little models, specially made for the association, of houses, sheepfolds, tombs, etc. A full prospectus of the association's publications, etc., will be sent on application to the Secretary.

Conference of Foreign Mission Boards

BY CHARLES E. TEBBETTS

Among other matters brought out in the report of the Home Base Committee of the Conference of Foreign Mission Boards were the following:

NON-CHRISTIAN RELIGIONS IN THE UNITED STATES AND CANADA.

"This as a general subject has been very fully discussed recently in a Mission Study text-book by Miss Vermilye, which was published by Fleming H. Revell Company under the direction of the Home Missions Council and entitled, 'Conservation of National Ideals.' The material is contained in chapter five, under the heading, 'Non-Christian Faiths in America.' In the 'Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science' for September, 1909, the entire volume is devoted to Chinese and Japanese in America. The Committee has conducted correspondence with a number of prominent leaders, among them Mr. Shriver, of the Presbyterian Board of Home Missions. He reported that their work among non-Christian peoples was largely with the Jewish race, and that they were employing a young man who was giving much attention to the subject of Jewish missions in several large cities in the United States and Canada. Other boards are conducting similar missions for Jews, for Orientals, and for peoples from the Levant.

"Miss Vermilye's definition of the term 'Non-Christian Religions' is: 'Those forms of religious faiths which do not acknowledge Jesus Christ as supreme leader, authoritative teacher and redeemer from sin.' She divides the non-Christian faiths into three classes: Un-Christian, Anti-Christian, Non-Christian.

"Under 'Un-Christian' is included the large proportion of the population that acknowledge no religious affiliation; also the orthodox Hebrews who do not acknowledge Christ as Lord or teacher; the Mormon hierarchy who follow practices contrary to the moral sense of the Christian Church; Christian Science which in its philosophy is Hinduistic, denying the reality of sin, and places Mary Baker Eddy above the Christ; and Spiritualism which embraces a number of cults.

"Under 'Anti-Christian' are included some forms of socialism represented by organizations which exact from their members oaths of antagonism to all religious bodies and abstinence from all religious practices. These are they who follow the teachings of such leaders as Voltaire, Strauss, Renan, Ingersoll.

"Under 'Non-Christian' are included Buddhism, which finds its modern exponent in Theosophy, and is gaining some ground; and Mohammedanism, which is reaching out after converts in this country through Bahaism, its leading exponent having spoken recently in many of the large cities of the country. It is significant that Mohammedanism reports twenty-four organizations with 1,280 adherents taught by trained leaders. There is also a revival of Parseeism with headquarters in Chicago. The old worship of Isis long neglected in Egypt, is finding a home in America. In Los Angeles, California, there dwells Baba Bharati, an Eastern holy man who teaches the Vedantic philosophy and has established the worship of Krisna. This faith is also propagated at the summer school at Green Acre, Maine.

"At a meeting of the Federal Council held in Chicago in December, 1912, the report of the Home Mission Committee contained the following:

"'One of the most startling facts, confirmed by investigation, is that Buddhism in Seattle, San Francisco, and Los Angeles, is aggressively propagating itself from these centers. Buddhist temples have been erected in which cultured priests administer the rites and ceremonies of their religion, and through a series of lectures are reaching large numbers of Americans, especially women. Christianity is thus being put on the defensive, and is grappling in the struggle with religions and cults of the Orient. Recently thousands of Hindus have come to the United States. Next to nothing is being done for them by our churches.'"

"These facts are given to indicate the problems which are presented by the presence of the devotees of these foreign religions. Although it is not easy to secure accurate statistics on this subject there is undoubtedly a tendency everywhere manifest to turn from Christianity to these alien or anti-Christian faiths. Forty-eight new sects were added to the already large number in the United States from 1900-1910. On the other hand, the last census shows three-fifths of our population without church membership.

"We should not overlook the large number of Indians in the United States and Canada who could properly be classed as non-Christian. Their number in the United States, exclusive of Alaska, is 300,545. They are no longer a decadent or vanishing race, but have been increasing in the last generation. The total number of Protestant Christian adherents is estimated at 70,000, and of Roman Catholic at 106,000, but some of these are referred to as baptized pagans. In Canada the total number is 111,000. There has also been a great influx of Mexicans who, while having a form of Christianity, are in many respects quite as non-Christian as the Chinese and Japanese. This whole sad problem can be summed up in a single sentence,—that in the United States we have now what some one has called a 'vast social laboratory,' where experiments in religious, social, economic and race relationships are being tried, and whose result no man is wise enough to foresee. The duty of the Church in relation to these peoples is very plain: First, there should be efficient co-operation on the part of all the Boards interested. About a year ago there was organized the 'American Workers for Orientals on the Pacific Coast.' This practically embraces all the denominations engaged in work among Orientals. Second, support should be given the effort that has been recently made to induce the Japanese to become independent and self-supporting."

The following resolutions were adopted in a recent meeting of the American Workers for Orientals:

"In the case of the Japanese we urge: (1) Hearty co-operation of the Dendo Dan (Interdenominational Missionary Society) in strengthening the work already organized. (2) We recommend denominational subsidies to the Dendo Dan in extending the work among the scattered people in camps, etc., without decreasing the present appropriations by the Boards for work already established. (3) That the converts resulting from such special effort be urged to unite with the churches of their choice."

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION

The Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching has eliminated from its privileges all colleges under denominational control. It provides liberal pensions for professors in approved colleges and universities under state and private control. This, of course, puts the denominational colleges under a distinct disadvantage. Members of the faculties, present and prospective, of such institutions very naturally put the question, "What does the future have in store for me if I remain in a denominational school?" And the question is not an easy one to answer.

None of the colleges under the jurisdiction of the Five Years Meeting has been able to provide a pension system of its own, and what is even more pathetic, none is able to pay salaries such that a pension system is not needed. Strong members of these faculties are constantly being invited to join the faculties of the more favored institutions. One of the hopes that the Board of Education has had is that a Friends' pension system may be devised. The Board of Trustees, appointed some years ago by the Board of Education, of which Asa S. Wing, of the Provident Life & Trust Company, is Chairman, stands ready to hold funds which may be intrusted to them for this purpose. Not a very large sum would be needed to get this system established, as the number of eligible professors at any one time is not great. It is hoped that some one before long, will encourage the Board and promote the cause by making the first donation for a pension fund.

Since the Board of Education has been established, two courses of lectures have been given at several of the educational centers throughout the country. These courses were delivered by President Isaac Sharpless and Dr. Rufus M. Jones, of Haverford College. The question has been raised as to whether it is not about time for another such course of lectures. It is thought by some that it would be a more practical thing and probably more immediately fruitful to send out a qualified inspector who might also deliver addresses as occasion offered. There is no doubt whatever but that any school will be benefited by the visit of a capable inspector. Such a person with proper insight and courage can make suggestions for improvement which can be carried out at once, as well as assist in formulating plans and fostering ideals.

In many states the public school system provides for such supervision by a non-resident official. Sometimes the high schools are inspected by a representative of the state university, and sometimes by members or agents of the State Board of Education. In some states the State Board of Education inspects universities, colleges and normal schools also. These inspections cover the entire range of school administration. The physical condition of the buildings and grounds with reference to comfort, sanitation, and economy of management, the laboratory, library and other material equipment, the course of study, the schedule of recitations, the qualifications of instructors and the methods of instruction are all taken into consideration. The Executive Committee of the Board of Education would be pleased to hear from college presidents and school principals on this point, as to whether or not such an inspection would be desirable. Of course, in our case the function of the inspector would be suggestive and advisory only; the inspector would carry no legal authority. The expenses would probably be met by the Board of Education.

On the 11th and 12th of next month there is to be a conference of the Council of Church Boards of Education at the Colonial Hotel, Cleveland, Ohio. The general theme is, "Efficiency in Christian Education." Sub-topics which will be discussed are "Beneficiary Aid," "An Interdenominational Educational Campaign," "Week-day Religious Instruction and the Public Schools," "Economy in Higher Education," and "Comity and Co-operation." The Friends Board of Education will be represented in this Conference by the Chairman.

ROBERT L. KELLY, Chairman.

Peace Association of Friends in America

The work of the committee on Peace for the past month has been chiefly that which is involved in the publication work which is being carried on. One phase of that work is the preparation of the matter which is now appearing regularly in the AMERICAN FRIEND under the title "The Peace Movement Among Friends." Another phase includes especially the publication of the Messenger of Peace; and since some readers of the AMERICAN FRIEND are also subscribers to the Messenger of Peace, a few words of explanation seem to be due with respect particularly to the policy which has been adopted of using in the Messenger of Peace matter which has been prepared under the direction of the Peace Committee, and published first in the AMERICAN FRIEND. Briefly stated, the considerations which led to the adoption of the present plan of publication are these:

1. The situation in the United States and Canada with respect to the peace reform seems to be critical, demanding, therefore, greater activity on the part of Friends in two important ways, namely: First, in informing ourselves more fully in regard to the various phases of the movements designed to aid in establishing world peace; and second, in using all possible means to induce those within our sphere of influence, but outside of our own membership, to identify themselves actively with some phase of peace work.

2. For the accomplishment of the first object the new AMERICAN FRIEND seemed to be the only logical and suitable means.

3. For the accomplishment of the second, the publication of a periodical such as the Messenger of Peace seemed desirable. For financial reasons, however, this seemed at first impossible, and in the earlier deliberations of the committee the opinion prevailed that the publication of the Messenger of Peace should be discontinued.

4. When the mailing list of the Messenger of Peace was examined, however, it was found that by far the larger proportion of its paid subscribers were not members among Friends, and the plan was therefore conceived which has been referred to above, of reprinting in the Messenger of Peace matter which appears in the AMERICAN FRIEND. This required a change of form of the Messenger of Peace, and it is therefore, being issued now as a sixteen-page paper, size of page, five by eight inches, instead of a larger sized eight-page paper, as it has been heretofore.

Some new matter is of course, to be published each month in the Messenger of Peace, and it is hoped that Friends generally may be sufficiently aroused to the importance of the work of the peace reform, to be glad to subscribe for the Messenger of Peace, as well as the AMERICAN FRIEND, thus having at least one copy of a live peace periodical to hand on to some one who is reading no peace literature.

On behalf of the Peace Association of Friends in America,

ALLEN D. HOLE, President.

Richmond, Indiana, February 20, 1913.

Are you a disciple of the Lord Jesus? If so, he says to you, "I am with you always." That overflows all the regrets of the past and all the possibilities of the future, and most certainly includes the present. Therefore, at this very moment, as surely as our eyes rest on this page, so surely is the Lord Jesus with you. "I am" is neither "I was," nor "I will be." It is always abreast of our lives, always encompassing us with salvation. It is a splendid, perpetual "now."—Frances Ridley Havergal.

The Peace Movement Among Friends

[This Department is designed to afford an opportunity for a presentation of important phases of the Peace question, and will welcome correspondence which gives information in regard to the progress of the Peace movement anywhere among Friends, or which reflects clearly the views of any of our readers, younger or older, on this important subject. Such correspondence should be addressed to Allen D. Hole, 615 National Road, West, Richmond, Indiana.]

International Arbitration or International Justice?

The Difference.

Arbitration is often thought of as a means by which conflicting claims may be impartially considered, and by which at last a decision may be reached which shall render justice to all concerned. That such has not always been the case is generally recognized, and the hesitation shown by many men to any further extension of the principle of arbitration in international affairs is doubtless in part due to this fact. Arbitration has been proven to be an effective means for preventing war. Arbitration also secures decisions which in the main establish justice in much larger measure than wars can secure. Yet, from a variety of causes, a body of arbitrators, whether called by the name of court, commission, or board, often admits principles and practices which are more nearly akin to expediency than to justice. In other words, the awards of arbitrators are sometimes, strictly speaking, compromises; not judicial findings based on the real merits of the issues involved.

An Illustration.

Senator Lodge in a recent number of The Outlook, has given a specific instance of this kind of arbitration in the case of the commission appointed to decide the controversy between England and Venezuela, as to the location of the boundary line between the possessions of those two nations. In regard to this commission and its decision Senator Lodge says:

The American judges were Chief Justice Fuller and Mr. Justice Brewer, of the Supreme Court. They went to Paris with the somewhat innocent idea that they were to hear the case and decide it on its merits, exactly as they decided a case in their own Supreme Court. They found, however, that the two English judges had no such conception of their functions, but were there as representatives of England, holding the positions of advocates instead of judges. The result was that the decision rested with the fifth man, Mr. Martens, and he, apparently under instructions not strictly judicial, was prepared to decide entirely in favor of England, although the English case for a large part of the claim was of the most shadowy character. It was very important, however, to England that the award should be signed by all the arbitrators, and that which was most essential to Venezuela was to preserve her control of the mouths of the Orinoco. The American arbitrators consented to sign the award if the mouths of the Orinoco were left to Venezuela, and this was done, all the rest of the disputed territory going to England. If the rest of the territory belonged to England, the mouths of the Orinoco also should have been hers. If the mouths of the Orinoco belonged to Venezuela, England was not entitled to a large part of what she received. In other words, the judgment of the arbitral tribunal was a compromise and not a decision on the merits of the case, in which it followed the course of most arbitrations, and disclosed the weakness of which arbitral tribunals have hitherto nearly always been guilty. This failing is that they do not decide a case on its merits, but make a diplomatic compromise, giving something to each side.

The Present Situation.

As shown by the above illustration, there is among thoughtful men a measure of dissatisfaction with arbitration as a means of settling international differences, and the reasons for dissatisfaction seem to be good ones. As instances such as that given above become generally known, the method of arbitration must more and more fall into disfavor. To many this will, of course, at first seem to be a great calamity. Friends of peace may feel that this distrust of arbitration is being fostered by leaders in the military departments of our government. Some may even feel that if arbitration no longer commands the hearty support of the leaders of our nation, the outlook for world peace is growing dark indeed.

Such views, however, must be discarded when the true meaning of our present situation is seen. The dissatisfaction with arbitration as a means for the settlement of international disputes is of the same kind, relatively, as the dissatisfaction which the children of the pioneers felt when, as men and women about to establish homes, they thought of the log cabins in which their fathers and mothers had spent their lives. The log cabins of the pioneers gave place to better dwelling-places. Arbitration, even though it has not always secured full justice, has brought untold blessing to the world; but now it must give place to some method which will add to the blessings of peace, the blessings of a fuller and more nearly perfect justice as well. Arbitration has served a double purpose: it has spared the nations from the untold curse of many a war, and has at the same time stimulated clear thought to such a degree that the ideal of international justice is now seen to be possible of realization.

What Can Be Done Now.

A decision as to the exact steps which should be taken in order to provide a suitable means for securing substantial justice between nations, can be made only by men who are experienced in questions of international law; but this does not mean that other citizens can have no share in the work. It is always to be remembered that at least in nations like the United States and England, advanced steps in any reform can be taken only as an enlightened public sentiment supports such measures, and even at times demands that action in the desired direction be no longer delayed. Men of experience in international affairs have for some time been working at this problem of replacing arbitral tribunals by a court of justice for all the nations. At the last Hague Conference much was accomplished in this direction, even though the final result at that time was a recommendation in regard to the matter instead of an agreement to establish a court at once. And since the Conference adjourned, much time and thought has been given to the matter with the result that various definite propositions have been made and are being considered.

One of these propositions is that the United States and England, or these two nations and France should act together in the establishment of a court of arbitral justice, such as was recommended by the last Hague Conference, without waiting for all the powers to unite in such action. A court thus constituted could, of course, have jurisdiction only in cases affecting the nations, thus taking the responsibility for its organization; but it is believed that such a court is within the meaning of the recommendation referred to, and would be the best method of procedure, not only in the interests of the nations directly concerned, but in the interest of the final establishment of a court for all the nations. This plan was advocated and discussed in some detail by Thomas Raeburn White before the American Society for the Judicial Settlement of International Disputes, at its meeting held in Washington, D. C., December 21, 1912. The full text of this discussion is given in the Advocate of Peace for February, and deserves the careful attention of every one. Mr. White points out:

1. That the establishment of such a court is necessary before much further progress can be made in securing agreements between nations to use peaceful means in the settlement of all disputes.

2. That the lack of such a court is probably responsible for part of the opposition to the ratification of the general arbitration treaties between England, France, and the United States.

3. That the establishment of such a court should be undertaken immediately, lest the next Hague Conference should alter the recommendation which is now in force, so that the establishment of a court by a few of the powers only would be impossible.

We can all help to bring about this very desirable advanced step by speaking about it to our neighbors and friends on every suitable occasion, and by using every other means within our reach to cause those whom we meet to continue to think about the question. Meanwhile let us not forget how large a place arbitration has made for itself in international affairs, and to how great an extent it has secured for the nations the blessings of peace; and, while joining in the effort to secure something better, let us consistently continue our efforts to maintain and extend the principle of arbitration as a substitute for violent and less rational methods in the settlement of controversies.

Prizes Offered

Open Only to Children Under Fifteen.

The International Peace Bureau in Berne, Switzerland, has announced that prizes will be given for excellence in essays on some subject connected with peace under the following conditions:

1. The competition will be held in all languages, on Peace Day, May 18, 1913.

2. Boys or girls who are enrolled in school are eligible to enter the competition, provided they are under fifteen years of age.

3. The essays are to be written under the supervision of two competent persons; two and one-half hours is the time to be allowed.

4. The name of the pupil and the names of the two supervisors are to be written in one corner of the essay, which is then to be sealed up.

5. The essays must be mailed the same day (May 18th) to Mr. Emile Arnaud, President of the International Peace and Freedom League, Luzarches, Seine-et-Oise, France, or to Mrs. Fannie Fern Andrews, 405 Marlborough Street, Boston, Massachusetts.

6. The subject assigned for the writing will be taken from such as are discussed in Mr. Gaston Moch's "Brief History of Permanent Arbitration," or in the primers by Messrs. Seve & Delassus. (The International Peace Bureau in Berne, Switzerland, announces that it will send these books to any school teachers who wish to use them in preparing pupils for the competition.)

It is requested that teachers who wish to have pupils enter the competition, inform Mr. Emile Arnaud of the fact at the address given above; these notices should be sent not later than March 31, 1913. Necessary instructions will then be sent in ample time.

Worth Remembering

"Increase of armaments generates international suspicion and jealousy."—Charles Sumner.

"The more I study the world, the more am I convinced of the inability of brute force to create anything durable."—Napoleon at St. Helena.

"If the press of the world would adopt and persist in the high resolve that war should be no more, the clangor of arms would cease from the rising of the sun to its going down, and we could fancy that at last our ears, no longer stunned by the din of armies, might hear the morning stars singing together and all the sons of God shouting for joy."—John Hay.

Thousands of years ago a leaf fell on the soft clay, and seemed to be lost. But last summer a geologist in his ramblings broke off a piece of rock with his hammer, and there lay the image of the leaf, with every line and every vein and all the delicate tracery preserved in the stone through those centuries. So the words we speak and the things we do today may seem to be lost, but in the great final revealing the smallest of them will appear.—J. R. Miller, D.D.

Religious Life in Our Educational Institutions

Guilford College—New Garden Boarding School was founded by North Carolina Friends, to give their children an education under conditions as free as possible from allurements to negligence and evil.

The old expression was "a guarded religious education." To make the school helpful to the Yearly Meeting by making it helpful to the children, was the leading thought in the minds of the founders. As the school grew the result as seen in the young people who received their education here, in whole or in part, was a strong confirmation of the belief that education will repay many times over for its cost. The Yearly Meeting has used the persons who have been trained in the original school and in the college, for bearing the burdens of the church.

In the college, that is since 1888, the religious teaching has been constant and marked. Not only have the religious meetings on First-day given opportunity for preaching the gospel, but the evening prayer meetings, and the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. have exerted a strong and healthful influence for a sane religious life.

The Bible classes also, both in the mid-week and on First-day, have given a basis for religious teaching and paved the way for effective preaching and personal work.

Special meetings have been held under the direction of the Christian Associations, that have done much good by way of special effort to present the Christian religion to students. The results have many times been very marked; and the work of the Associations has been a means of opening up spheres of activity to young persons that have been blessed in a twofold way.

The distinct effort which is made at Guilford each morning at the chapel exercises, has been fruitful of much good both in the confirmation of faith and in awakening religious thought and in determining conduct.

The constant burden which many people bear for the implanting of the simple faith of the gospel, and for the inspiration of the student body with high ideals and a righteous life, has its visible effect and will yield a good harvest from year to year in the lives of the young people.

Earlham College—After one week's duration, the series of religious meetings held by the Earlham College Young Men's Christian Association for the students in Bundy Dormitory closed Sunday evening, February 16. Albert J. Brown, of Wilmington, Ohio, led the meetings, and he did a great work among the men not only in his public talks but by the personal conferences which he held. The meetings proved to be the most successful held at Earlham in the past five years. As many as ninety men took public part at different times during the week, more than twenty of whom were men who for the first time in college expressed a determination to live straight-forward, Christian lives. The meetings were well attended by the students, and every man in the dormitory was at some time during the week given a personal invitation to take a stand for Christ. The faculty members were faithful in attending the meetings and many of them did personal work among the students.

The series of meetings held for the girls of Earlham Hall was in every way as influential as the one held for the men of the college. Professor Russell led the meetings and, aside from his excellent sermons, accomplished much by his personal conferences. Nearly every girl in the dormitory took some part in the meetings and six of them claimed Jesus Christ as their personal Savior for the first time in their lives. The meetings were especially effective in strengthening the underclassmen upon whom the leadership in Christian work will fall for next year.

Penn College—

The young men in Penn College who expect to enter the ministry have effected an organization known as the Penn College Ministers' Club. There are fifteen members beside those ministers who are members of our faculty. The purpose of the organization is to afford association of a helpful character, to provide for the consideration of those things which are of common interest, and to keep those who are interested in this line of work faithful to their interest, thus avoiding the condition which so frequently results wherein some have lost their interest in Christian work. A further object is to encourage those not now in college to attend and prepare for effective work.

Haverford College—

The college tries to keep in touch with wider Christian work outside the small circle surrounding Haverford. Two of these outside interests are Foreign Missions, especially connected with China, and the Student Volunteer movement. The Foreign Missionary work in China has drawn several of the college graduates, as J. E. Brown '02, H. H. Morris '04, R. L. Simkin '03, W. W. Cadbury '98, and L. M. Smith '12, for whom Haverford raises a sum of money each year. The Student Volunteer Movement has gained many earnest adherents at Haverford, due largely to the annual visits of some one from that organization.

Oak Grove Seminary—Tom E. Jones, an Earlham graduate of 1912, was the guest of V. D. Nicholson, Earlham class of 1910, February 15-17, at Oak Grove Seminary, Maine. In two religious services arranged especially for the purpose, Mr. Jones brought to the students two very forceful and inspiring messages, that were helpful contributions to the wholesome religious sentiment prevailing at the school this year.

Friends Missionary Advocate

The February number of Friends Missionary Advocate was unavoidably late, as some of the information contained in the tables could not be obtained by the General Secretary until the last of January. It contains, however, much valuable information that all Friends will enjoy. The March number will be a Livingstone number, and will be of value to young and old, and in missionary meetings. We hope all renewals as well as a good list of new subscribers will enjoy these numbers, and all the others of the year.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

Baltimore Yearly Meeting

On the evening of February 14, Alfred C. Garrett, of Philadelphia, gave an illustrated lecture on "Glimpses of Palestine," at Friends meeting house in Baltimore. The speaker made an extensive trip through the East last year, visiting Friends' mission at Ramallah, and his lecture was very interesting and instructive. A large attendance was present, and after the lecture, a reception was held at which all had the opportunity of meeting the lecturer.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

Word has been received from the Friends mission at Matamoros, Mexico, that while the town was recently taken by the rebel forces, it was a bloodless attempt, and the mission was in no wise endangered. This will be glad news to Friends generally.

The Indiana Yearly Meeting Evangelistic Committee has sent card boxes to all the pastors in the Yearly Meeting, each box containing about 150 cards, upon which to keep the record of members, Sabbath School pupils and other matters pertaining in any way to the work of the meeting, that may be of interest to pastors.

The Quarterly Meeting held at Everett, Washington, this month was one of much enthusiasm. Several delegates were present from British Columbia, which added to the interest of the occasion. A committee was appointed to arrange for a conference of the two Quarterly Meetings in the mid-summer. Isom P. Wooten, now residing at Seattle, was present and rendered acceptable service.

The Indiana Yearly Meeting Christian Endeavor Union has issued the program for the annual convention, to be held at Portland, Indiana, May 30 to June 1. The speakers will include Elbert Russell, John L. Kittrell, Charles E. Tebbetts, Willard O. Trueblood, Fred E. Smith, Truman C. Kenworthy, Daisy Barr, George W. Wright, Dalton H. Lewis, Herbert Tormohlen and O. O. Clayton. Singing will be in charge of Eunice Kelsay.

Carthage Monthly Meeting, Indiana, took an advanced step recently when the time of monthly meeting was changed from Fifth-day morning to the evening. The first meeting at night was held on February 6. After the usual period of devotion, J. Edgar Williams read an instructive and interesting paper on the "History and Doctrine of Friends." At the conclusion of the business of the meeting the clerk, Owen S. Henley, gave a history of Carthage Meeting, tracing its origin back to Baltimore Yearly Meeting. The large number of business men and women and young people present was encouraging, and it is felt that the whole meeting will take on new life as a result.

A series of meetings began at Pennville, Indiana, January 8, and lasted four weeks. During three weeks the pastor, George W. Bird, was assisted by A. J. Fursterburger and wife, of St. Mary's, Ohio. His preaching was with power and was well received by the large numbers who attended. There were ten conversions, three claimed the blessing of sanctification, and the church and community received a general uplift. On two days, at the noon hour, seventy high-school students attended a special service held for them. At one day meeting, Maria G. Meredith, who is 91 years old, and the oldest member of the meeting, attended. She gave a bright testimony of God's love and care over her. Mrs. Meredith gave the lot, valued at $450.00, upon which the church building stands; also a beautiful window costing $50.00, which bears her name.

West Branch Quarterly Meeting was held at West Milton, Ohio, February 15. Besides the home ministers, Eli J. Forsythe, an evangelist from Waterloo, Iowa, who was in the midst of a religious campaign at West Milton, was present. The meeting for worship was notable for the intensely marked spiritual atmosphere and unity manifested. The messages of the ministers were forceful and carried truth to the hearts of the hearers. Many in the congregation took part in the services. Ira C. Johnson, evangelistic superintendent of the Yearly Meeting, together with John Kittrell and Elwood Hinshaw, rendered acceptable service. A subscription of $25.00 for Southland College was completed. All Friends were urged to take the AMERICAN FRIEND. Services on Sabbath were dismissed, probably the first time in a hundred years, on account of the union tabernacle meetings in progress in the village.

Roy H. Woolam, pastor of the local meeting, assisted by Milo C. Hinkle, of Farmland, closed a very successful revival at Centerville, Indiana, a few weeks ago. The sermons were full of the Spirit, and the blessings of the Lord fell upon the people. Hearts were hungry for the Word, as shown by the large congregations which attended. Ten persons, mostly young people, were converted, and nineteen, including associate members, were added to the church record. The Bible School is increasing in interest and numbers, the average attendance being between 90 and 100. The cottage prayer meetings had to be abandoned on account of the large attendance, and are now held in the meeting house. The C. E. Society is full of interest. The congregation at the regular church service is large. The pastor is enthusiastic in the work, which is much appreciated by the congregation and community.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

In the obituary notices in the AMERICAN FRIEND of February 13, the name of Rachel Curl Hobson should have been Amy Curl Hobson.

Mead A. Kelsey is visiting the meetings of Iowa Yearly Meeting in the interests of the new yearly meeting house at Oskaloosa, which it is intended shall be ready for dedication by next Yearly Meeting. The house, which is well under way, will cost in the neighborhood of $25,000, and it is believed will be a model Friends meeting house. This is the jubilee year in the history of Iowa Yearly Meeting, and it is very appropriate that the house, which is much needed, should be built, and that it should be ready for use at the time the meeting celebrates its fiftieth anniversary.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

A. M. Gibson and wife recently held a very successful revival meeting at Mt. Ayr, Kansas. Fourteen were definitely blessed and the church was greatly built up and strengthened. Four have made request for membership, and others are expecting to do so in the near future.

C. Frank Walker, pastor, assisted by William Pribbenow, Yearly Meeting C. E. Field Secretary, recently held a series of meetings at Stark, Kansas. Eighteen united with the church, and twenty-four with the Endeavor Society. The whole village has been awakened.

Henry C. Fellow will begin traveling the first of March in the interests of Friends University, Kansas, after spending three months with his invalid father near Greentown, Indiana. Melissa Fellow will attend the Chicago Training School during the seven weeks' Temperance course for W. C. T. U. workers, March 1 to May 1.

Abijah Cox, of Hopewell Meeting, attended the Stafford (Kansas) Meeting on Sabbath morning, the 16th, and gave a message which was uplifting to the church. Eight of the members attended the Quarterly Meeting at Haviland, and reported a good spiritual occasion. J. Arthur Wollam, of Emporia, was expected to begin a revival meeting at Stafford on the 24th.

LaHarpe, Kansas, is becoming quite a prosperous meeting again, after its years of decline, resulting from the removal of public works, causing all working men to leave town. William R. Harris has been chosen pastor and is doing efficient work as an organizer. J. L. Pitts and Philander Blackledge, both ministers, have recently moved there.

Mt. Airy Quarterly Meeting, Kansas, was held February 14-16. The presence of the Lord was felt in refreshing power. None but home workers were present, but the Holy Spirit was acknowledged as the leader throughout the meeting. William R. Gregory was granted a minute for gospel service in the limits of Iowa, Nebraska and Kansas Yearly Meetings. $33.00 in cash was raised for evangelistic work and $65 for foreign missions.

New England Yearly Meeting

The fourth meeting of the East Vassalboro (Maine) Round Table was held Wednesday evening, February 19. The theme for the evening was the doctrines of Friends with especial reference to the doctrine of the "Inner Light." Several teachers of Oak Grove Seminary took part.

The centennial anniversary of the establishment of Winthrop Monthly Meeting was held at Winthrop Center, Maine, in an all-day meeting on February 20. A luncheon intervened between the morning and afternoon sessions. The features of the occasion were an address by Charles M. Woodman, of Portland, and a poem by W. Carleton Wood, pastor of Winthrop Center Meeting.

The Bible School at Lynn, Massachusetts, has taken advance ground in the past few months, the average attendance showing a gain of over one-fourth upon that of recent years. The international graded lessons are used in all the departments for which they are intended, the pastor's adult class using Strong's "Studies in Social Reform."

Near the close of last year, Josephine Carr, of Amesbury, began pastoral work in the meeting at Salem, Massachusetts. Her service, together with the accession to the meeting of some Friends from other and stronger New England meetings, has brought new hopefulness into the outlook for that place. One of the visible results has been the organization of a promising Christian Endeavor Society.

Friends Meeting at Newport, R. I., has an organization of men, known as "The Friendly Class." It is organized to promote Bible study, social intercourse and friendly service. The pastor, John S. Kimber, is the teacher of the class, and during January, February and March, is discussing subjects pertaining to mission investigation. The subjects for March include, "Missions for Men of the Sea," "The Children of Israel," "Unevangelized Areas," and "Christianity in the Western Hemisphere."

Vassalboro Quarterly Meeting was held at East Vassalboro, Maine, February 15-16. The principal matter of business was the proposal to do away with the evangelistic committee, and turn its work over to the meeting on ministry and oversight as represented by the pastoral committee in each local meeting. Plans for definite work by these committees were discussed. The sermon on Sabbath morning was preached by Tom E. Jones, of Fairmount, Indiana, who was traveling among the Maine colleges in the interest of Hartford Theological Seminary, which he is attending. A social meeting at one o'clock was led by Edna Haviland, of Oak Grove Seminary, and the sermon in the afternoon was preached by Orlando Williams, of Fairfield Quarterly Meeting.

North Carolina Yearly Meeting

A good company, largely young people and children, gathered at the regular Sabbath meeting at Hood Swamp, N. C., on February 2. Herbert W. Reynolds was much favored with a gospel message, and arrangements were made for him to be present at the next Monthly Meeting.

Western Quarterly Meeting was held at Cane Creek, N. C., February 8 and 9. It was a favored occasion and much harmony prevailed. Several ministers were present. Rufus King had an appointment at South Fork on Sabbath afternoon. There was a well attended and satisfactory meeting at Chatham on Second-day, and one at Graham that night.

Hood Swamp Monthly Meeting was held at New Hope, N. C., on February

1. A special service was held at 7:30 o'clock by Herbert W. Reynolds, which was greatly enjoyed. Eddy Smith conducted the services on Sabbath. Friends at New Hope are very much scattered, only a few living near the meeting house. William I. Pelt has been serving the meeting since Yearly Meeting. Friends there feel the need of a good revival.

The Monthly Meeting was held at Nahunta, N. C., on February 8. Arrangements had been made for a roll call of all the members, but owing to the inclemency of the weather, only a small percentage were present. Those who came, however, felt that a closer union had been formed. A roll call is expected at each Monthly Meeting preceding Quarterly Meeting. Herbert W. Reynolds has served this meeting as pastor for the past year. There is a large Bible School, which continues every Sabbath during the year.

Contentnea Quarterly Meeting was held at Goldsboro, N. C., January 24 and 25. There was a large attendance at the Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, but no visiting ministers. Thomas Cox, John S. Moore, A. Louisa Bridges and Herbert W. Reynolds participated in the vocal services. On Seventh-day, at the regular Quarterly Meeting, Raymond S. Binford was present and had a message which was well received. Rufus P. King also gave a short message with much of feeling and comfort to the audience. In the afternoon a Bible School conference was held by Raymond S. Binford. The subjects of "Teacher Training" and "The Graded Lessons" were presented in a helpful way. W. C. Shaw gave an address on Temperance.

Leanah Hobson, who has been pastor of Mt. Airy Meeting, N. C., for more than two years, has recently resigned, in order to prepare for her expected visit to London and Dublin Yearly Meetings, accompanied by Lillian E. Hayes, of Dunreith, Indiana. They expect to attend Friends Meeting in Brooklyn, N. Y., the first Sabbath in March, and will then sail on the Mauretania on the 5th. A testimonial comes from the Friends at Mt. Airy to the effect that Leanah Hobson's ministry and her work as a pastor has resulted in the great growth and strength of the meeting at that place. Her zeal and earnestness in all departments of work have permeated the whole Quarterly Meeting. While they are sorry at her going, they pray that rich blessing may crown her work in other fields. Franklin and Mary Moon Meredith are expected to move into the parsonage and take up the work at Mt. Airy.

Ohio Yearly Meeting

Revival services began January 12 at Carmel Meeting, Ohio, Goshen Quarter, with Wallace Johnson in charge. About twenty-five were at the altar and received a blessing. Eighteen have joined the meeting, backsliders have been reclaimed, old wrongs righted and the church strengthened and encouraged. The truth was preached in a plain, forceful manner. The meetings closed on February 2.

A series of meetings at Salem, Ohio, has just closed, with Daniel J. Hodgins, of Brighton, Michigan, in charge. His clear, forceful, scriptural preaching was blessed to the edification of the hearers and the strengthening of the church. Quite a number were saved, reclaimed and sanctified, and ten gave their names for membership. The Quarterly Meeting convened during the series of meetings and was a time of great up-lift to the meetings. Ten or twelve ministers and evangelists were present. The evangelistic spirit still continues since the close of the special services, and a number have been converted.

Oregon Yearly Meeting

Newberg Quarterly Meeting was held at Newberg, Oregon, February 7-9. The meeting rejoiced at the presence of Charles E. Tebbetts, whose gospel messages throughout were earnest, convincing and powerful. H. Elmer Pemberton, Yearly Meeting superintendent of evangelistic work was present, as well as ministers and fraternal delegates from other Quarterly Meetings. Homer Cox, pastor of Portland Meeting, preached a most helpful sermon on Saturday morning. At the noon hour dinner was served in the basement, cafeteria style, by the Ladies' Aid, to a large company. A reception was given on Friday evening for Calva and Frankie Martin, returned missionaries from Kake, Alaska, at which time they gave interesting accounts of their work and displayed a number of pictures and curios. Their faithful and efficient services are much appreciated by the meeting. Charles Tebbetts visited Pacific College on Monday morning, and at the chapel hour the students and a number of Friends gathered in Wood-Mar Hall, where he gave a very impressive and practical address.

Western Yearly Meeting

Mary E. Chapman, who is serving Blue River Meeting, near Salem, Indiana, as pastor the second year, is doing efficient work in that community, an increased spiritual interest in all departments of the church work being noticeable. There is a live senior C. E. Society, and a junior was organized last year, also a W. F. M. S., which is doing good work.

Commencing January 19, a three-week's series of meetings was held at West Newton, Indiana, conducted by Simon Hester, pastor of West Newton and Fairfield congregations. He was assisted by Calvin Bray, the home minister, part of the time. The attendance throughout was very good. Quite a number of the local Methodists helped in the meeting. The membership was stirred to more earnestness in church work. The minister was enabled in a remarkable way to hold up Jesus as the only remedy for the remission of sin.

Bloomington (Indiana) Quarterly Meeting was held February 14-16, and was especially favored in having the presence of Morton C. Pearson, of Indianapolis. He gave most helpful and inspiring messages. In the Academic Association, on Saturday evening, he spoke on "The Life That Counts." On Sabbath morning, in the regular meeting, he touched scores of hearts as he earnestly discussed "Living an Easy Life, or Bearing the Cross,—Which?" He remained in the community for a few days assisting in a series of meetings, which began on the evening of the 16th, under the direction of the pastor, Enos Harvey. In the Bible School conference on Sabbath morning, Enos Harvey gave an address full of inspiration for Bible School workers.

Blue River Quarterly Meeting, three miles north-east of Salem, Indiana, was held January 25-26, and was well attended, much interest being shown. George K. Hobson, of Monrovia, and Walter Brown, pastor of Paoli Meeting, were present. Following this a very successful two-week's revival was held, conducted by Absalom Knight, of Georgetown, Illinois, assisted by the pastor, Mary E. Chapman. The ministry was searching and convincing, yet in sympathy and tenderness of spirit. Quite a number of young people and children received definite blessing, and five were added to the church. The meeting was much strengthened. The faithfulness of the pastor and the young people in personal work and in song was a great help to the services.

A very interesting workers' conference was held at New Hope, Indiana, February 14-16. A missionary meeting was held the first evening, addressed by Jennie Ridgway, of Amboy, in which she gave an account of her trip to the International Sunday School Convention at Jerusalem. The following day the reports of the various commissions to the Five Years Meeting were read in brief, followed by discussion. Melissa

S. Fellow, of Kansas Yearly Meeting, spoke on the subject of good literature in the home, and the great necessity of rallying to the support of the AMERICAN FRIEND and Missionary Advocate. The evening session was addressed by Henry C. Fellow in a popular lecture on the destructive and constructive forces of civilization that have most largely affected the history of the world. On Sabbath, both the morning and evening sessions were addressed by Carey Jessup, of Union Bible Seminary at Westfield, Indiana. A children's meeting was held in the afternoon, addressed by Melissa S. Fellow. The ladies of the community served luncheon each day.

The Disciples of Christ are raising a fund of $2,000,000.00, of which the greater part will be devoted to missionary work among the foreigners in the United States.

A new five-cent piece is promised soon with the head of an Indian on one side, and a buffalo on the other.

GOOD NATURED AGAIN

Good Humor Returns with Change to Proper Food.

"For many years I was a constant sufferer from indigestion and nervousness, amounting almost to prostration," writes a Montana man.

"My blood was impoverished, the vision was blurred and weak, with moving spots before my eyes. This was a steady daily condition. I grew ill-tempered, and eventually got so nervous I could not keep my books posted, nor handle accounts satisfactorily. I can't describe my sufferings.

"Nothing I ate agreed with me, till one day I happened to notice Grape-Nuts in a grocery store, and bought a package out of curiosity to know what it was.

"I liked the food from the very first, eating it with cream, and now I buy it by the case and use it daily. I soon found that Grape-Nuts food was supplying brain and nerve force as nothing in the drug line ever had done or could do.

"It wasn't long before I was restored to health, comfort and happiness.

"Through the use of Grape-Nuts food my digestion has been restored, my nerves are steady once more, my eyesight is good again, my mental faculties are clear and acute, and I have become so good-natured that my friends are truly astonished at the change. I feel younger and better than I have for 20 years. No amount of money would induce me to surrender what I have gained through the use of Grape-Nuts food." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. "There's a reason." Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

GRADED HELPS

In regard to the graded helps, I would say that four of the large denominational publishing houses have formed a syndicate in which the smaller bodies have also entered, for the purpose of publishing graded lessons. The Methodist Book Concern was chosen as the house for getting out these supplies. This was done because of the limited demand and large expense necessary to publish these helps. The publishers demand an edition of five thousand copies of each publication to secure the privilege of an imprint edition. The Friends, being one of the smaller bodies, cannot use enough copies to get an imprint edition, but must send them out with the imprint of the M. E. Book Concern. All helps for the graded system, no matter where secured, except from the Baptist and Christian Publishing Houses, will be the same. I ask Friends to order through me as it will cost no more than through any other house.

The Commission on a Central Publishing House, and Friends Literature, recommended that the Friends Sabbath Schools should use the new graded system of Lesson Helps, and the Lesson Helps published by us at Plainfield, Ind. This was done after a very exhaustive study of the condition and needs of the Friends Church, and was very gratifying to me.

Typewriter(Ball Bearing—Long Wearing)*

In buying a typewriter you want a satisfactory answer to three questions:

What will it do for me?
How well will it do it?
How long will it do it?

By answering these queries with the needs of the typewriter owner and user in mind, the L. C. Smith & Bros. Typewriter Company has attained the front rank in the typewriter field.

Some people think that a typewriter is a typewriter and that is all there is to it. Machines may look alike but there is a lot of difference in efficiency.

The new Model Five is built not only for straight correspondence but for tabulating, billing and in fact for every service needed in the average business.

Its ball bearings at all points where friction develops through action, permit close adjustment and insure correct and accurate typewriting.

BE STRONG

BE STRONG!
We are not here to play, to dream,
to drift;
We have hard work to do, and loads to lift;
Shun not the struggle—face it; 'tis God's gift.

Be strong!
Say not, “The days are evil. Who's to blame?”
And fold the hands and acquiesce—oh shame!
Stand up, speak out, and bravely, in God's name.

Be strong!
It matters not how deep intrenched the wrong,
How hard the battle goes, the day how long;
Faint not—fight on! To-morrow comes the song.

CURRENT COMMENT

The every-member canvass is becoming an important part of church procedure in nearly all denominations. Beginning with the attempt to increase the support given to foreign missions, the personal effort plan is being applied to all the benevolences of the church. This method is sound fundamentally. Aside from the increased financial support which such a canvass will insure, the personal contact with the membership will not be an insignificant part of the undertaking. It is the personal touch that counts, and the churches should feel a corresponding spiritual uplift from these endeavors.

The union of the United Brethren and the Methodist Protestant denominations seems now to be more than a possibility. Commissions from these two bodies met recently at Columbus, Ohio, and reported unanimously in favor of an organic union under the name "The United Protestant Church." The action is not binding, but will be subject to revision by the highest adjudicatories of the two denominations. There is an evident intention to select a name by joining the present ones, but already suggestions of protest are coming from other religious bodies that the proposed title is too comprehensive. The spirit of federation is working in many directions, and the next decade will probably witness a degree of church unity that is not at present realized.

* * *

A somewhat startling note, that at first thought savors of pessimism, comes from a recent sermon preached in New York by Dr. Z. T. Sweeney, formerly U. S. Consul to Constantinople. He points to the fact that in the last census decade, the country increased in population twenty-one per cent. Within the same period, the church increased in like proportion. In other words, it succeeded in just holding its own. In 1911 he showed that the church increased in membership three-fourths of one per cent. Dr. Sweeney further asserted that in Liverpool within a decade, church membership has had a net loss of 18,000. He estimates that in Africa, heathenism is growing at the rate of one hundred to every one Christian convert. Such a showing should send the church to its knees in prayer for a fresh anointing for the gigantic task of Christianizing the world.

AS OTHERS SEE US

The Congregationalist and Christian World of February 27, contains the following of interest to readers of the AMERICAN FRIEND:

"The Quakers continue their inclinations to peace and brotherhood. Not only is this indicated in a recent incident, but also the fact that denominational machinery is not always necessary to bring about centralization, economy, efficiency. As previously described in these columns, the Friends Five Years Meeting has established at Richmond, Indiana, as its national organ, the AMERICAN FRIEND. For nearly twenty years the Iowa Yearly Meeting has published a state paper, Western Work. The latter forthwith makes the following announcement: (Here follows the announcement of the discontinuance of Western Work, as quoted in a recent issue of the AMERICAN FRIEND.)

"In addition, recognizing the physical impossibility for the national paper to render the same news service, the Iowa Friends will utilize for local news the columns of the Penn College Bulletin. In its February issue, the Central Friend, the district organ in Kansas, makes a similar proclamation and will likewise lay down its life for its AMERICAN FRIEND. In this way all interests are subserved even more adequately than before. The best of it is, it required only a fraternal spirit and no ecclesiastical legislation to achieve the ends."

War Victims Fund

We acknowledge receipt of two contributions, one of $2.00 and one of $5.00, for the Friends War Victims Fund, an account of which was given in a recent edition of the AMERICAN FRIEND by Isaac Sharpe of London. We are holding this temporarily awaiting the possible arrival of other contributions. The conditions at both Sofia and Constantinople still require attention, and the continuation of the war will render additional relief imperative. We will forward all contributions marked for the fund to the treasurer, Isaac Sharpe.

A party of German scientists is reported stranded and suffering great privations in a remote part of Spitzbergen. A relief expedition, which started on January 20, was forced to return owing to no open water.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

March 16

Topic—How may every Sabbath be "the Lord's day"? Jer. XVII: 21-27.

This is a lesson on Sabbath observance. While every day is holy, in that all should be spent to the glory of God, it is part of the Divine plan that one day in the week should be set apart for special service for our Lord.

Sabbath laxity goes hand-in-hand with religious laxity. No one has ever claimed that the Continental Sunday of Europe with its holiday festivities and gaiety is conducive to spiritual life and up-lift. Rather does it produce the opposite effect.

The ideal Sabbath is perhaps a golden mean between the laxity of the liberals, and the puritanism of conduct that has produced a feeling of regret in the mind of many a youth at what he was made to feel was a long and dreary day.

Primarily the attitude of mind has everything to do with the character of the Sabbath day. He who has learned to make it a day of glad and joyous service, in worship, in heart communion, in ministering to the needs of others, has learned the secret of making it a real "Lord's day." It is a day for rest from secular toil; for careful meditation upon the highest needs of the soul; for feeding at the table of the Lord; for worship; for fellowship; for kindly deeds to help others upon the way of life.

The Sabbath was made for man. It is the recruiting station at which the soul is nourished and the life is equipped for our daily tasks. Business should take a rest on the Sabbath for its own good, and for the betterment of all connected therewith.

It is a day when men should get away from the street, the shop, the factory and the counting house. It is a day that should center about the church and the home, when men concern themselves with the higher things that count most in life.

Let the leader ask each member to state one important factor of an ideal Sabbath, and the result will be an accumulation of suggestions that will go far toward establishing a genuine day of the Lord.

Sixty-one per cent. of all negro Christians are Baptists, while thirteen per cent. are Methodists.

The Twofold Christian Obligation

"Depart from evil, and do good."

This exhortation of the sweet singer of Israel is a handbook of human life. It is the guide post pointing to the pathway of blessing. It is the mariner's compass upon the troubled sea of human existence.

It embraces the human side of the Christian's duty. It implies the essence of the gospel. It is the dual obligation of a right relationship with God. In its application, it points both Godward and manward.

The effort to depart from evil, without seeking the good of a righteous life, is as useless as the attempt to be good and live right without forsaking iniquity.

Too many men are trying to carry the world along with their religion; or else they are trying to square themselves by a moral law that ignores the obligations of Christian discipleship.

The first duty is to recognize the sinfulness of evil, and, by repentance, turn about from facing the past. But to stop there is to fail in the final testing. The second duty is constructive, and concerns the changed conduct of human life. To do good is a positive act, as necessary in the Christian life as to flee the sins of the past.

How important to teach the children that they should escape evil, rather than to be compelled to depart from it! If only the excellence of righteousness were continually held up before their eyes, how many more would choose the good in the very morning of their understanding! Righteousness exalteth, but sin is a reproach, ever and always. It is God's law for the race, and should be the heart and center of every gospel message.

Evangelism Keeping Pace with the March of Empire

One of the most valuable publications of recent origin which we have seen is "The Call of the World," by W. E. Doughty, educational secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement. One cannot read it without getting a broader vision of the world-wide mission of the Christian Church, and a deeper appreciation of what it means to carry the gospel to the ends of the earth.

In the light of history, it is readily apparent that the great events which have contributed most to the civilization of the world, and marked with greatest distinction the march of humanity's progress upward, have been almost universally of local extent, generally being confined to nation-wide limitations, and only in rare instances extending beyond continent-wide boundaries. Mr. Doughty cites The Renaissance, The Mohammedan Conquest, The Crusades, The Reformation, The American Revolution, The French Revolution, The Wesleyan Revival and The Rise of Popular Governments as the leading epoch-making movements of the Christian Era, and remarks that these were confined to a comparatively limited geographical area.

He then reaches this significant conclusion that "From the standpoint of the vast populations involved, as well as the immense territory affected, the world has never seen an awakening of such magnitude as that which is taking place in our time." He quotes Gulick's "Growth of the Kingdom of God," to the effect that within three hundred years, the growth of Christian control over the world's territory has passed from seven to eighty-two per cent., while the control of the non-Christian nations has declined from ninety-three to eighteen per cent.

Reforms are usually slow in the making. The history of African slavery marks two centuries of American history. The modern missionary movement is more than a century old. The temperance movement in this country has been more than a hundred years in forming. The story of the Reformation is the record of generations of religious heroism, sacrifices, and patient witnessing to the truth. It was nearly three centuries after that tragic event before the Roman empire tolerated the story of the crucifixion.

* Published jointly by the Missionary Education Movement and the Laymen's Missionary Movement.

But the slow, plodding provincialisms of the past have yielded to the mighty rush of the world movements today. Men are thinking and speaking in world terminology. Inventive genius has sought the ends of the earth, and all peoples have become neighbors. The railroad, the telegraph, commerce, aviation, are agencies that have widened the sovereignty of a Christian civilization, and are blazing the pathway for the ministrations of our missionaries and the evangels of the gospel of Jesus Christ.

It will be the tragedy of all history if the Church of God fails to keep pace with this mighty march of the modern world. The spirit of Jehovah is moving mightily among the nations. This is one of the most stupendous facts of current history. It is toward this open door of opportunity that the church has been tending ever since it heard the voice of the Master directing that the gospel must be preached to every creature. Now that its possibilities may actually be realized, the church must rise to the emergency or fail at its most crucial test.

But we have no thought that the Church will fail. The Laymen's Missionary Movement with the Edinburg Conference, the Men and Religion Forward Movement, the growth of Men's Bible classes, the federative spirit, which is enveloping the denominational activities of our own land, are all emphasizing the fact that the church is hearing the "call of the world," and girding itself with power for the onslaught upon the darkness and superstitions of heathendom.

What else can mean the awakening in our own Society of Friends—the vision that came to the Five Years Meeting, the uprising of our young people, the infusion of new life into all our church activities—except it be the call of God to a larger place in helping to solve the problems of world evangelization? It is no time for any of our meetings to be self-centered. In the face of such a call, it is positive disobedience to feel that the task is too great for us. There is work to be done at home and abroad, and this of itself should be a challenge to our best endeavors.

The march of empire should be paralleled by the march of evangelism. In no other way can the Church fulfil its greatest mission.

Definite Piece of Service

We trust that no young Friend will fail to read the communication of Charles M. Woodman, in this issue of the AMERICAN FRIEND, found under the above heading in the Young People's Board column. The call to service is so definite, and meets a great need so aptly, that it should not fail to enlist the heartiest co-operation of all our young people in the work which he has so clearly outlined. It was the younger portion of the Five Years Meeting that saved the day for the Publication Board project, which made possible the new AMERICAN FRIEND under the present arrangement. We trust that in every local meeting we may have the active assistance of our young people in pushing the claims of the AMERICAN FRIEND upon our membership.

Printing the American Friend

Many of our readers have remarked by letter and otherwise upon the excellent mechanical work being done upon the AMERICAN FRIEND. It is a pleasure to say that the typographical and press work is being done under contract by the Nicholson Printing & Manufacturing Company, located in Richmond. They have one of the best equipped printing houses in the central west. They make a specialty of fine grade catalogue and book work, and they are making an effort to please in the mechanical work upon the AMERICAN FRIEND.

The man who looks devout on Sunday and on Monday cheats his customer, misrepresents his wares, becomes extortionate toward his client, collects his rentals from the house of infamy or of misery, votes for the saloon, turns a deaf ear to deserving charity, or collects dividends from the toil of the sweat shop and innocent childhood, is making a mockery of religion, and will receive a hypocrite's reward.

"By their fruits, ye shall know them." How many are willing to stand such a test? The good tree will invariably bring forth good fruit. There is no escape from the operations of this law, which is both the law of nature and of God.

Abraham Lincoln's concern was not that the Lord should be on his side, but that he should be on the Lord's side. What a blessing it would be if the world generally would make that distinction!

Prayer is the key to unlock God's all bountiful storehouse. Human life is oftentimes barren and joyless, because it has not learned the blessedness of communion with the Father.

The business man and the statesman should live to the glory of God, just as truly as the preacher. There are no distinctions when character is weighed in God's balances.

Salvation does not come to the insincere. It is the positive life that is tremendously in earnest about the "Father's business," that will receive the promised reward.

It is the every day living for Christ that counts most as an example for others. Constancy in life and constancy in service are well pleasing to the Lord.

"The First Call is for More Light"

SAMUEL H. HODGES

There are two subjects before Friends at the present time which transcend in importance all others. They are the right attitude of our societies and membership; first, to the Bible, and second, to the pastorate. There is a subtle connection between the two which necessitates a joint consideration.

Where the Scriptures have been honored, and placed within the reach of the public by translations into the vernacular, spiritual life has increased. In fact, the subjective knowledge of the Eternal Word, which is the Son of God, grew and spread in proportion as the written truths concerning him were placed in the hands of the seriously disposed among the people.

With the increased knowledge of the Son of God has come desires for civil and religious liberty, impossible to be eradicated, and which have resulted in the destruction, in a large measure, of tyranny in the civil and religious governments of Europe and America. "Where the Spirit of the Lord is, there is liberty." The right of private judgment in the all important matter of the soul's interest, includes the right of freedom of judgment in the lesser matter of temporal affairs.

The chief evidence of the pre-eminent value of the Scriptures and their divine origin, lies in the individual and collective blessings uniformly following their reverent perusal. It would seem to have been the God appointed business of Christian ministers, since the Reformation, to expound and enforce scriptural truth and teaching. Where this rule has governed the actions of missions, meetings and churches, spiritual prosperity has resulted; while the observance of an opposite rule has, sooner or later, resulted in decline and desolation. The connection between the Son of God incarnate in flesh, with the Son revealed in the Scriptures, is wonderfully close. A correct estimate of relative values is necessary.

The writing is not greater than the writer.

The letter is not greater than the spirit.

The precept is not greater than the infallible example, or,

The writer is partially seen in the writing.

The Spirit may be found in the letter.

The example is a manifestation of the Spirit.

A passage in the Apostle Paul's letter to Titus (R. V. ch. 1:2,3) reads: "God * * * in His own season manifested His word in the message."

As the heat latent in the coal requires extraneous action to bring about combustion, so the life of the Word in the message of Scripture, requires the operation of the Holy Spirit, to make this Word a living, life-giving food for our spirits and souls. The Word is in the message (as Paul says), but without this Spirit of God blown upon it, the message is cold, and really becomes in many cases "a stone of stumbling and rock of offense." A man may as well put a lot of coals in the stove and, without igniting, sit down to warm himself, as to expect spiritual strength and nutriment from any part of the Bible, without the Holy Spirit to bring about the action, which is the equivalent of combustion in the coal. The man so acting may be among the most able of all scholars and philosophers, but the result will be a failure to receive any spiritual as distinguished from intellectual benefit. No natural inward light of reason can by any possible means take the place of the Holy Spirit, which has been procured and poured out by the risen Christ. It is well to remember the words of Jesus in this connection: "At that season Jesus answered and said, 'I thank thee, O Father, Lord of heaven and earth, that thou didst hide these things from the wise and understanding, and didst reveal them unto babes.'" (Matt. 11:25.)

The Son of God, by and through whom the worlds, and all in them, were made, is the light of nature which lighteth every man coming into the world, by giving reason and a conception (in varying degree) of moral rectitude. This, however, is quite distinct from the gracious illumination effected by the Holy Ghost, when Christ is revealed in the believer as the hope of glory. Disastrous confusion has arisen and is still arising in many minds by lack of discrimination in this matter. To mistake the light of reason, found more or less in every man, for the light of the Son of God, called in Scripture the "Sun of Righteousness," "the Day Dawn," "the Day Star," and which Peter the Apostle, says arises in the believer's heart (II Peter, 1:19) is to enter upon a course, as certain to produce shipwreck of the soul, as striking the iceberg was to produce the wreck of the "Titanic."

Disingenuousness is also not lacking in advocating the inner light, meaning the natural reason and conscience, at the same time, knowing that the hearers are supposing the speaker to be referring to quite another thing. There is a beautiful passage in Eph. 5:14 (R. V.), "Awake, thou that sleepest, and arise from the dead, and Christ shall shine upon thee." This shining of Christ upon the believer, is seen to be conditioned upon an awakening and an arising from the dead, which other Scriptures show to be the work of the Holy Spirit.

Now our attitude to the Scriptures of truth is to be regulated, not by the universal and natural light of reason, but by the supernatural, Christ-given inner light, as is said in I John 2:27, "And as for you, the anointing which ye received of him abideth in you and ye need not that anyone teach you; but as his anointing teacheth you concerning all things and is true * * * ye abide in him." Again, the same truth spoken by Jesus himself is embodied in John 16:13, "Howbeit, when he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he shall guide you into all truth."

That the emphasis among early Friends was laid upon the guidance of the Holy Spirit, the anointing referred to by the Apostle John, is too evident for contradiction. It rests with those who deny its applicability to the selection and interpretation of the Scriptures appropriate for present use, to give adequate reason for such restriction of the Spirit's guidance. It may be readily and cheerfully granted that the Bible as a whole (that is, as put together according to the Canon of Church Councils and the consensus of Church opinion), is a divine, God-given message, and that its chief content is "The Word." But chief though that content undoubtedly is, there is much in it other than the Word. Much of God's dealings, appropriate and applicable to men in the time of the patriarchs and prophets, is not appropriate and not in its entirety applicable to our age and time. In the Holy Spirit, who is come not to speak of or from himself, but to show the things concerning Jesus—the Word—we have the divine infallible guide, sent by the Father, in the name of his Son, for this very purpose. Under his operation, the page of the Scriptures becomes illuminated, and application is made to the heart and mind of the reader, of just such portions as his state or condition requires. These portions so applied become messages direct from God to the individual, as really as when words are spoken to the ear of a listener.

It will be vain to look in the Scriptures for any evidence favoring the idea, so generally prevailing, that revelation or inspiration ended with the writer of John's Gospel and the Apocalypse. The last few verses of Revelations apply only to that particular part of the Bible; for the Bible as a whole was not compiled when they were written. The "Word of God" "grew," "increased" and "spread" all through the Apostolic age; and is still found in every message, delivered by men and women who have the "gift" of Christian prophecy.

We conclude then, that the Scripture, as listed in the canon or rule, established by councils and general Christian usage, is the message of God par excellence, and in that message the Word of God is discoverable by every praying, God-fearing man. But we see no authority in these Scriptures, and recognize none elsewhere, for claiming for them, an exclusive inspiration to the nullification of authority and inspiration in messages, delivered by spirit-filled men and women.

The Five Years Meeting from a Missionary Viewpoint

The genius of the Society of Friends in its practices has been to recognize the leadings of the Holy Spirit, or the call of God, either by direct intimations in the soul or by the indications of Providence. Witness to this is the practice of recording ministers as against making ministers; and liberating young Friends to proceed with intentions, rather than by a sacrament uniting them in marriage, or as in Japan, picking out two young people and telling them to get married.

Unquestionably the spirit of the present age is for closer organic co-operation for the solution of social, political and international problems. The Five Years Meeting, which recently passed into history, surely brought Friends into a recognition of what lies before us as a body.

Some of us, who, while outside of the United States are representatives of American Friends, have been brought into contact with the questions of co-operation with other denominations, and have felt the importance of the co-ordination of all Christian forces in order to accomplish the greatest good.

We have been directly engaged in evangelism and church extension. We have been working out the problems of foreign missions. In the field of social service we have been face to face with the questions as to how a Christian can live a Christian life and earn a living amongst non-Christian customs; as to what we can do to check the increase of tuberculosis; how can the evil effects of legalized vice be overcome; what is the Christian's attitude to the liquor traffic; how can Christian institutions be established in rural districts, and what advice shall we give to young men concerning the question of an occupation for life.

Again, in the meetings, how can we make use of the impulses for activity of the young people? Our co-workers have been leaders in molding the thoughts of the nation in which we work on the subjects of Peace and Arbitration. The burden of supplying an adequate literature where none exists has been upon us. Whole years have been spent in the question of Christian education and how to prepare the young for service for our Master friend. The pastoral care of the flock has been a live concern to us. The work of the Bible Schools has overwhelmed us.

Naturally, we have looked back to the home base to see what the home church is doing in meeting the needs along these lines. Thus in the Five Years Meeting, our joy was unbounded as we saw the whole body of Friends come to recognize the Master's calls for service and united efforts. There was an efficiency in bringing before the body a view of conditions and the demands of the times. In no place was there evidence of any one great man's mind in laying out a plan and policy for the future activity of the Society, but there was the magnificent spectacle of a number of great men and women from different viewpoints being melted into one, in purpose and love, and corporate endeavor, to put into motion the machinery which would make the Friends of America stand in one solid phalanx in the Master's army for peace among men.

In our foreign work too, we have strongly felt the need of some statement of the faith of Friends. As individuals, or a small group of individuals, in teaching the Gospel and commands of Christ, we give what we are convinced in our own hearts is the truth, but have been questioned by our hearers whether we were correctly interpreting the historic faith of Friends.

Thus, naturally, we felt a deep concern as to what the Five Years Meeting would say as to the statement of Friends' doctrines. Our conviction was that the decision made was the most magnanimous action that could be taken. The more we contemplate it, the more the conviction grows that the decision was deeper, more far reaching, and of greater force and better suited to our needs and conditions than we realized at the time. Yet its real value will be proved only in proportion to the way in which we live up to the things which have been declared to be our faith.

Personally, I feel that I can go back to the work in Japan with a greater satisfaction than ever before, that I go as a Friend and with a greater confidence than ever before, that the Friends as a united body are rising to a definite mission in the Church of Christ, which mission will be performed to the glory of God. This satisfaction is greatly enhanced by the fact that in the Five Years Meeting we had the presence and counsel and sympathy of representative Friends from the Yearly Meetings which are not an organic part of the Five Years Meeting. The Lord bless the Society of Friends, and make the Friends in the truest and fullest sense His friends. GURNEY BINFORD.

A Little Lesson in Barnacles

BY A. EDWARD KELSEY

This is our ninth day out from New York, and over a smooth sea we are sailing on toward Patros, Greece, our port of disembarkation, which we hope to reach a week from today.

We have over four hundred Greeks on board, third-class passengers returning home to join the army, if perchance there is a renewal of hostilities. This morning as I write, they are lounging in the bright sunshine on the fore-deck, doubtless thinking of home and loved ones they are so soon to see. Their amateur theatricals and roars of laughter have enlivened a long sea voyage.

There are but few first-class passengers, and consequently, it has been the privilege of the three Friends bound for Ramallah to sit next to the captain at the table, and gather from him bits of sea lore gathered from following the sea for thirty years. I have been especially impressed with what he has told us about the little barnacles that attach themselves to the hull of the ship and impede her progress. Although I had heard of them for years, I had no idea how troublesome they become.

When the "Oceania" reaches Trieste she will go into dry dock, and her hull will be thoroughly scraped with sharp knives to rid her of these small sea animals, no larger than the end of one's thumb, which for six months have been tenaciously attaching themselves to her bottom and sides. The captain further tells me that we are losing two knots an hour, or one-seventh of the speed of which we are capable, because of these little hinderers. When I begin to compute how over six hundred persons are losing forty-eight hours out of a trip of two weeks, and think of the capital which practically lies idle and the unnecessary fuel consumed because of these pernicious little habitats of the deep, I am impressed with the amount of damage that can accrue from a very small and seemingly harmless animal. We pursue our way unhindered by sharks, whales and other mighty monsters of the great sea, but the little barnacles are the great enemies of all sea-going craft.

As I have mused upon this, thoughts have come to me relating to the life of the church of Jesus Christ.

During her voyage of nineteen hundred years, her greatest enemies have not been the mighty powers of darkness that in some gigantic form have arrayed themselves against her, but some inconspicuous parasites that have attached themselves and hindered her progress. In the times of the Reformation, and again in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries, the church has gone into dry dock and, by some mighty revival, has been cleared of some of this parasitic life. There have always been anxious souls who, not able to distinguish between the barnacles and the bottom of the ship, have insisted that the church must founder after her cleansing, but she has always gone forward after such a period with greater speed than before. This has been continuously true in the history of the Society of Friends for the past fifty years.

But this lesson from the barnacles should also be applied to our individual spiritual lives. How our progress is hindered by those things, unseen by the world and perhaps by those nearest and dearest to us! The sea of life is full of parasites that attach themselves to every one. We cannot avoid the contact, but we can have these hinderers to spiritual power and progress cleansed from our lives by the operation of the Holy Spirit. Every meeting for worship, the times of family and private devotions should in a sense be dry-dock experiences for each one of us. The searching power of the written word, the direct revealing of the Holy Spirit, or the spoken words of one of the Lord's servants may be the instrument used to reveal to us the barnacles of our spiritual life. It is then our part, without hesitation, with the help and power of the Spirit, to tear these hinderers from our lives, that our spiritual progress may be unimpeded.

At Sea, January 24, 1913.

Thank God every morning when you get up that you have something to do that day which must be done, whether you like it or not. Being forced to work, and forced to do your best, will breed in you temperance and self-control, diligence and strength in will, cheerfulness and content, and a hundred virtues which the idle never know.—Charles Kingsley.

Conference of Foreign Mission Boards

"At first one may be inclined to think that we have reached the limits of concerted and definite measures for arousing the churches. Nevertheless, it must be apparent that with all this activity only a small fraction of the Church realizes the missionary obligation and participates in the world plans of Christ.

"What more can be done? What does the situation demand? We realize that our pastors and church leaders, acting spontaneously under the guidance of God's Spirit, have it in their power to bring the people into a sympathetic attitude toward the world work. But is there anything this Conference can do? Have we reached the limit of our power? Is a concerted movement possible and desirable; and if so, what should be its objective and what form should it take? We pass this problem of grave import over to the Conference, contenting ourselves with an outline suggestive statement of what might be attempted as we see the situation.

"As to an objective, clearly it should not be financial, nor should it pertain primarily to method. We do not question the value of all that has been done to promote schemes of benevolence and to introduce modern business methods into the missionary work of the church. We rejoice in the splendid new emphasis which is being placed upon the business side of this work, and particularly with a view to bringing the churches back to Bible methods of giving. We are grateful for the efforts which have been made and are being made to raise specific sums of money for specific localities and lines of work. All that has been attempted has been needed and much more. We believe God's blessing has been upon our campaigning. But is it not one of the very fruits of this new activity that we realize as never before that the trouble lies deeper than some have supposed, that it is essentially a spiritual malady from which the Church is suffering, and that unless a more fundamental work can be accomplished our so-called practical efforts will be of little avail? If our church members generally had the spirit of Christ they would do all these things themselves. What they lack is not so much methods of benevolence as essential Christianity. Surely we all are agreed upon this diagnosis.

"But the question arises, Is not this lack of the true Christian attitude a matter so entirely in the realm of the spiritual, so delicate, so intangible as to defy approach by what we may call campaign methods? Can the missionary motive be aroused and deepened by direct means, and to what extent do such means lend themselves to a concerted movement? For ourselves we do not hesitate to say that there can be no general activity on the part of the Church upon which we have more right to expect the Divine blessing than upon such an effort as we propose. Does not God expect us to use means for the correction of any evil in the Church? And when the evil is widespread, does He not call us to a concerted endeavor for its removal? The very fact that the various sections of the Church feel together and act together for such an end is a strong justification of the effort. The problem is to revive the whole Church. Let the Church then as a whole work out this solution. So much for the objective and its rationale.

"More specifically we feel that the fundamental need of the Church in the matter of missionary interest is: First, Bible study; second, prayer; third, information. The order here is important: First, inquiry as to God's purpose and plans for the world. What is this religion of ours and what does it demand? Second, through prayer seeking to harmonize our wills with God's and to learn what He desires us to do. Third, familiarity with the needs of the world and the work of God's messengers in foreign lands, particularly familiarity with the work which Providence and Christian fellowship have assigned to the sections of the Church to which we belong.

"We would reverse the order of our objectives when it comes to an actual program. It is a question of wise approach to unresponsive and perhaps unwilling people. To us the best approach appears to be through information furnished regarding the great successes of the missionaries in our own time and the extraordinary conditions of the world which favor the rapid spread of Christianity. The facts of the work are the best of arguments. Not only are they impressive in themselves, but by a well-known psychological law they disarm criticism and overcome reluctance. 'And seeing the man that was healed standing with them, they could say nothing against it.' We believe that starting with a recitation of the facts, it should not be difficult to lead up to a careful study of the Bible and to have the entire process from beginning to end pervaded by an atmosphere of prayer.

"Let the minister preach, as he has never preached before, upon the achievements of the Cross in non-Christian lands. We would draw freely from the best material of all boards, emphasizing such things as the rapid spread of the Gospel in Korea, the breaking up in China, the mass movements in India, the new interest of the Moslems in Turkey, and the civilizing of savage tribes in Africa and the Islands. To these might be added illustrations of co-operation and unity on the field. What a story might be told if the pastor will brush to one side the formalities and conventions of a sermon and give God's people the facts! And what effect it will have upon himself!

"The sermon, preached on a Sunday carefully chosen, should have a definite and stated objective. This should be to secure on the part of the people generally, not simply young people or devout women, or aggressive men, but all the people, the study, in more detail of what the minister has outlined in his address. Against the background should be sketched the activities of one's own denomination abroad, its missions and missionaries, its Board's organization, and its system of support.

"We trust such an effort would not only produce widespread interest in missionary work, but that it would lead to much Bible study and prayer. To accomplish these two chief desiderata we would suggest that the midweek services of the first four weeks of the period chosen should be specially utilized. In some churches this would be the first four weeks of lent. These midweek services should center around the study of the Bible as a missionary book; the reading of the previous week being brought to a focus. Above all, these meetings should be given up to intercessory prayer, a distinct period being set apart for this purpose. In order to dignify and render effective the prayer period it would be well in many cases for the leader to direct the petitions of the people, according to some plan agreed upon. Further workings out of the plan will naturally suggest themselves, but we are content now with outlining the main idea.

"Should we be able to agree upon some course of action, looking to the reviving of the Church in behalf of foreign missions, the fact of such an agreement would be a mighty argument in its favor. There is no knowing where God's Spirit would lead us or what results might arise. It is not inconceivable that such an effort might be used of God for the quickening of the Church for every good work."

A strong committee was appointed by the Conference to consider plans for a greater degree of efficiency in the Home Church in fulfilling the Great Commission. There will soon be a joint meeting of this committee with the Home Base Committee for this purpose.

Albert K. Smiley's Will

The will of the late Albert K. Smiley, the Quaker who owned the great Lake Mohonk estate and founded the famous Mohonk Conference, entertaining at his own charge the delegates each year, conveys the entire estate to his half-brother, Daniel Smiley. In his will he expresses the desire that the mere accumulation of money should not prevail there and that this estate should be a place where just dealing will prevail, warm greetings be extended and kindly interest shown to all. No liquor is sold at the big hotel, religious services are held, automobiles are not permitted, and driving on Sunday is not allowed. Yet, in spite of these restrictions, Mr. Smiley achieved success as a hotel-keeper and accumulated a fortune.—Christian Advocate.

Courage is just strength of heart, and the strong heart makes itself felt everywhere, and lifts up the whole of life, and ennobles it, and makes it move directly to its chosen aim.—The Rev. Henry Van Dyke, D.D.

The First Quakers

The first Quakers to set foot upon the shores of this country arrived at Newport, Rhode Island, in the ship Woodhouse, the "Mayflower of the Friends," nearly two hundred and fifty-six years ago—August 3, 1657.

The coming of the Quakers was a mighty good thing for this country, although for a time at least, it was a mighty bad thing for the Quakers.

They met with a most ungracious reception. * * * At Newport, the sixteen Quakers who came over in the Woodhouse encountered no difficulty. The spirit of Roger Williams prevailed there, and in line with that spirit every man was granted the liberty of entertaining his own religious views without interference from the civil magistrates. But it was different in Massachusetts * * * * Endicott and his Puritans, furious as so many Mohawk Indians when Mohawk Indians were at their worst, flamed against the innocent Quakers as though they were so many criminals of the deepest dye, and as a consequence Massachusetts lost what, a little later on, Pennsylvania gained.

Driven from the Bay State, the Quakers, reinforced by others who came over not long after, sought in the wilderness of Pennsylvania, and among the red men there, the asylum which had been denied them by the Christians of New England.

In the Keystone State, under their great leader, Penn, the Quakers founded the Commonwealth which is today the second State in the Union and one of the fairest portions of our great country.

Under Penn's wise, just and humane policy the Indians were tamed and made to feel that the white man was their friend, and it goes without saying that there would have been no Indian wars had the other settlers treated the red men as they were treated by Penn and his Quakers.

It is hardly necessary to say that the influence of the Quakers in America has been large and always of the right sort.

Franklin (?), Nathaniel Greene, Stephen Hopkins, and many others that might be mentioned, were Quakers.

The first schools south of New England were established by Quakers, and the general civilizing work done by them was immense.

As humanitarians they take second place to none. Against slavery, war and the exploitation of humanity, against intemperance, brutality and every species of maladministration in government, they have, from the very beginning of their existence, arrayed themselves in solid phalanx.

There are probably 150,000 Quakers in the great Republic, and if the rest of the people made as little trouble on the one side and lived as finely on the other, we should have but little use for prisons, policemen and preachers.—Thomas B. Gregory in New York American.

Little things are little things, but faithfulness in little things is something great.—St. Augustine.

Message from the Young People's Board

A Definite Piece of Service

BY CHARLES M. WOODMAN

The defined policy of the Young People's Board is not to become a fifth wheel of the coach, but to generate power which may be carried into those wheels already holding up and carrying forward the load. The young life of American Quakerism should be self infused into every portion of our denominational machinery. By self infused we mean that young people should not wait to be asked to do this or that in the meeting; they should discover some one thing that needs to be done, some one thing that the meeting recognizes needs to be done, and then proceed to do it. Many of the strong leaders in church life have been those who saw an opportunity and then seized it. They have often done this in the face of coldness in the meeting, and direct opposition. Initiative is a youthful quality. It is the bubbling of the youthful spring. A spring is capable not only of bubbling, but of turning machinery if the two are brought together under suitable conditions. The problem for every young Friend is how to make that combination, how to take his enthusiastic interest in the Society of Friends and apply it in a practical and patent way to actual cases of local need. The monthly meeting business session may lack vitality, the meeting for worship may need the youthful voice, the Quaker Round Table may have a place not yet used in the community, the missionary work needs youthful vigor. All these and other things present ways in which young Friends can make themselves felt. We pass them at this time with only this word, and devote our space this month to emphasizing a clarion call which has gone forth from our Publication Board, and which every young Friend should hear. It presents an opportunity for real and needed service.

The Young People's Board believe that the AMERICAN FRIEND ought to be in every Friend's home in America. The ideal is worth aiming at, the standard worth striving for, because only as the paper receives loyal support can it become what it has a purpose to be. No finer task can be set before young Friends at just this stage in our denominational history, than co-operation in this way to raise the subscription list of our denominational paper to such a number, that we can have a strong, well balanced periodical, meeting all the needs of our meetings and homes.

Here is the practical suggestion to this end. Has any Friend been appointed in your local or monthly meeting to become agent for the AMERICAN FRIEND, who will canvass the entire membership of your meeting soliciting subscriptions? If so, work with that person helping to secure subscribers. If not, get yourself appointed by your meeting, or write to S. Edgar Nicholson, Richmond, Indiana, asking for subscription blanks that you may use in your meeting.

Again, there may be local meetings in your quarterly meeting where no one is undertaking this canvass.

What an interest it would awaken in such places if one or two young Friends would start out to visit the Friends in that neighborhood! Young Friends may hesitate to start off in this way to hold meetings, but any enthusiastic young Friend can undertake a canvass of a neighboring community for his denominational paper. This in itself is a religious service, and entered into in the right spirit will open doors of opportunity and service by means of which both visitor and those visited will be blessed. Such "tramps" are not similar but might well be allied with those efforts on the part of young Friends in England to carry the spiritual messages of Friends to the weaker and the smaller places.

Local Christian Endeavor societies, Quarterly Meeting and Yearly Meeting organizations of young people of whatever name might well develop this as an essential part of the activities of their young people. Some years ago the Christian Endeavor Union of New England Yearly Meeting assumed the responsibility for the support of a superintendent in a boys' home in Ramallah, Palestine. The obligation thus assumed by the young people made possible the present boys' training home, which is rendering a real service to the boyhood of Palestine. What they did then in that service, all young Friends organizations can do now in this service. Here is the opportunity for young Friends and young Friends organizations to put themselves actively behind our denominational paper and give it a very real support.

The Song in Your Heart

Keep a song in your heart, my lassie,
 Whatever may be the weather—
 Or sunshine or rain, or pleasure or pain,
 Or sunshine and showers together.
 Keep singing, no matter how goes it, my dear;
 Keep singing, when days are surpassingly drear;
 Keep singing; the skies will tomorrow be clear,
 Keep a song in your heart, my lassie.

Keep a song in your heart, my laddie;
 Whatever the years may bring you,
 Of vantage or loss, a crown or a cross;
 Or roses or thorns to sting you.
 Keep singing, no matter how goes it, my boy;
 Keep singing, 'mid shadows, a carol of joy;
 Keep singing, no matter what troubles annoy.
 Keep a song in your heart, my laddie.

—Thomas Curtis Clark.

One sincere Christian, instinct with the gift of the Holy Ghost, who loves God for His dear name's sake, and his fellow creatures for the sake of God who loved them and died for them, is a more potent evidence for Christianity than all the intellectual proof that was ever produced. Christian character, radiant with faith and fused with Divine love, always has prevailed, and always will prevail.

Publicity of a Recent Quaker Wedding

The New York Times, under date of February 21, gives an account of a Quaker wedding in that city, so unique and interesting, that we feel it deserves a place in the columns of the AMERICAN FRIEND.

Grammercy Park, a little world of clubs and fine homes, stared in wonder last evening to see the old Friends Meeting House, on the south side of the square, astir with unwonted festivity. The windows were all alight and against their panes sprays of green were silhouetted. From the door to the curb ran a red-striped canvas sidewalk canopy and at 8 o'clock men and women in evening dress began to file in. For a wedding was held in the meeting house last evening—the first in seventeen years. With no minister to marry them or proclaim them man and wife, with no organ music to accompany the procession down the aisle, Benjamin Harvey Doane, a clerk in the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, and Miss Alice Howes Underhill stood before the meeting of Friends, clasped hands, and so standing, repeated the simple marriage vows of the Quakers.

The little gray meeting house has stood in Grammercy Park for fifty-three years, the only meeting house of the Orthodox Friends in Manhattan. It has a congregation of some 300, but it is unusual when more than 200 persons attend the gatherings. There have been some weddings in recent years, but they have been home weddings, and so many years had passed since a service was held in the meeting house that Friends came to see it from far and near. ***

It was 8:30 o'clock when those in front knew by the sudden hush that the bride was coming. The absence of the wedding march seemed strange to those accustomed to the conventional services. Mrs. Underhill led her daughter down the aisle where the bridegroom and the ushers met them. Then, standing there partly facing the meeting, they waited and in silence. It seemed as though the world had halted, it was so still. Then the silence was broken by a woman's voice. It was Friend Sarah Haydock, praying.

When she pronounced the "Amen," Mr. Doane and Miss Underhill clasped hands.

"Here," he said, "in the presence of Our Heavenly Father and before these our friends, as witnesses, I, Benjamin Harvey Doane, take thee, Alice Howes Underhill, to be my wife, promising, with Divine assistance, to be unto thee a faithful and loving husband until death shall separate us."

Then silence again, brief this time and interrupted by the bride:

"Here in the presence of Our Heavenly Father and before these our friends, as witnesses, I, Alice Howes Underhill, take thee, Benjamin Harvey Doane, to be my husband, promising, with Divine assistance, to be unto thee a faithful and loving wife until death shall us part."

That was all. Then the ushers brought forward a little table with the wedding certificate, and each signed there where they had pronounced their vows. And while they still stood there, friend Charles W. Lawrence, from the row where the ministers sat, stood and read aloud the certificate.

An Editorial Utterance

The above occasion has drawn forth a lengthy editorial utterance by the Detroit Evening News, under date of February 25, which is in part as follows:

Our western life lacks one element at once mellow and mellowing, which is the presence of the Quaker folk and the Quaker sentiment. In the east one comes upon communities of these Friends, with their plain meeting houses set in quiet groves and the graves of their dead beneath the branches of ancient trees. They go placidly on their way, clinging to the simple but pregnant ideals of their fathers, and now and then giving the country a poet, an orator or a congressman. We have several senators and representatives from the Friends in the present Congress.

These Friends are the people of the Quiet. There is an atmosphere of quietness about them, strangely at variance with the fuss and flutter of this bustling century. Yet they are not behind the times. They till the land, or engage in manufacturing, their work everywhere showing a greater regard for quality than quantity.

It was strange, therefore, when New York stayed a part of its haste the other day to witness a Quaker wedding. The parties were of some note even in New York, but they had been brought up in and had deeply imbibed the principles of the Friends. And in their ceremony they seemed to give a complete answer to all the questions that modern society has raised with reference to the marriage ceremony. ***

The simplicity of beauty, and the beauty of simplicity, could hardly be more finely exemplified. It is so wherever Friends pledge their troth. No wonder it seemed strange in New York, where weddings and divorces are both staged on sumptuous scales.

Summer School of Missions

The Summer School of Missions, held under the auspices of the Interdenominational Committee of the Central West for Missions, will hold its ninth annual session at Winona Lake, Indiana, June 19 to June 27. Plans are now being made for a very attractive program. "The New America," written by Mrs. L. C. Barnes, treating of the great problems and possibilities of immigration, is the title of the new study book for home missions. The book for foreign missions, "The King's Business," treats of increased efficiency for woman's missionary societies. Lectures will be given on both these books by well-known missionary experts. There will be the daily morning call to prayer, classes in methods, helpful conferences, and the hours with missionaries.

Women who are interested in the cause of missions should make their plans now to attend this helpful conference. Missionary circles are urged to send representatives, who would prepare themselves to be leaders of mission study classes. The cause of missions would be advanced by a large attendance of our women.

CHARLOTTE E. VICKERS,
Corresponding Sec'y.

A Centennial Anniversary

Winthrop Monthly Meeting celebrated, on February 20, at Winthrop Center, Maine, the centennial of its founding. About two hundred gathered under favorable weather conditions for this occasion, which proved to be a great success and easily won the distinction of being one of the "red letter days" in Winthrop Monthly Meeting. The morning session was opened with a praise and song service led by Charles M. Bailey who is in his ninety-third year, following which, the history of the Monthly Meeting from its early beginning down to the present time, was ably traced by I. Warren Hawkes, of Manchester Meeting. Answering to the subject "As Others See Us," an appreciation of Friends by five pastors of as many different neighboring churches, was a unique feature of the program.

Appropriate poems for the occasion were written by Edward Wing of Oakland and W. Carleton Wood of Winthrop Center. After the dinner, of which about two hundred partook, an hour's program, styled "Quaker Reminiscences," was enjoyed. This consisted of readings of poems reflecting the early life of the Friends, reading of messages from John Henry Douglas, Charles H. and H. Elizabeth Jones and Hannah J. Bailey, and an opportunity for all to see an exhibition of portraits and photographs of early Friends. Following this was the crowning feature of the day's program, namely, an address by Charles M. Woodman, who had for his subject, "Our Quaker Heritage." At the close of his message and for which the message was a preparation, Charles M. Woodman made a strong appeal for a consecrated service which will make Christianity touch every phase of life.

The New York Bar Association has asked President Taft to use his influence to have the offer of Great Britain for arbitration on the Panama Canal rate question accepted.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

Our New Office Home

After occupying temporary offices for eight weeks through the kindness of the Second National Bank people at Richmond, the AMERICAN FRIEND has taken permanent quarters in rooms 309 and 310, Second National Bank building, corner Eighth and Main Streets. We will be pleased to have our friends call.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

Friends of Spiceland, Indiana, plan to re-dedicate their church building on Sabbath, March 9th. The extensive improvements, including the rearrangement of the auditorium, and the making of numerous Sabbath-school rooms, are practically complete. Its effectiveness for Bible School and social purposes is greatly increased, and it is hoped that more than ever before, the church may become the center of the religious and social life of the community.

A revival meeting of two and a half weeks' duration closed February 23rd at Fairmount, Indiana. Fred E. Smith, of Fountain City, was the evangelist. The preaching was sound and edifying throughout, and has proved very helpful to the meeting. About forty persons professed conversion or sanctification, as part of the definite results of the meetings. Several have applied for membership with Friends. The meeting and membership generally were very much strengthened and encouraged.

A fifteen days' series of meetings at Mount Pleasant Meeting, Winchester Quarterly Meeting, Indiana, closed on Sabbath evening, February 23rd. On account of sickness and death in the neighborhood, the services were not largely attended during the first week. During the second week the house was well filled at night, and at the last was crowded to its fullest capacity. Deep interest was manifested, and strong conviction took hold upon many hearts. There were seven conversions, and six experienced a deeper work of grace. The meetings were in charge of the pastor, John W. Hardwick, assisted by Levi F. Cox and Charles Wright. The ministry was exceptionally strong, and the church was greatly benefited.

A two weeks' revival closed on January 27th at Back Creek Meeting, Fairmount Quarterly Meeting, Indiana, under the leadership of the Lord through his servants, M. F. Swafford, and his niece, Ella Swafford, a singer, both of Haviland, Kansas. Although the hand of the Lord has been especially good upon us during the past year, in that He has held us together in fellowship and obedience, He has brought us up to the place of a conscious need of special help in order to go forward the coming year. The Lord wonderfully used his servants, both in preaching and in song, and the power of the Lord was manifestly present at each service. There were twenty-eight sessions in all, and twenty-three souls received definite blessing. The effect of the meetings was felt for miles around, and some who were not able to attend, sought and found the Lord in their homes.

Dublin Quarterly Meeting, which was held at Dublin, Indiana, February 22-23, was a time of great blessing. Such a spirit of harmony and spiritual life, together with a closer social relationship, has not been experienced for a good while, as was shown during the different sessions. Ira C. Johnson, of Lynn, yearly meeting superintendent of evangelistic work, Esther Cook, of Knightstown, and Morton C. Pearson, of Indianapolis, were present and delivered messages of strength and helpfulness. Following the business session on Saturday, a sumptuous dinner was served without charge to one hundred and forty-seven guests, who remained for the occasion. The Ladies' Missionary society of Dublin, was in charge. On Sabbath, Morton C. Pearson preached two powerful sermons, and Dublin local meeting has taken higher ground because of his strong pleas for the church to become more Christ-like.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

The work among Friends at Des Moines, Iowa, is moving on nicely. With the assistance of the young people and the quarterly meeting superintendent, a new work has been opened up at Urbandale, a suburb in the northwest part of the city. A flourishing Bible School is maintained. Friends will join with the other churches in the city in a simultaneous evangelistic effort, beginning March 16th, and continuing as long as seems best. Each church will hold services at the same time. The Iowa General Assembly put itself on record in favor of the Kenyon-Sheppard interstate liquor shipment bill, and the House adopted the resolution in favor of submitting the equal suffrage amendment to the vote of the people.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

A. J. George held a series of meetings recently at Friendswood, Texas. There was considerable interest manifested, especially among the children and young people.

Following the quarterly meeting at League City, Texas, Asa Woodard, of Indiana, began a series of meetings in the local meeting, the evening of February 24.

Frank W. Dell began a ten days' series of meetings with Friends University church and the students of Friends University, Wichita Kansas, the evening of February 20th.

Friendswood Quarterly Meeting was held at League City, Texas, February 21-23. The weather was fine and the attendance good. On Friday, the meeting on ministry and oversight met and considered the need of a deeper experience, and a more abundant life for the membership. Cyrus W. Harvey, of Wichita, Kansas, preached good sermons, both on Saturday and on Sabbath, he and his wife being ministers in the conservative branch of Friends. Asa Woodward, of Indiana, was also present, and Friends were glad to hear his voice in the ministry again. On Saturday night a temperance rally was held under the leadership of the temperance superintendent. Rev. A. E. Rector, of the M. E. church at Galveston, and Dr. J. J. Terrell, of the Medical College, gave addresses along prohibition lines. On Sabbath morning, the Bible School conference considered the work of the Bible School in the missionary and temperance fields. The anti-cant class of the League City School, gave a Bible alphabet drill. In the evening, the C. E. Society had a missionary program. It was felt to be the best quarterly meeting yet held.

New England Yearly Meeting

Harry R. Hole, of Lynn, attended Fairfield Quarterly Meeting, held at Winthrop Center, Maine, February 8th and 9th, and brought helpful gospel messages.

Hannah J. Bailey, National Peace Superintendent of the W. C. T. U., and chairman of the Committee on Temperance and Peace of New England Yearly Meeting, represented both in an address delivered recently before the meeting of the Maine branch of the American School Peace League, which was held at Portland, in connection with the State Teachers' Convention.

A series of meetings began at Portsmouth, Rhode Island, January 9th, and continued until the 31st. The first eleven days of the meetings were under the leadership of W. G. Schurman, and the last twelve days under the preaching of E. E. Martin. As a result, there were sixteen conversions and renewals and twelve claimed to have received the baptism of the Holy Spirit. The meeting is in better condition spiritually, and eight have made request for membership. We are not unmindful to acknowledge in the language of Scripture: "The blessing of the Lord, it maketh rich, and he addeth no sorrow with it."

Words that Gladden an Editor's Heart

We cull at random some sentences which have reached the AMERICAN FRIEND office in recent correspondence, which are self-explanatory. These are all unsolicited, and cover practically every Yearly Meeting. We present them as evidence that the time has come when an effort should be made in every local meeting to place the AMERICAN FRIEND in every Friends family.

"I like the paper. It helps me. It is improved."

"The AMERICAN FRIEND is much liked about Wichita."

"Each issue shows improvement over past, and is getting better all the time."

"I have seen a few copies of the paper, and like its character and tone very much."

"I enjoy the new AMERICAN FRIEND very much, and feel that thee is making a fine start."

"We are liking the new change, and hope it may prosper and do much good for our Master."

"Have heard only favorable comment on our new church paper, and am sorry to miss a single issue."

"I have heard nothing but commendation for the AMERICAN FRIEND here. The people are well pleased."

"I am enjoying our new AMERICAN FRIEND, and will endeavor to promote its interests in any possible way."

"I am well pleased with the paper as it is now coming forth, and shall do all in my power to hold up your hands."

"I want to congratulate you upon the general style and contents of the first two issues of the AMERICAN FRIEND."

"I am more than pleased with the new paper, and hope it will be supported so that it will be a larger and still better paper."

"I like the appearance of the new AMERICAN FRIEND, as well as its contents very much, and wish for it every success."

Here is one from a minister of another denomination: "I take a number of papers, but I read the AMERICAN FRIEND first."

"Please accept my congratulations on the first number of the AMERICAN FRIEND. I read it from cover to cover with intense interest."

"I am greatly pleased with the new AMERICAN FRIEND. You can count on us for a loyal support in every way in which we are able to give it."

"We are pleased with the children's department, and think the paper will find its way into many more homes if it is kept alive by spicy articles."

"I am greatly pleased with the AMERICAN FRIEND, and all thy editorials, and with the position thee is taking for the paper and the articles published therein."

"I am very well pleased with the way the AMERICAN FRIEND is starting out, and I hope the prospect of a large and stable church paper being ours will be realized."

"Much as we liked the AMERICAN FRIEND under the old publication, we are taking renewed interest in it since the recent changes have come about, and pray that it may grow as never before."

"I write to express hearty approval of the change of type for the heading of the AMERICAN FRIEND. I like thy editorials, too. I wish to see the paper increase in circulation many thousands."

"I am glad for your clear, forceful editorials, and note with pleasure the good words that are being spoken relative to the spiritual, evangelistic and constructive manner and methods of the paper."

"We are much interested and pleased with the paper, and are spending considerable time in a study of its contents each week. I hope Friends generally will awake to the importance of supporting it, and do much better than in the past."

Here is one from one of the foremost Friends in America: "I have read every word, I think, in the first issue under your management of the AMERICAN FRIEND. I congratulate you most heartily. It is live, fresh matter, constructive through and through, and has the atmospheric freedom of the middle west."

"I desire to add my word of appreciation to the many already uttered in regard to the present value of the AMERICAN FRIEND. The paper now brings blessings and is in the true sense of the word, a spiritual publication. It merits and will receive hearty commendations."

"The first issue of the AMERICAN FRIEND has just arrived, and practically on time. Accept my hearty congratulations and full approval of the very fine form in which it makes its first appearance. It is a splendid success, and should receive a most hearty support from all over America."

"I am highly pleased with the new AMERICAN FRIEND. I believe the Indiana air is good for it. Anyway it feels the impulse of big things having been done at the Five Years Meeting, and rings with a broad, healthy, enthusiastic, religious spirit which can't wane, but will increase as time goes on."

With the Children

An Assistant

Some little girls they stand and pout,
Instead of helping mother out;
But when mine washes dishes, I Stand right beside her, and I dry
The knives and forks and spoons, which make
A person tired, so long they take.
It isn't nice to stand and pout,
Instead of helping mother out.

FUN FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

A Lesson in Eggs

Joe said: "You gathered 25 dozen eggs; now you count up and find out how many I found."

Frank: "All right."

Joe: "Add the ages of Noah and the three patriarchs; then divide by the number of days of thick darkness in the land of Egypt before Pharaoh let the children of Israel go; divide by the number of door-posts in each house where the blood was sprinkled so the angel would pass over while destroying the first born of the Egyptians; subtract the number of days the Israelites were to eat unleavened bread in their feasts; multiply by the number of plagues sent upon the Egyptians; subtract the number of years Israel was in bondage; add the number of men (women and children were not counted) who journeyed from Rameses; divide by the number of Commandments; subtract the number of kinds of supplies miraculously supplied to the Israelites as they journeyed; divide by the springs plus the palm trees at Elim where they encamped; add the feasts to be kept each year; subtract the number of persons commanded to go up unto Jehovah and worship afar off; add the number of tribes of Israel for whom pillars were built under the mount as altars of worship; subtract the number of days Moses was on Mt. Sinai, and you will find how many eggs I gathered last week. How many dozen did I get?"

Frank said: "I don't remember all the numbers you gave, but I will get my Bible and concordance and find them. Good-bye."

First and Best

A little girl was playing with her doll while her mother was writing. After a while she called the child and took her upon her lap. The little child said:

"I am so glad, I wanted to love you so much, mamma."

"Did you, darling?" and she clasped her tenderly. "I am glad my daughter loves me so; but were you lonely while I wrote? You and dolly seemed to be having a happy time together."

"Yes, mamma; but I get tired of loving her."

"And why?"

"Oh, because she never loves me back."

"And that is why you love me?"

"That is one why, mamma; but not the first one, or the best."

"Why, mamma, don't you guess?" and the blue eyes grew very bright and earnest. "It's because you loved me when I was too little to love you back, that's why I love you so."

This makes us think of a blessed verse John wrote: "We love Him because He first loved us" (I John 4: 19).
—Bible Morning Glories.

A Handsome Apology

Ned and his grandmother are the best of friends, but sometimes the little boy's tongue is too quick to please the old lady. Then Ned apologizes after a fashion of his own, which his grandmother approves.

"I got tired lugging that wheelbarrow for grandmother while she was changing her plants," Ned said to his mother, recounting the day's events at bedtime, "and I said, 'I wish there wasn't another speck of this hateful dirt in all the world!' But then, afterward, I 'polo-gized.'"

"I'm glad of that," said his mother. "Did you tell her you were sorry?"

"No, that is not the kind grandmother likes best," said Ned. "I got another wheelbarrowful and just said: 'Don't you want some more of this nice dirt, grandmother?' And then we were all right again."—Youth's Companion.

What Mary Gave

She gave an hour of patient care to her little baby sister, who was cutting teeth. She gave a string and a crooked pin and a great deal of advice to the three-year-old brother, who wanted to play fishing. She gave Ellen, the maid, a precious hour to go and visit her sick baby at home, for Ellen was a widow, and left her child at its grandmother's while she worked to get bread for both. She could not have seen them very often, if Mary had not offered to tend the door while she went away.

But this was not all that Mary gave. She dressed herself so neatly, and looked so bright and kind and obliging, that she gave her mother a thrill of pleasure whenever she caught sight of the young, pleasant face. She wrote a letter to her father, who was absent on business. She gave patient attention to a long story by her grandmother, and when it was ended, made the old lady happy by a good-night kiss.

Thus she had given valuable presents to six people in one day; and yet she had not a cent in the world. She was as good as gold, and she gave something of herself to all those who came in touch with her all the livelong day.—Apples of Gold.

CLEAR HEADED

Head Bookkeeper Must Be Reliable

The chief bookkeeper in a large business house in one of our great Western cities speaks of the harm coffee did for him. (Tea is just as injurious because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.)

"My wife and I drank our first cup of Postum a little over two years ago and we have used it ever since, to the entire exclusion of tea and coffee. It happened in this way:

"About three and a half years ago I had an attack of pneumonia, which left a memento in the shape of dyspepsia, or rather, to speak more correctly, neuralgia of the stomach. My 'cup of cheer' had always been coffee or tea, but I became convinced, after a time, that they aggravated my stomach trouble. I happened to mention the matter to my grocer one day and he suggested that I give Postum a trial.

"Next day it came, but the cook made the mistake of not boiling it sufficiently, and we did not like it much. This was, however, soon remedied, and now we like it so much that we will never change back. Postum, being a food beverage instead of a drug, has been the means of banishing my stomach trouble, I verily believe, for I am a well man today and have used no medicine.

"My work as chief bookkeeper in our Co.'s branch house here is of a very confining nature. During my coffee-drinking days I was subject to nervousness and 'the blues'. These have left me since I began using Postum, and I can conscientiously recommend it to those whose work confines them to long hours of severe mental exertion." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest. Advt.

Minute of Appreciation

To the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting:

From the recently constituted Quarterly Meeting of Friends in British Columbia, in session at Victoria the 14th of Twelfth month, 1912, Greetings:

At this our first holding of the Quarterly Meeting, we have had the acceptable presence of Charles and May Replogle, sent to us as fraternal delegates by Puget Sound Quarterly Meeting.

Illuminating and interesting accounts of the recent Five Years Meeting have been given us by these Friends. From these, added to the accounts of the Meeting which have appeared in the AMERICAN FRIEND and the London Friend, we have been able to enter into the spirit and conduct of the gatherings to a large measure, and to appreciate the conclusions reached on the leading matters of importance introduced.

It is in our hearts to send you an expression of appreciation for the unity which so prevailed in your meeting, that the decisions arrived at, more particularly that in connection with the Richmond Declaration of Faith, proved so acceptable all round.

Though far removed in geographical position from headquarters the interchange of visits, which has recently commenced between our members and those in the western borders of Indiana Yearly Meeting, has conduced to bring the importance and influence of the Five Years Meeting before us.

In the work of consolidation and expansion on which you have entered, this meeting evinces much interest and prays that God's blessing may be experienced, and a forward impetus be given to the spread of Christianity on the continent, through Quaker principles.

Signed on behalf and by direction of the meeting.

NOW

IF YOU have hard work to do,
Do it now.
To-day the skies are clear and blue,
To-morrow clouds may come in view,
Yesterday is not for you;
Do it now.

If you have a song to sing,
Sing it now.
Let the tones of gladness ring
Clear as song of bird in spring.
Let every day some music bring;
Sing it now.

If you have kind words to say,
Say them now.
To-morrow may not come your way,
Do a kindness while you may;
Loved one will not always stay;
Say them now.

If you have a smile to show,
Show it now.
Make hearts happy, roses grow,
Let the friends around you know
The love you have before they go;
Show it now.

EDITORIAL COMMENT ON CURRENT EVENTS

At this writing, it looks as though Congress would stick to the "one battleship" program. By a close vote, the committee report for two ships was defeated in the House on February 26. An effort will be made in the Senate to restore the provision for two vessels, but all friends of the peace cause will hope that the effort will fail.

* * *

The Chapman-Alexander evangelistic tour in Australia has produced some striking results. In this country, the churches are apparently satisfied if the announcement can be made of a large number of conversions. In Australia, since the beginning of the campaign the first of last March, more than six hundred young men have offered themselves for the ministry and fully half that number of young women have decided to enter the foreign mission field. That is constructive religious work of a high order.

* * *

Japan has apparently reached a violent government crisis. Whether it is the stirring of real democracy, or the ambitions of over-zealous claimants for governmental favor, is not quite clear at this distance. Premier Katsura had been regarded as progressive, and was an advocate of international peace, having inaugurated a number of needed reforms, but popular resentment against the government under the previous ministry seems to have vented itself against him, and he has been unable to stem the tide. The recent rioting seems to have abated, but the immediate future is not full of promise.

* * *

Mexico, while a Republic in name, has advanced little beyond the primer class in the experiment of self-government. There seems to be little of national spirit, and the rank and file appear to be content with the doctrine that might makes right. It remains to be seen whether the promised "iron rule" of Huerta will be more potent than the old autocracy of Porfirio Diaz, or the milder tendencies toward socialistic rule of Madero. All lovers of peace will applaud ex-President Taft's policy of non-intervention, but all will equally hope that our near neighbor's internal troubles are approaching an end. Mexico needs more Christianity.

A new venture in religious procedure is being undertaken by the Publicity Committee of the Associated Churches of Philadelphia. On February 22 a full page advertisement appeared in one of the city papers, which is a call to the public for affiliation with the church, because it "stands for the best things," and "lines up with the forces which make for righteousness." The advertisement concludes with this apt declaration: "They who would make their lives count, should be counted among those upon whom the church may count." This is a sort of publicity that should make thoughtful men stop and consider well their obligations to the religious life.

The decision of the Federal Supreme Court, which sustains the constitutionality of the Mann white slave act, marks an important step in the crusade against vice in this country. While this law can only apply to the interstate traffic in women and girls, and gives little relief in the smaller cities and towns, which must continue to deal with this terrible evil in their own way, it nevertheless strikes at the root of the iniquity in a forceful manner. Were it not for the interstate debauchery, much of the profit that comes to these traffickers in sin would be destroyed, and the supply of the trade would soon be materially reduced. Not of least importance is the reiteration of the Supreme Court that the powers to be exercised by the state and nation are "to promote the general welfare, material or moral." Some of our statesmen have been in grave danger of losing sight of this latter function, which is fundamental to a stable government.

* * *

Congress has taken a step of unusual importance in passing the measure for which Senator LaFollette and others have labored incessantly, requiring the interstate commerce commission to ascertain the actual value of the property of all common carriers, like the railroad, telegraph and telephone companies. Most of the troubles which the government and the public have had with these public service corporations are due to the wrongful capitalization of these companies, and the excessive valuation which has been fixed upon their stock and equipment. Inflated securities are always fraught with danger to the public, which must pay the exorbitant interest and dividends based upon unreal values. Whether or not the bill will get out of conference whole is a question, but it will evidently not be long until an equitable law upon the question is assured.

MARCH 23

SUBJECT—THE EMPTY TOMB.

LESSON—Mark XVI: 1-11. Commit verses 6, 7.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Now hath Christ been raised from the dead, the first fruits of them that slept."—I Cor. XV: 20.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

MARCH 23

TOPIC—"Vital Living: The Lesson of Easter."—II Cor. IV: 8-18.

"If a man die, shall he live again?" Christ's resurrection has answered the question. The empty tomb is the hope of humanity. It is the guarantee of life perpetual and immortal.

Christian living in the midst of perplexity, distress, persecution and death is the marvel of the ages. The martyrs typified the spirit of the resurrection, for out of their sacrifice sprang a vital religious life, that has been the inspiration and soul of the church for centuries.

The meaning of life is best revealed in the face of opposition and difficulty. It is easy to drift with the current, and requires little of vital energy, but it is only the intensive life that can row against the tide. It is the life energized by the Holy Spirit, that has been engrafted into the Divine Life, that can meet trials and perplexing problems unflinchingly.

There are many sham lives, selfish, hypocritical, narrow and cold. The life that is worth while needs the touch of a greater power and the inspiration of a greater life. He who tries to make life count for the most, is the one who will receive the crown at the end of the race. It is the life more abundant that is the ideal toward which all should strive.

Many are content to live in the lowlands of Christian experience, when the high plains that are fresh with the mountain air of God's freedom are inviting all to a higher life.

The words of the Apostle as given in the lesson are full of inspiration. "For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." It is the realization of this truth that makes life worth living.

The sheriffs of Minnesota, recently assembled in annual conference, reaffirmed their opposition to capital punishment.

William Jennings Bryan, the new Secretary of State, advocated universal peace in a recent address at Raleigh, North Carolina.

A method of heating the telephone transmitter and thus greatly increasing the volume of sound, has been perfected by a Danish engineer.

Enduring Hardness in Christ's Service

"Thou therefore endure hardness."

Religion is not a matter of expediency. It is not a cloak to be donned or doffed at will to suit convenience. It is not to be gauged by the weather, or the condition of the pulse, or by any environment. It is not a game of chance to be played at random to suit any changing fancy.

Religion—the Christian religion—is a life to be lived, in sunshine or in storm, in health or in sickness, amid evil or good report. It touches humanity at the center and determines what its character really is. Its requisites are stability, constancy, determination, persistency, no less than purity, faithfulness, obedience and devotion.

There are too many fair weather Christians; too many who march only on dress parade; too many who, like the sensitive mercury in the tube, yield ever to the changing atmosphere about them. There are too few "good soldiers of Jesus Christ;" too few who really labor for the Crown; too few who can be depended upon for any crisis.

It is the daily life and not the temperature of the revival season that sets the standard of Christian character. It is conduct on Monday at the plow, at the counting desk, in the office, at the forge, or at the polls on that "Tuesday after the first Monday in November" that is the true mark of discipleship, more even than the form of expression in the pew at the Sabbath service.

God wants men and women upon whom he may depend for every emergency; men and women who "enlist for life" in His service, regardless of the east wind, the northern blasts or the summer zephyrs; men and women who are ready to "endure hardness, as good soldiers of Jesus Christ."

The joy of the Lord is in service not in idleness. Singing psalms will not mark a pathway through this world of sin for our King Emmanuel. There is hard work to be done, "and loads to lift," and self-denial to be practised, ere the "kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord, and of his Christ." The spirit of martyrdom will be needed again and again before iniquity is dethroned and righteousness covers the earth.

And why all this? Is the reward worth the sacrifice? Does it pay to be "a soldier of the cross"? Is the harvest worth the toil it takes to produce it? Is the child worth the preparation and the patience that it takes to educate it? Is the painting or the statue worth the weeks and months of painful care and exactness with which it is produced? There is no truer philosophy than that "There is no excellence without great labor."

"If we suffer, we shall also reign with him." "Therefore I endure all things for the elect's sake, that they may also obtain the salvation which is in Christ Jesus with eternal glory." It is both the material and the Divine law of compensation. We toil, and we reap according to our labors.

The church will never prosper upon sentimentality nor by methods of exclusive fellowship. The world's problems will never work out themselves. Evil is too aggressive to vanish at the mere posting of a code of morals. A militant church means a militant membership, equipped and organized for the proclamation of a gospel that is "the power of God unto salvation," and that is potent to "destroy the works of the devil."

To "endure hardness" is not to play the part of the bravado or the fanatic. Our religion is not a religion of force. It is the patient, consistent example, patient amid hardship, toil and suffering; patient and true amid persecutions and misunderstandings and revilings; patient and faithful in crises no less than in prosperity; it is this that wins men to Jesus Christ. This is the way of the Cross. It is model discipleship.

"But watch thou in all things, endure afflictions, do the work of an evangelist, make full proof of thy ministry." It is the high standard for Christian conduct, which at the last enables the saints of earth to exclaim with the apostle: "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day."

Living for Others

On the walls of a Sabbath School room, recently, we saw framed as a motto the letters of the single word "Others." As against the selfish spirit of this somewhat materialistic age, it is a sentiment to be fostered everywhere.

Living for the good of others is the soul and the spirit of the gospel of Christ. He himself set the example of a life devoted to the uplift of humanity. His disciples and the apostles followed in his footsteps and gave their lives in service for their fellows. In all ages the sacrificial spirit has brought its reward in a harvest of disciples.

An unselfish love will win where all else fails. It is a law of universal application, whether in heathendom or in our home communities. Human society craves sympathy and fraternal consideration. It is generally able to detect the genuine from the counterfeit. The mask of hypocrisy seldom screens the visage beneath.

The trouble with many a church and with many an individual is that they have little of genuine heart affection for the toiling, struggling masses of humanity, that swarm about them in every avenue of life. Service becomes a duty, to be performed more for the sake of personal reward than for the saving of others. It is this spirit that brings defeat to many an effort, where there should have been a crowning victory.

The sacrificial life and endeavor are not arts to be acquired, so much as they are the immediate products of the operation of God's spirit upon human life. The common first experience of the new-born convert is a passion for the salvation of somebody else, some friend, some relative, some acquaintance. The first impulse of the regenerated soul is an all-consuming desire that the whole world shall "come, taste and see that the Lord is good." These first impulses are the normal fruitage of being born into a new life. If only in every life they could be perpetuated in their purity and freshness for the larger service of later years, how bounteous would be the harvest!

But too often the cares and ambitions of life nullify the sensitiveness of these first days of Christian experience, and leanness and barrenness of soul find their counterpart in the meager harvest that is the reaping of all too many who have taken the Christian vow of faithfulness, obedience and devotion.

After all, there is much in life to which men give mental assent, but which does not take possession of their beings in any vital sense. Everyone will applaud the motto hanging on the walls of the Sabbath School room, but to how many is the sentiment a vital power that finds practical application in the daily life? This is the vital test of the highest service, and can only be met by complete consecration to the service of God.

A New Administration

With the inauguration on March 4, the reins of government passed into the hands of a new administration and under the control of a different political party. For the first time in many years, the Democratic party is in complete power, so far as both the executive and legislative branches of government are concerned.

It is a tribute to the stability of our Republic that such a complete change can be wrought, with practically no turmoil and little, apparently, of popular apprehension concerning the future. There is an evident disposition to allow the new regime the fullest opportunity to develop its plans and policy without embarrassment.

It can be said in all fairness that, for the most part, President Wilson has commended himself to the favor of the American people, regardless of political inclinations. He has talked little, and when he has spoken, since the election, his words have brought assurance where there was an element of fear and distrust. It remains to be seen whether the President's personality and evident purpose to conduct his administration upon a high plane will win out over the tendencies of traditional Democracy, but evidently he is to make a strenuous effort in that direction.

His announced policy concerning office seekers will meet with general sympathy and commendation. The President ought not to have his time occupied so largely with questions involving the spoils of office.

Many have wondered whether or not the new President had definite policies that would plainly tend to the maintenance of governmental stability. That is a question yet to be determined. Possibly his greatest weakness may be revealed at this very point. It must be admitted, however, that his inaugural address was positive and largely constructive, and has met with a large degree of public favor. The extra session of Congress, to convene on the first of April, will test in large degree the ability of the new regime to administer government in accordance with the highest ideals and demonstrate the good faith of the party now in power, pledged to carry out certain reforms.

President Wilson is now the executive for all the people, and, regardless of partisan bias, should have the support of all good citizens in every effort making for public betterment.

Some men are so busy telling how busy they are, as an excuse for the non-performance of some duty, that they never find time for any real service for humanity.

Many a life is being wasted for lack of a great purpose. The successful man has a definite aim, and works steadily for its realization.

Consider Christ Jesus Heb. III: 1

BY LUKE WOODARD

II.

His Humanity.

By humanity, as applied to Jesus Christ, is meant all that is essential to a human being. Sin, whether as an act or a nature, did not belong to man in his original state of innocence, and the same was true of the Second Adam miraculously conceived of the Holy Ghost, concerning whom the angel who foretold His birth to Mary testified: "Therefore that Holy thing that shall be born of thee shall be called the Son of God." The apostle bears like testimony: "He was holy, harmless, undefiled and separate from sinners."

Hence from Bethlehem to Olivet He was without sin, either as an act or a condition. He was, if we may so express it, God's ideal of perfect humanity, of whom He testifies: "This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased." Therefore, while He called on others to repent, He never Himself felt the need of it. "For verily He took not on Him the nature of angels but the seed of Abraham"; "was found in fashion as a man"; "made in all things like unto His brethren," "yet without sin." Thus, passing through the successive stages of human life, He is a pattern for childhood, youth and mature manhood.

He was a Teacher, and as such He enjoined both inward purity and practical righteousness, and was an exemplification of the same. Conscious of His own conformity to this lofty standard, He challenged the scrutiny of His enemies. "Who of you convinceth me of Sin?" As a Teacher He taught as one having authority, not only to expound law, but to assume the attitude of a Law Giver; one who could preface His enunciation of a new code in contrast with that of "old time," with His authoritative, "But I say unto you."

He was an infallible teacher. There is nothing in the record of the earthly life of our Lord to justify the conclusion that His conceptions of religious truth were cast in the mold of the Jewish thought of His time. So far from building on the tradition of the elders, He denounced them. He enunciated new truths and gave to old ones new interpretations. His was not the attitude of the learner, but, in the language of Nicodemus, that of "a teacher come from God," of which His miracles were rightly regarded as a conclusive attestation.

The Kenosis theory that assumes that because the Lord Jesus subjected Himself to human conditions, His teaching was not free from possible error, and hence was not wholly trustworthy, has no support in consideration of His nature or Scripture testimony. The advocates of this theory cite in proof, Mark 13: 32, "Of that day and hour knoweth no man, no, not the angels which are in heaven, neither the Son, but the Father." To cite this as proof that there were other things which Jesus did not know, is wholly gratuitous conjecture. If we demand specifications, who is authorized to give them? If it be left for each one to judge, what portion of His utterances might not be relegated to the realm of doubt? We may safely accept any statement made by our Lord as true. If this applies to the one thing He said He did not know, why not apply it to His sayings when He speaks as one who professes to know? What judge or jury competent to determine the value of testimony, would discredit the positive statements of a witness concerning things of which he claimed to be cognizant because he admitted there was one thing concerning which he was not informed?

The Lord Jesus was a Prophet in the sense of being a forth-teller, that is, a proclaimer of religious truth. He was more; He was a revealer. He spoke as one familiar with the unseen world. He taught as it had never been taught before, the fact, the nature, and the eternity of the future life. He brought life and immortality to light through the Gospel. Who before Him had taught explicitly that there should be a resurrection both of the just and the unjust? That in the resurrection the saints should be equal to the angels, and that they could not die any more? Who before Him had given a graphic portrayal of the Judgment, of the Great Day when the Son of Man shall come in His glory, and all the holy angels with Him, and before Him shall be gathered all nations, when He shall judge the world in righteousness, welcoming the righteous to everlasting happiness and consigning the wicked to everlasting punishment?

Thus, as a Prophet He was a foreteller of these solemn realities relating to the future world. He also often uttered prophecies concerning things in time, such as His betrayal, His death, His resurrection, the persecution that should befall His church, the destruction of Jerusalem, and the dispersion of the Jews. He stands before the world in majestic isolation as compared with all other prophets. Yet He who is so lofty, is equally conspicuous for lowliness. "I am meek and lowly in heart."

Between Himself and His most devoted followers there is in one sense the distance of infinity, yet "He is not ashamed to call them brethren." His attitude was one of humility without self-depreciation, lofty without ostentation, meek without servility. In unmasking hypocrisy He was austere without vindictiveness, merciful to the erring, yet never compromising with or apologizing for sin.

This subject has a practical bearing as valuable as its truth is clear. We love to think, there are times when it is peculiarly precious to dwell upon the thought, that, in the Lord Jesus we have an ever-living "Daysman" between us and the invisible God, who "can lay His hand upon us both." As God over all, blessed forever, He has power adequate to the utmost depth of human need; as made like unto His brethren, "He is touched with the feeling of our infirmities." The late John Hodgkin, a distinguished English barrister and minister of our church, who visited this country about the middle of the last century, near the close of life, remarked while suffering from a distressing illness: "Until the past year I had too exclusively meditated on the divine nature of our Savior, and had not enough thought of Him as the Son of Man, sympathizing with all the weakness and weariness of this body of our humiliation, as well as the Son of God dwelling in the glory of the Father."

Who has not felt social life made doubly honorable by the scene at Bethany and at Cana of Galilee? What eloquence have tears of human sympathy in the light of the occasion at the grave of Lazarus when "Jesus wept"? What heart does not become unselfish and pitiful toward the fallen as we look into the house of the Pharisee, and behold a sinner bathing the feet of Jesus with her tears and kissing them in token of responsive gratitude? What judge may not learn to decide with pity, if not with leniency, the criminal's fate as he reads the words of Jesus to the penitent, though convicted woman: "Neither do I condemn thee; go, and sin no more"? Who does not feel that poverty when the result of birth or unavoidable misfortune, is no longer disgraceful, since Jesus "had not where to lay His head"?

What martyr ever suffered knowing of our Savior's sufferings, who did not feel his soul made stronger by a view of the solemn scene at Golgotha? And how the dying are cheered by the thought that Jesus has trodden the portals of the grave before them?

The Pitfalls of Life

BY EDMUND STANLEY

It seems passing strange that those, who seek to follow in the way the Master would have his children live and serve, should be beset by pitfalls so assiduously devised. No sooner has the child, born into the Kingdom, begun his career under the new regime than Satan sets about to entrap him. The Christian life is seldom free from the hidden rocks that threaten shipwreck, and he who escapes Scylla on the one side must be alert lest he be engulfed in the torturing whirls of Charybdis on the other. What is true of individuals is none the less true of the churches.

In the early years of Quakerism there went forth a strong protest against the formalism which dominated the churches of the time. Scarcely had the new movement gotten good headway, however, when in the attempt to avoid the deadening effect of formal service in sermon and sacrament the Friends were carried into another formalism, if not as blighting in its effect upon the worshiper, perhaps even more deadly upon the evangelizing work and influence of the church. The long period of our experience of silent meetings with little or no evangelistic or missionary spirit is too fresh in the minds of many to need description or discussion.

But the pendulum continues to swing, and new conditions arise. The revival spirit breaks out in many sections and there is manifest again much of the real life and spirit of the times of Fox and his co-workers.

In the enthusiasm of the hour a few zealous minded men and women lost their balance and swung far over into extravagances which brought reproach upon the church. They forgot that Christian experience, life and practice are the most common sense things in the world, and that their conduct, to honor the name of Him they would serve, must show forth sober, thoughtful and sane practices.

We think we are learning better than to be carried away into such extravagances, to indulge in such unseemly conduct—but are we? Are there not pitfalls along the pathway just as assiduously placed and concealed for our feet as they were for those of earlier times and experiences? Satan is just as surely satisfied for us to grow indifferent through the belief that his personality is but a myth story, without reality. Again he may try to lull to sleep in the acceptance of Social Service for the virtue of the new birth. The siren song may too, reach the unguarded ear of the worshiper who finds the heights of spiritual experience amid strong and noisy emotional demonstrations, or in the quiet waiting in the pose of silence and meditation.

It is none the less true that out of all these things, these ways in which we would serve him, God may bring blessing; for after all, it is the heart attitude that makes possible the access to Him.

However much of virtue there may be in these two dissimilar means of grace so ardently supported by earnest Christians today, it has seemed to me that, without the exercise of greatest caution, either may become a hindrance rather than a blessing. Is there not a possibility that we, in our efforts to reach and enjoy the spiritual communion which the soul longs for, may retire within ourselves and seek to appropriate the blessing to self, rather than be found exerting our energies to bring others to a knowledge of the truth.

The silent meeting and the noisy love feast alike may become pitfalls for the unwary worshiper. He may become in these a seeker after blessings, which he would appropriate wholly to self. Both are, if properly conducted, valuable means of grace; but Satan is shrewd enough to devise a way to make even these a blight upon real Christian life. Shall we not rather keep most prominent in mind the needs of the lost, the fallen; and with a firm grip on God's promises, strive to lift up, to build up, to bring to a knowledge of the truth, and leave to the Father the bestowal of blessing as He would have it come through service.

The congregation of believers should come to the assembly right out of the closet where silent waiting and heart dependence upon God have given the "white heat" to prostrate souls. Believers thus consecrated are ready to give forth to those who know not the way of salvation. Silent waiting before God in prostration of Spirit is essential to the soul life; but it is not the thing needful when men, lost in sin, are asking to know the way of life.

Should long waiting in silence or a period of prostration at an altar be necessary to get a body of Christian professors in condition to present the Gospel to the unsaved? Indeed, is it not to the inexperienced an evidence of weakness and a means of discouragement?

More silent waiting, more altar prostration in the home and in privacy is the privilege and the duty of most professing Christians. From it will come more promptness and greater life in the Gospel message in the hour when the people congregate to worship, to teach, to learn of the way of salvation.

Hearts That Have Been Touched

BY J. G. HUNT

I Samuel X: 26

Samuel had grown old. He had judged Israel all the days of his life. When he was old, he made his sons judges. They walked not in his ways. The Elders met and came to Samuel. They demanded a King. They wanted to be like other nations. The Lord told Samuel to give them a King. When he told Saul the desire of all Israel was to him, he said, "Am I not a Benjaminite, the smallest of the Tribes of Israel?" Saul did eat with Samuel. After, as they were going down to the end of the city, Samuel took a vial and poured the anointing oil on the head of Saul. He was turned into another man. God gave him another heart.

Saul went home to Gibeah. He did not go alone. With him went a great company "whose hearts God had touched." Their hearts had been touched and they acted. Too many of us who have felt the touch of God upon our hearts have been so slow, oh! how slow to act. But not all. I have known many who have felt the touch and have yielded to its gentle influence.

I knew a little boy. He was the son of godly parents. He was taken to the Sunday School and the Church. God touched his little tender heart. He said, "I want to be a preacher." Before he reached manhood, he appeared in the ministry, to the joy of his parents and of the church. After a few months, his gift was recognized by the church. I have heard his pleading tones for better lives. I have heard his uplifting prayers, and the hush that fell over the meeting was deeply felt as he said, "We have sat by the wayside begging." In his young manhood he felt drawn to visit a foreign land. He was liberated by a united church. For a few months in a foreign field he told "the old sweet story." He came home "with rejoicing, bearing his sheaves with him." While yet a young man, but with a short life filled with usefulness, disease came upon him. After weeks and months of suffering borne with Christian patience, the silver chord was loosed, the golden bowl broken and his life ebbed away. Today in a beautiful country church yard his body lies sleeping, awaiting the Resurrection Day. But he "being dead yet speaketh."

I knew a young girl. She was the child of wealth. Every wish was gratified. She was well educated and the joy of the social circle. Society beckoned her to a life of gaiety and amusement. God touched her young heart and she yielded up her life to do His bidding. What she formerly loved, now she hated; and what she hated, now she loved. At once she cast her lot with the Church and became one of its pillars. After a few years of Christian activity, she yielded up her young life and went to dwell "forever with the Lord."

I knew a young business man. He was intelligent and highly educated. He was profane and disagreeable toward his family. He had a praying wife, a member of the church. To all her entreaties he turned a deaf ear and made light of her religion. A young evangelist came and began a revival service in the town. Strong efforts were made to induce him to attend. His wife and the faithful members of the church with tears besought him to attend the services and come into the fold. For days he held out, but finally one night he went. Seated on the back seat, he sat mocking, making light of the sermon, the singing and the fervent prayers. After a few more days of mocking, God touched his heart and he was marvelously converted. For many years I saw his changed life, wrought by the Atoning Blood, and beheld his activities in the church with the wife, who rejoiced in his salvation.

I knew an old man. For many years God had knocked at the door of his heart. Like one of old he said, "Go thy way." He became profane and was a drunkard. At a revival meeting in a little Friends Church, God touched his heart and he was mercifully saved. I have heard his broken testimonies. I have heard his simple prayers. I have seen his transformed life. Can I say after seeing such changed lives in young and old, that there is nothing in the Religion of Jesus Christ, and no fountain for sin?

"The dying thief rejoiced to see That Fountain in his day,
And there may I, though vile as he,
Wash all my sins away."

Message from Bible School Board

FROM THE SECONDARY DIVISION

The Secondary Division takes in the boys and girls during the age when they usually plan what they will do as their life work. It is the time for the making of reformers, philanthropists, ministers, missionaries, and social workers in all the varied phases.

The testimony of one thousand Bible School students is that three hundred and ninety-two of them were converted between the ages of twelve and sixteen, and that three hundred and twenty-two were converted between the ages of seventeen and twenty. Fifty-two per cent. were converted before the age of sixteen, and eighty-four per cent. before the age of twenty. We might add that one hundred and twenty-eight were converted between eight and twelve years of age, and one hundred and eighteen between twenty and twenty-four. The rest were scattered over all the other ages up to sixty. We must not leave any age untouched, but it does seem that the age encompassed by the Secondary Division, twelve to twenty, is the time to make the most of our opportunities.

The aim of the teachers of this division, and they should be of the very best, is: How can I get the Bible into the boy without crowding the boy out? How can I get the Bible into the girl and still leave her a girl? How can I show to these men and women in the making, that the God of the Bible is their God; and that the God of the heart-longing is the God of the Bible? Weakness here means weakness everywhere, for the boy today is the man tomorrow; the girl today is tomorrow's woman. Bent today, rigid manhood and womanhood tomorrow. We must have the strongest men teachers for boys and the strongest women teachers for girls that it is possible to procure. We venture to say that in solving this problem we have solved practically every problem, individual, social, and missionary.

An ounce of work done at this period saves tons of labor later. A penny invested here now, gives dollars for other work in the future. We are dealing in sure futures when we are dealing with the boy and girl, and we are helping them to check every false move.

The "Teen Period" is the best time to teach that the true philosophy of life is found in Christ and His teachings. Marion Lawrence says, "We shall never save this world by saving men and women. The new evangelist is to come through intelligent, genuine teaching of God's word to the boys and girls. The 'Teen Age' is the joint in our harness. It is the vulnerable spot. It is the weakest place of all." Now the writer thinks that the above is true, therefore he is saying that we must organize around the boy and girl, then organize them. Especially should this be done in our Secondary Division. Organization is a part of efficiency, and efficiency is what makes us effective in service. Without organization we will let this work be like Topsy, who "just grewed," without intelligent guidance and direction.

During this period it is a natural instinct of the boy and girl to organize. In the boy it may be the "gang"; in the girl it may be a "sorority." So when we organize we use the natural instinct to get the group action along constructive lines rather than destructive. Out of this group will come our trained leaders, who have been developed because responsibilities have been placed upon them. (These organizations should have officers from their own class and of their own selection.) Skill, care and tact (a blessed trinity) must be used here, so that the Bible School may not become a church within a church, instead of being what it was intended to be, "The School of the Church," training many for Christian service.

At any cost we must get to the "teen" heart (Applied Psychology), thus winning the teeming "teen" life by educative evangelism, so that we can harness the "teen" activities for the larger activities of the church and of life. Boy power and girl power generates a great force in the Kingdom Purpose. May we keep in view that the object of these organizations is to win to Christ (Conversion), to train for Christ and in Him (Culture), then to send out for Christ in missionary service, well equipped with the Bible—the Tactic Book of Life's way. Above all, let us as teachers and officers in the Bible School be ourselves at our very best, and may we have that tact which conceals our methods from those with whom we are working. Work hard, pray much, and then see the great things the Father can do with His willing sons and daughters in advancing the Kingdom Purpose.

Livingstone's Consecration

"I will place no value on anything I have or may possess, except in relation to the kingdom of Christ. If anything will advance the interests of that kingdom, it shall be given away or kept, only as by giving or keeping it I shall promote the glory of him to whom I owe all my hopes in time and eternity. May grace and strength sufficient to enable me to adhere faithfully to this resolution be imparted to me, so that in truth, not in name only, all my interests and those of my children may be identified with his cause."—From Journal of David Livingstone, May 22, 1853.

Conference of Foreign Mission Boards

BY CHARLES E. TEBBETTS

(CONCLUDED)

Foreign Missions and Christian Unity at Home.

"It is doubtless true that the cause of Christian unity in America is receiving its greatest impulse from the foreign field. While at home we have been theorizing and exhorting on the subject, the missionaries have been achieving. As the missionary movement represented by St. Paul was the means of bringing to the ancient church those more inclusive and universal concepts of Christianity which have prevailed throughout the ages, so now the outgoing of our Gospel to foreign lands has brought to bear upon the church at home influences making for tolerance in belief and co-operation in service. The general recognition on the part of mission boards and missionaries of the demands for comity and co-operation and the actual instances of organic unity secured abroad, have attracted much attention. While these three terms, 'comity,' 'co-operation,' and 'unity' has each its distinctive meaning, the practice of one blends very readily into that of another. In the promotion of a broad spirit of Christian unity no event of recent times has been of farther reaching effect than the Edinburgh Conference.

"The Survey, the organ of the social movement in America, has recently remarked, 'If ever a reunited Christendom is achieved, it will come as a direct return, as well as by a reflex influence, from the work of the Church for the world at large on foreign mission fields.' What we are able to accomplish in the foreign field the churches of America will eventually be able to do in the home land.

"We believe it to be one of the first duties of this conference to promote the movement for unity at home by acquainting the churches with the new spirit of fellowship which is dominant in the work abroad. We would particularly call attention to the achievement of the churches of South India, by which they have been enabled to unite not only upon a simple creed, but also upon a workable polity. By the massing of their forces they have created a distinctly new and most hopeful situation. Already a mighty impression has been made upon the non-Christian population. By uniting in the support of a theological seminary at Bangalore they are demonstrating that their unity is something more than theory. Other instances of actual union in India, China and Korea could be cited, but they are doubtless familiar to the members of the Conference. Co-operation of two or more denominations in such institutions as Nanking University, West China Union University, Shanghai Baptist College are numerous. We believe the churches at home can greatly profit from knowing these facts.

"By making known such achievements as these and perhaps even more by exemplifying the spirit of Christian brotherhood among ourselves, as members of this Conference, we are in a position of peculiar advantage.

We can and should make large contributions to the cause of unity by emphasizing its need, by showing its proper basis and by demonstrating its ultimate practicability.

Christian Unity and the Appointment of Missionaries

"A pertinent question to ask is, 'What does Christian unity demand of us in our dealings one with another as Boards?' The answer naturally divides itself into three parts corresponding to the three lines of home effort, that relating to the securing of missionaries, that relating to the securing of funds, and that relating to the education of the home churches. We will attempt in the report of this year to cover only the first of these lines of inquiry. The Committee expects to report a year later on the other two phases of the subject.

"In the matter of persuading young people to offer themselves for missionary service, the boards have been in active co-operation, through the Student Volunteer Movement, now for twenty-six years. During this time it has been demonstrated that interdenominational efforts are both practicable and advantageous. It is hardly conceivable that we should ever go back to the old way, when each board was left to its own endeavors to enlist student volunteers. While the home department of each board finds plenty to do in the visitation of educational institutions and in placing the openings for service before those in any walk of life who are qualified to serve, the re-enforcement of our efforts by the traveling secretaries and the general officers of the Student Volunteer Movement are of a kind to warrant the profound gratitude of all.

"We desire to call attention to the fact that a new situation has arisen in the matter of securing candidates which could not have been foreseen by the Student Volunteer Movement at the time of its organization, and which perhaps is not sufficiently appreciated by the boards themselves. We refer to the increasing spirit of interdenominationalism which pervades our churches and particularly our educational institutions. On account of this tendency there has come a lessening of the sense of denominational organization. Nowhere is this tendency more felt than in our educational institutions. Coincident with this theological broadening there has been the definite co-operative movement among the boards. It is impossible for us to be preaching the doctrine of Christian unity and co-operation on the foreign field and to be citing the splendid successes of our missionaries in bringing unity to pass without producing a profound effect upon the young men and the young women at home looking to foreign service. They have seen the vision from afar and have caught the spirit of our broad Christian fellowship even before entering upon their work."

The Peace Movement Among Friends

[This Department is designed to afford an opportunity for a presentation of important phases of the Peace question, and will welcome correspondence which gives information in regard to the progress of the Peace movement anywhere among Friends, or which reflects clearly the views of any of our readers, younger or older, on this important subject. Such correspondence should be addressed to Allen D. Hole, 615 National Road, West, Richmond, Indiana.]

Two Contrasting Methods of Working for Peace

BY MARY DOAN HOLE

Deadlier Armament or Better Logic?

When, as young girls, we were studying the art of that great fair in Chicago, there was a piece of wonderful workmanship to which our teacher never directed our attention, but to which our attention had been directed some weeks before by a poem in a current magazine. When at last, there came a vacation from our daily study, we made our way to the Krupp Gun. I had known, of course, that the poetry arose in the hope of a diverted purpose of that deadly implement. In spite of that knowledge which had been the most obvious fact in the poem, still when I stood facing the hard, inhuman steel construction, the poetic veil was somehow brushed aside, and I saw the savage heart of the instrument. Then it was that I accused myself of lack of faith. Great men had said that the deadly swiftness of cannon blows which this improved weapon had brought about would certainly bring swiftly the day of world peace. War would destroy itself. It is almost twenty years that I have waited to see this peace which improved armament would produce and, alas, the poetic veil has never been rehung over the great Krupp Gun, nor over its improved successors.

This Krupp Gun experience was brought to my mind by a recent editorial in the Toronto Globe, in which modern warfare as a means of producing world peace was pronounced illogical. This editorial referred to the announcement that the British naval maneuvers have demonstrated that a bomb could be dropped with absolute accuracy of aim from an aeroplane into the funnel of a battle ship, blowing up the most formidable super-dreadnaught with all its crew and trained naval force. The argument is that the knowledge that one man in a flying machine is more than a match for one thousand men in a fifteen million dollar battleship on the sea will promote the peace of the world.

Thus far the knowledge that the costliest warship afloat is helpless against an inexpensive submarine has not seemed to lessen the war budgets of Great Britain and Germany. Mr. Asquith has mentioned that the millions of dollars spent year after year on armies and navies that "make angry faces at each other, * * * is not the price of peace, but a satire on civilization."

You have no doubt wondered whether some brilliant writer did not put into one of those first pages of print the prospect for world peace which the newly invented gun powder suggested. No longer a hand to hand combat; one man with his gun might stand at a distance and destroy scores of the enemy if only his aim were true. Powder and Krupp guns and dreadnaughts have been slow in convincing men of the mistake of war, let us now give arguments an opportunity.

More Fighters or More Thinkers?

Truly, as Edwin D. Mead once pointed out, there is as much logic in asking the tailor whether it would be desirable to have a new coat as in asking the head of a country's military establishment whether there is need of more soldiers and more military equipment. We have not always distinguished between questions of statesmanship and questions of military expediency. Are these subjects of disarmament and international conciliation not outside and above the field of the military expert? Shall he then continue to answer our question, "more soldiers or more reason?"

We are told that the German army today is not big enough to suit "the staff," and that the British navy is not big enough to suit the admiralty, and that our own army is not big enough to suit General Leonard Wood. "Therefore," according to the last named authority, as he explained to the Harvard union not long ago, "young college men should prepare, so that when war comes they can be officers." To follow General Wood's plea as reported by the Boston papers, the Monroe Doctrine and our policy of not allowing even commercial coaling stations of other powers in American waters, are sure to cramp foreign nations at some time, and thus force us to war, "hence let us have betimes 600,000 soldiers." But there are now, and have been in the past, other advisers of Harvard men with very different views. Besides, Harvard men revere their predecessors, including so many thinkers who have helped on the movement to supplant the war system by international reason. More and more the college students of America will prepare to be, not officers in the army, as General Wood suggests, but students of international law and leaders in the cause of peace. This very speech about the Monroe Doctrine and the lack of coaling stations for foreign nations with their "inevitable war" may suggest to these students the need of giving the test of reason to the "exceptional and offensive policies which might be the cause for war."

Shot or Logic, Which?

"Civilized men are to be shot or starved into agreeing to arbitrate," observed President Butler in semi-humorous vein, as he smiled at the gullibility of mankind in accepting what he called "this huge world joke."

He is right. What logic is there in this? The United States is a peaceful nation; Great Britain is a peaceful nation; Germany and France and Japan are peaceful nations; therefore, because they are peaceful and do not intend to stir up the war spirit, they must so strengthen their defences, so multiply their navies and increase their armies that nobody can successfully attack them. Who, pray, is left to attack these peaceful, law-abiding nations if, as we are assured, they do not propose to attack each other? Many men and women have asked that question. Finally, President Butler has answered it by saying they must be preparing for an army of white bears from the recently discovered North Pole! Oh, the bitter suffering and world bankruptcy, because intelligent men are accepting seriously the "stupendous joke" by which this illogical logic is described!

It has been a matter of common comment for years that at about the time the appropriations for military purposes are under consideration in Congress, in the House of Commons, in the Chamber of Deputies or in the Reichstag, hostilities are always on the point of breaking out in two or three parts of the world at once. The poor "gullible people rush off to their cyclone cellars and shout to their representatives to vote that great ships and guns and forts may be built to protect them from their fears," President Butler continued. This is certainly a most tragic joke.

While we are asking that a square deal be granted everywhere, it might be worth while to have the same sort of ability that has so brilliantly exposed other forms of political chicanery and graft, make measurement of the selfishness of "the lively type of patriotism which accompanies these military and naval debates the world over." Then arguments and not shot, will drive us to advocate disarmament in order to secure universal peace.

A Trial at Logic.

In a company of peace thinkers, William Jennings Bryan asserted, "I have faith in what I understand to be the Bible plan of bringing peace," and then he began to lead his listeners along his line of argument. He suggested a simple method of testing the two attitudes toward war. He would have one man strap revolvers around him and announce that he would bring peace by fighting for it. He would have another man announce that he did not intend to do injury to anybody, that he would assume that nobody was going to do injury to him, that he would not arm himself. "Which one would have the fewer scars at the end of ten years?" he asked. The readers of this paper will readily make the application of this illuminating little illustration.

The same speaker has another equally convincing illustration of the "profitable patriotism that finds money in the building of ships and getting ready for war." The following is a much condensed form. Suppose a large lake with a half dozen land owners living peaceably along it. Let a ship builder say to one of them: "You are living here with no protection. Don't you know that any of these men around you might build a battleship and you would be absolutely defenseless?" Let the ship builder go to the next neighbor and say: "Don't you see that man's battleship? Do you suppose he is building it for nothing? Now I can build two for you." Suppose these two were built, what an argument this builder would have when he got to the third man. "There are two of them against you. They might combine, and you are absolutely defenseless. Having gone around the lake he might go back to the first man and say: "You are out of date; look at the improvements since you built. Then, you have only one, and these neighbors have four or five or eight each. There is nothing for you to do but mortgage your land. You are in for it!" To quote one more sentence directly from Mr. Bryan: "Now that is the race of the world, my friends,—that is the mad race of the world."

The Number of the Enlisted

From Dr. H. K. Carroll's invaluable tables of church statistics published in the New York Christian Advocate of January 30, we gather the figures printed below. The table as re-arranged gives the rank in numbers, the name, number of communicants, and gains for last year, of the twenty-nine leading denominations in this country. The figures in each case are for the United States only; communicants in other lands are not counted.

These figures are interesting and useful for comparisons, which are not always wise. The total number of communicants in the churches of the United States, including those not named above, according to Doctor Carroll, is 36,675,537. These include about 650,000 who can not be reckoned Christian. In round numbers, there are thirty-six millions of enlisted Christians. How many of these are good soldiers of Jesus Christ?—Pittsburg Christian Advocate.

The purpose of all the divine activity as regards us men is not merely to make us happy, but to make us happy in order that we may be good. He whom what he calls his religion has only saved from the wrath of God and the fear of hell has not learned the alphabet of religion.—Alexander Maclaren.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

California Yearly Meeting

Arthur and Eliza F. Dann, of England, spent some time during the month of February in California Yearly Meeting. They attended Friends' meetings in Whittier, Los Angeles, Bell, Huntington Park, Long Beach, Pasadena, San Jose, Oakland and Berkley, and their ministry has been greatly blessed. They also were in attendance at Whittier Quarterly Meeting February 14th and 15th, and their messages were given in the power of the Holy Spirit, and souls were strengthened thereby. Friends throughout California are thankful for their presence and ministry.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

Union Monthly Meeting was held at Ludlow Falls, Ohio, March 1st. Fifteen adult and thirteen associate members united with Friends, as the result of the great evangelistic meetings held recently at West Milton.

Spiceland Academy—The board of trustees of Spiceland Academy presented to Spiceland Monthly Meeting, held March 1, 1913, a series of resolutions to the effect that the Monthly Meeting build and equip a modern school building for Spiceland Academy. The sentiment of the meeting was strongly in favor of the action and a committee of six was appointed to serve, in conjunction with the Academy trustees, as a building committee to provide funds and build an up-to-date home for Spiceland Academy. The Academy has an open field and prospects for the future are bright. We feel sure the friends of the Academy will rally to her support. There is still a place for the Friends' Academy in Friends' Educational work.

The Bible School in the meeting at Fairmount, Indiana, is in a flourishing condition. It is thoroughly organized and graded throughout. The primary department has separate apartments in the basement of the new Bible School addition to the church. There are twenty-four classes in the school, the largest having an enrollment of one hundred and five. The average attendance for the months of January and February was three hundred and two, as against two hundred and thirty-one for a similar period a year ago. The school has a large cradle roll and home class department. Forty persons have taken teacher's training work the past year. There are ten organized classes holding the international charter. The largest attendance thus far this year was three hundred and thirty-one, and the smallest, two hundred and seventy-five. These figures indicate a working church and an interested membership. Many members are not yet in the Bible School, but an earnest effort is being made to enroll the entire membership for Bible study.

A successful revival effort closed at Jonesboro, Indiana, March 2d, under the direction of Fred E. Carter, pastor of the church, and Miss Leora Bogue, singing evangelist. A new addition to the meeting house, begun last November, was completed and ready for use in January, and was dedicated on February 9th. Ira C. Johnson, yearly meeting superintendent, was present and preached the dedicatory sermon. The entire amount necessary to pay for the improvements and furnishings was raised in less than thirty minutes. The revival services began the same evening. Mr. Carter preaches the Bible plain and straight. His sermons not only bring men to Christ, but are a strong moral stimulant. Conviction, deep and powerful, fell upon the people as a result of the ministry of the Word and song, in which Christ was held up. There was a dignity and solemnity about the services which were devoid of the sensational, and the judgment of thinking men and women was convinced and their reason appealed to, with the result that many decided for Christ and the church. Sixty-six persons sought and found Christ during the meetings. Fifteen united with the church, and the believers were greatly strengthened.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

Lindley A. Wells, of Portland, Oregon, began a series of meetings at Lynnvile, Iowa, February 6th, continuing until the 22d. In spite of an epidemic of la grippe, which kept many at home, the meetings were a blessing to many, and the church was strengthened by his ministry. He began meetings at Bear Creek on February 27th.

A two weeks' series of meetings was held at the Friends North H Street meeting, Oskaloosa, Iowa, February 9th to 16th, with Edwin Loft, of New Sharon, and Lurana Terrell, of University Park, as leaders. The preaching was strong, clear and evangelical, and earnest personal work was done in the congregation. As a result about twenty came to the altar of prayer for conversion, renewal, or the baptism with the Holy Spirit and entire sanctification. Some of these gave good evidence of having obtained what they sought. The meetings closed with seekers at the last service.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

Susie M. Allen, of Haviland, has just closed a ten day's meeting at Glen Elder, Kansas, which has resulted in good to the church. Eight claimed definite blessing, and two have united with the church.

Ira S. and Sarah Bundy celebrated their golden wedding anniversary at their home in Sterling, Kansas, February 25. It had not been their plan to invite their friends, but to spend the day quietly at home. But relatives and friends to the number of about thirty planned otherwise, and came in to spend the day and have dinner together, which they had bountifully prepared. The day was spent very pleasantly, and valuable tokens of respect and friendship were left as the friends departed.

A series of evangelistic meetings, conducted by Frank W. Dell, of Central City, Nebraska, closed at Wichita, Kansas, March 2. Although the weather was stormy and disagreeable throughout the ten days of meetings, much interest has been shown, not only by members of University Church, where the meetings were held, but by others. The sermons were sound and forcible, and have been a power for good in the community. There were some conversions and renewals, and the tone of the church has been materially improved.

A series of two weeks' meetings closed at Lowell, Kansas, on February 23. They were conducted by Clyde W. Likes, missionary to the Indians at Ottawa, Oklahoma, assisted half of the time by Ivey Clarke, missionary to the Indians at Modoc, Oklahoma. The membership of the meeting lent their aid in prayer, testimony and song. Excellent sermons were preached, with the result that Christians were much strengthened and sinners were made to think seriously. There was a good feeling and interest throughout the meetings.

Sterling Quarterly Meeting was held at Sterling, Kansas, February 22 and 23. On account of the cold and snow, the attendance was very small. On Seventh-day morning the company of President Edmund Stanley, of Friends University, was greatly appreciated. His message was helpful to all present. William F. Pribbenow, C. E. Field Secretary, was present on Sabbath and rendered good service. His message to the young people was one to be commended by all who heard him. The next Quarterly Meeting will be held at Hargram, in Rush County, the fourth Seventh-day in May.

New England Yearly Meeting

Smithfield Quarterly Meeting was held at Wooster, Mass., February 12. William Kent, of Woonsocket, was much favored in presenting the truth from I Peter 2: 5. J. Farland Randolph and others continued very helpfully the same line of thought. Dinner was served in the Y. W. C. A. rooms, as usual, by the courtesy of Friends.

The Quaker Round Table of South China, Maine, has continued its fortnightly meetings with much success. The last circle was held at the home of George Roberts and wife at Lakeside on the evening of February 24, with an attendance of about thirty. Many new interested Friends were present from that locality. Good sledding and a perfect night afforded the regular members from the village a most enjoyable three-mile ride in sleigh and double-sled to the place of meeting. "The Quaker Invasion of America" and "The Early History of New England Yearly Meeting" were the topics under consideration, which were treated by readings from references, by Grace M. Jones and Annabel M. Jones. In connection with the latter subject, Whittier's "The Ballad of Cassandra Southwick" and a portion of "The King's Missive" were read by Barclay L. Jones. A paper containing a synopsis of the life of each of the Friends, thus far considered, was also read. At the close of the study hour a pleasant social occasion was enjoyed and refreshments were served, the company being entertained by the host and hostess.

New York Yearly Meeting

The former Junior Christian Endeavor Society of Brooklyn Meeting has been divided into two classes, Junior and Intermediate. The aim is to prepare the little ones and young people for a larger life in the meeting. With this in view, four times a year a miniature Quarterly Meeting supper is arranged. After the regular business meeting each quarter, the members remain while the social committee serves supper. The attendance has increased since adopting this plan. Twenty-six are now on the roll with an average attendance of eighteen.

Ohio Yearly Meeting

Short Creek Quarterly Meeting was held at Mt. Pleasant, Ohio, February 14-16. The church was greatly blessed. New life and interest in all branches of the work are encouraging the membership to larger things in the Master's service.

Oregon Yearly Meeting

The most successful revival meeting in its history has just closed at Boise, Idaho. Services were continued every night for four weeks. About forty received a definite work of grace in their hearts. Several have given their names for membership; others are thinking of joining. One evening there were three generations at the altar at the same time. Some evenings there were two altar services. By the time the first one was over, others were ready to seek a blessing. One back-slidden preacher, his wife and daughter were reclaimed. One colored man asked the privilege of helping the church in a financial way. The power of God was wonderfully manifest in all of the services, which were conducted by the pastor, John Riley. The closing days of the revival meeting were at Quarterly Meeting time. H. Elmer Pemberton, of Salem, Oregon, Yearly Meeting Superintendent; Thomas Perisho, Quarterly Meeting Superintendent; Harry Hays, who has charge of the Biblical training class in connection with the academy; Ezra Pearson, pastor, all of Greenleaf, Idaho, and William Hadley, of Star, Idaho, were present.

Western Yearly Meeting

Watseka, Illinois, has experienced an old-time revival, the results of which figures cannot tell. The meeting lasted twenty-four days. About sixty were converted or reclaimed and about twenty-five professed holiness. The pastor, F. J. Cope, conducted the meetings, two each day, with the assistance of Leola King, of Fairmount, Indiana, as leader of the singing. The full gospel of justification and sanctification was presented clearly and without fanaticism, in that power which only a Spirit-filled man can present it. On the eve of the revival meetings members sought and entered into a deeper experience—holiness—and so were in position to lead souls to Christ. Although the meetings have closed, the revival spirit continues.

Arthur Hammond, pastor of Carmel Meeting, Indiana, began a series of meetings February 2, assisted by Clarence Cosand, singing evangelist, from Lupton, Michigan. The services continued until the 19th, when the minister's voice failed. He had been favored to preach the gospel along Bible lines with much power and clearness, denouncing in no uncertain way, the sins of the people. At the same time his ministry resulted in strengthening the believers, correcting the backsliders and awakening the unconcerned. Two sessions were held each day. The one in the morning was a time of special blessing. The evening services were well attended and were sessions of special outpouring of the truth, with pleadings for correct and clean lives. The interest increased until at the close the whole community felt its influence. Eight have requested to become members, and the whole church has been stirred to greater activity. Clarence Cosand held two meetings for the children for which service he seems to be especially gifted.

Wilhjalmar Stefansson, who discovered a race of blond Eskimos, will start from San Francisco on May 1, on a second expedition to the far north, equipped for a three years' voyage. His destination is the unexplored region north of Banks Land.

The Hongkong University, the newest in China, is now open, and more than half of its students are taking technical courses to prepare themselves for the development of the material resources of the country.

Religious Life in Our Educational Institutions

Friends University—

The religious activities of Friends University center around three organizations: The Friends Gospel Band, the Christian Associations, and the Student Volunteer Band. The Friends Gospel Band is composed of Friends students who feel called to definite Christian service. It has a membership of twenty-one and has furnished regularly a force of workers for a Mission Sunday School at Orient Chapel.

The work of the Christian Associations is of an interdenominational character and has been stimulated by the recent religious movement in the city. Here the Men and Religion campaign has been followed up as it has in few other places, one hundred and four towns having been reached by gospel teams sent out from Wichita churches. Aside from study classes and individual work in various city church teams, the University Y. M. C. A. has organized a special college team which has held a number of services including an evangelistic series during the holidays.

The Student Volunteer Band has a membership of thirteen and holds weekly meetings in which at present the missionary movement is being studied from the standpoint of current literature. The direction and activity of Professor Reagan in the department of applied Christianity is extending the religious influence of the school. In the Men's movement, Professor Reagan has visited a large number of towns as a leader in the department of boys' work. He also spent a week of the holidays in company with an evangelistic team of the Gospel Band which held meetings for Friends at Barclay, Kansas.

The quickened religious life within the territory of Friends University has aroused a greater interest in Bible study, and with this increased interest there comes an enlarged opportunity for the English and Classical, Biblical departments of the school to serve the church at large in a very definite way.

Wilmington College—The Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, organized in the Fall of 1903, have done more effective work this year than ever before. These organizations hold separate weekly meetings and joint term meetings. These have been very beneficial and instructive. The Y. W. C. A. was especially fortunate in having as its guest, Helen Taylor, chairman of the Students' Field Committee of Ohio and West Virginia, who gave a very interesting talk on the "Christian Student Federation Meeting," held at Constantinople. The Y. M. C. A. has favored us with a number of well worth while meetings, especially that of Mr. Milton J. Farquhar, whose subject was "A Business Lay-out," and that of Mr. N. E. Bennett, one of the two American members of the Royal Astronomical Society of France, who lectured on the "Monopoly of Education." Once a month meetings are held at the East Wilmington Mission by members of the Y. M. C. A. The Bible and Mission Study classes conducted jointly by the Y. M. and Y. W. have had very good attendances, and a very wholesome interest has been manifest. In April we shall have with us the Volunteer Band from the Ohio State University. These meetings are being looked forward to with great interest, and it is to be earnestly hoped that much good may accrue from them.

Corinth Academy—Corinth Academy, within the limits of Baltimore Yearly Meeting, is located in south-eastern Virginia. It receives aid from Friends of Baltimore and Philadelphia. While it is controlled by Friends, students of all denominations are admitted. The Friends Meeting is on the same grounds and the entire school attends the regular mid-week meetings. The standard of the religious life of the school is high, due to the examples set by the parents in their homes, the religious teachings of the pastor, Alonzo Cloud, and the lives of the faculty. There is a good active Sabbath-school and a live Young People's Union, which has proven a great blessing to the young people of the church.

Fairmount Academy—The religious life of the students of Fairmount Academy is well manifested in the prayer meetings of the Students' Christian Association, which are held each Wednesday noon. This is an organization of the students, and they themselves usually act as leaders of the meetings, which are well attended. Each week several of the members take an active part in prayer or testimony. Not alone here, but also in the various activities of the school, is the spirit of Christian living in evidence.

Central Academy—The religious life of the students of Central Academy is wholesome. About sixty per cent. of the students are members of the Friends church, and most of them take an active part in the Sunday-school and Young People's Christian Endeavor Society as leaders and officers. A beginning is being made in Bible Study during the second semester by an elective course in "The Life of Christ," offered by the principal. There is a strong demand for work of this kind from the students, and we hope to offer more work the coming year.

Vermilion Academy—The atmosphere of Vermilion Academy, Vermilion Grove, Illinois, is one which encourages the living of a Christian life. Almost all of the pupils who live or room in the town are members of the Christian Endeavor Society of the Friends Church. Some of the most active members of this Society are Academy students. During the present school year, three pupils of the school have joined the church.

STRENGTH

Without Overloading the Stomach

The business man, especially, needs food in the morning that will not overload the stomach, but give mental vigor for the day.

Much depends on the start a man gets each day, as to how he may expect to accomplish the work on hand.

He can't be alert, with a heavy, fried-meat-and-potatoes breakfast requiring a lot of vital energy in digesting it.

A Calif. business man tried to find some food combination that would not overload the stomach in the morning, but that would produce energy.

He writes:

"For years I was unable to find a breakfast food that had nutrition enough to sustain a business man without overloading his stomach, causing indigestion and kindred ailments.

"Being a very busy and also a very nervous man, I decided to give up breakfast altogether. But luckily I was induced to try Grape-Nuts.

"Since that morning I have been a new man; can work without tiring, my head is clear and my nerves strong and quiet.

"I find four teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts with one of sugar and a small quantity of cold milk, is delicious as the cereal part of the morning meal, and invigorates me for the day's business." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

"There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

EASTER MORNING

BY EDMUND F. ALBERTSON

THE ROSE from the tomb in the wooing morn,
And the sun, like a gleam of gold,
Looked down on the earth anew with hope,
For hope was pale and cold.
Forth he came on that Easter Day
To scatter the gloom of death away.
Then broke from the lips of the sons of men
A gladsome and conquering song:
Of God's sure power over dreaded death,
Of right over ancient wrong:
This is divinest minstrelsy,
More radiant morn could never be.
Behold by faith a world redeemed!
Instead of thorn the pine,
Instead of briar the myrtle tree,
An everlasting sign:
And ever the Easter angels sing
That death hath lost its dreaded sting.

Fourth American Peace Congress

From the March Advocate of Peace, published by Dr. Benjamin F. Trueblood, of the American Peace Society of Washington City, we learn that "The organization of the Fourth American Peace Congress to be held in St. Louis, May 1-4, is proceeding most encouragingly. On Tuesday, February 18, President Wilson graciously received a committee from the St. Louis Business Men's League. President Wilson not only showed a keen and sincere interest, but gladly accepted the invitation to serve as honorary president of the congress. He also expressed himself as anxious to attend, and hoped that he would be able to deliver the address at the opening session in the Colosseum, Thursday, May 1. The committee feels sure that he will do this. Since the Colosseum holds 18,000 persons, this ought to mean, of course, the largest meeting in the interest of international peace ever held. Demands for seats at the meeting are coming in already in large numbers."

The governors of Texas, Kentucky, South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Maine, New Hampshire and Wyoming have already appointed strong delegations from their respective states to attend the congress.

The Intercollegiate Peace Association has laid plans for a peace oratorical contest between the colleges of the five states of its western group, which include Missouri, Illinois, Iowa, Nebraska and South Dakota. The winners in this group contest will meet in a final contest at Lake Mohonk during the Arbitration Conference, May 14-16.

It has been planned to have both general and sectional meetings, the latter of which are designed for the more technical discussions. Ex-president Taft has accepted the office of honorary vice-president, and it is expected that the leading peace advocates of the North American continent will be in attendance.

On April 30th the Jefferson Memorial, costing $500,000.00, and symbolizing the acquisition of the great Louisiana Territory, will be dedicated. Ten United States senators and fifteen members of the House of Representatives, will attend this service by appointment.

Friends, who have been leaders in the peace reform movement, ought to be largely represented by delegates from every Yearly Meeting. The occasion promises to be a high water mark of the peace movement thus far.

Woman suffrage has met with defeat in the Minnesota, Maine and Nebraska legislatures.

Another "Old Time" Revival

The Friends of Emporia, Kansas, have been blessed with a revival which leaves behind it a lasting blessing on many hearts.

Prayer was the keynote of the meeting throughout. For months the church had been praying for an evangelist, sent of God as was Peter to the house of Cornelius. O. B. Ong was laid upon our hearts as the right one, and in response to a unanimous call, wrote us that he had had many calls but had a date for us and felt clearly sent to labor with us.

Our meeting began February 2 and closed February 19, during which time nearly seventy-five persons knelt at the altar to be reclaimed, saved or sanctified. There were no cards signed. Cards were unnecessary with our people, as all they wanted was a place to weep and pray. There was no excitement, but as with all God-sent revivals since the days of Pentecost, there was some of the Spirit's demonstration which had power. The work was as nearly all genuine as we have had the pleasure to see. It was the kind of a revival which prepares the people for active, aggressive work for God along the line of the salvation of souls. We take particular notice while many are carrying out the old, God-honored altar, where people weep, repent and pray, it is still a blessed place to many. God is using it, and for holy, happy-working Christians we prefer those who "pray through" in the ordinary old-time way.

Our meeting did several things for us. Several of our people were gloriously and wholly sanctified. Many backsliders for whom we have long worked and prayed were brought back to God. A goodly number of new ones were converted. It served to confirm our opinion that as a rule revivals do not reach far beyond the sphere of influence wielded by the church before the special meetings. We enjoyed seeing over thirty from our own Sunday School class at the altar, and we think we have now as fine and as spiritual a company of young people as can be found in any ordinary Friends Church.

We praise God for sending Brother Ong to us. He holds a warm place in many hearts. An offering of $171 was given him. His work was sane and we recommend him to any church wanting a genuine "Old Time Revival."

Sixteen have applied for membership, nearly all of whom are married people. More, we think, will follow.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

MARCH 30.

TOPIC—Mission Work at Home and Abroad. III. Education. Acts VIII: 7-11.

Friends have ever been advocates of education. Contemporaneously with the establishment of meetings in the pioneer days, they started schools as a proper adjunct to the development of the spiritual life. To many of these schools are traceable in large degree that stability of purpose which has characterized Friends in so many communities.

Naturally the school has had to be the hand-maiden of the missionary. Often the first effort to win the confidence of the heathen has succeeded through the school, where the young people are taught right principles as well as given literary instruction.

Generally the mission schools are crude affairs, which would be considered out of date in our own land. No less crude are the means for developing spiritual truth. It is from such environment that civilization building is going on. How important that Christendom pour out yet more lavishly of its wealth for the better equipment of all our mission stations!

Many of these schools however, in the lands that are better civilized, have grown into strong institutions. At the Syrian Protestant College, at Beirut, Syria, more than thirty languages are spoken among the students, which number nearly one thousand. These mission schools bring together the representatives of nations at enmity with each other, and are doing much to promote the cause of peace and brotherhood.

No one can measure the value of colleges like Robert College in Constantinople, the institutions in Persia, in Japan and in China. These schools not only give intellectual training, but they train students to become native pastors as well. From them are developing national reform movements, which are opening the door more than ever to our Christian missionaries.

The Hero of the Dark Continent

The missionary world does well to celebrate the centennial anniversary of the birth of David Livingstone. He is a world figure who "wrought mightily" for the up-lifting of mankind and the redemption of benighted humanity. He opened the door of opportunity for the Christian Church into a continent where the gospel light had not hitherto shone.

Traveler, discoverer, missionary, philanthropist. He was all of these, but he was more. He was a pioneer in building a Christian civilization upon the ashes of darkest heathendom; he was the forerunner of the gospel message which will yet make darkest Africa bloom and blossom as the rose.

Livingstone possessed the characteristics of sturdy determination, and persevered in tasks, before which others of less faith would have quailed. With a profound faith in God, and a consciousness of being called to open up the dark continent, not to traders so much as to the heralds of the Truth, he stands out in history as one of the world's greatest heroes. A man with weaker fibre and fearful heart would have turned back, when besought by such a friend as Stanley. But nothing short of death could turn him aside from his purpose. He had heard "the call of the world," and by faith had caught a vision of the Christ who had come to earth to save the blacks no less than the Caucasian.

But the work begun by Livingstone has not yet been completed and will not be until Africa is won for the Son of God. Today it is a conflict between Christianity and Mohammedanism, with the latter apparently in the ascendancy. Perhaps the observance of this centennial occasion is a part of God's plan to center the thought of the Christian Church more positively upon its responsibilities in this uncertain part of the world. The issue depends upon the speedy attention of Christendom to the African problems of today.

Livingstone refused to turn aside from his missionary endeavors to become merely a geographical explorer. The Church of today cannot afford to be satisfied with allowing commerce to take the front rank in the movements which are revolutionizing the native home of the black race.

Africa needs the light of the gospel, and the Church can remember and honor Livingstone in no better way than to establish without delay a propaganda that will stir with sympathy all Christendom, looking to the speedy Christianization of the regions now coveted so eagerly by the disciples of Mohammed.

Webb Bill a Law

President Taft probably made a good many mistakes during his administration, but upon no other question did he blunder more than in his veto of the Webb inter-state liquor shipment measure. It was one of those occasions, all too frequent, where he trusted the judgment of others rather than his own. On different occasions he had expressed to the writer his regret that the states were hampered in carrying out their policies on the liquor question by Federal legislation.

By trusting his attorney-general, who apparently had little conscience on this particular subject, the President was led into what seems to be an untenable position; for in the opinion of those who have given most consideration to the question, the claims of unconstitutionality seem to have been applied to another measure altogether, and hardly fit the bill in question at all.

All lovers of temperance and law observance will rejoice that the sentiment of Congress was sufficiently strong to pass the Webb bill over the veto of the chief executive.

The pendulum of human thought swings ever in the arc that marks the distance between conservatism and radicalism. The important part about it is that it swings, and when advanced too far in either direction, the pull of the opposite force brings it ever back. Thus truth is always safeguarded against the tangent forces in human thought and action.

It means much to be able to see all around any question and thus get the viewpoint of others, but few there are, who possess the ability to do it. It is an art to be acquired and cultivated.

To be, and then to do, is the Christian order of progression.

Lessons of the Empty Tomb

"And they entered in, and found not the body of the Lord Jesus."

That resurrection morning was the gladdest day in all history since the dawn of creation. The star of the world's hope never shone with greater luminosity since the "morning stars sang together." That day was the central point of all the ages. It was the guarantee of the ultimate triumph of righteousness in the earth.

"O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory?" The empty tomb is the token of the destruction of man's last enemy. Henceforth the way is open to the attainment of humanity's highest aspirations. The victory over sin at the cross was paralleled by the victory over death at the tomb, and so long as men and earth endure, the assurance of immortality is like the rosy dawn to the storm tossed mariner upon the uncertain deep.

Without the resurrection, Christ's mission would have been incomplete. His disciples had hoped "that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel," but that hope had died at the Cross. They saw not beyond the tomb. Even when the report came of the risen Lord, the words seemed to the disciples "as idle tales, and they believed them not." Later when the story of the women was verified, and the empty tomb was revealed with all of its amazing wonder, what pathos and disappointment characterized the words, "but him they saw not!"

But within a few hours the revelation came; "their eyes were opened, and they knew him." With new vision they saw that the empty tomb meant a risen Christ. Henceforth the disciples were to be apostles of a new truth. Christ was not dead, but alive, and forever was to be a living presence in the world, lighting up the highway of life for all the saints of earth, and guiding the footsteps of the sin-stricken sons and daughters of Adam, away from the path of death and despair, into the realm of faith and consecration and holiness.

Christianity will never get away from the meaning of Eastertide. Whether regarded as a procedure wholly supernatural, or as the natural culmination of the evolution of the plan of world redemption, whose agent, combining the elements of perfect God and perfect man, could in his humanity rise above the limitations of nature, the resurrection will ever be the inspiration of all Christendom. It was an act inseparably linked with the crucifixion; for who can say that when Jesus prayed that the cup might pass from him, and was immediately resigned to the will of his Father, he did not look beyond the cross, beyond the empty tomb, and see the beauty of the resurrection morn, glorified for all time, the hope of generations yet unborn?

For ourselves, we accept fully the Bible story of that resurrection morning, as being the only natural conclusion of the work on earth in visible form of Christ, who was the Son of God, who came to bring redemption to sinful humanity, and of whose life all are partakers who by faith come unto God through the Son.

Easter is typical of the reaping which is to be done throughout the ages in God's great harvest field. The empty tomb meant a fruition and an enrichment of humanity, which otherwise would not have been realized. "Except a grain of wheat fall into the ground and die, it abideth alone; but if it die, it bringeth forth much fruit." "That which thou sowest is not quickened except it die." This is the law of nature. No less is it the law of spiritual development, except that in nature like begets like, while in the realm of grace, men die to self and rise in newness of life endowed with the spirit of helping others; they die to worldly ambition, and rise to crown the Savior Lord of all; they die to sinful pleasure, and reap a harvest of rejoicing in service for the Master.

The missionaries in the foreign fields look back to that resurrection day, and find the energy with which to break the bands of heathen custom, and set the millions free with the light of the truth. Today the light of that victorious morn is shining upon the slums of our cities and the homes made desolate by the wickedness of men's devices, and past conditions are being transformed into "a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." The Church with clearer vision has caught a new glimpse of that empty tomb and inspired by the mighty truth which it teaches, is girding itself with power to carry out the commission of the risen Lord, "Teach all nations," that they may "observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you."

An Easter Flower Gift

O dearest bloom the seasons know,
Flowers of the Resurrection, blow,
Our hope and faith restore;
And through the bitterness of death,
And loss and sorrow, breathe a breath
Of life forevermore!

The thought of Love Immortal blends
With fond remembrances of friends,
In you, O sacred flowers;
By human love made doubly sweet,
The heavenly and the earthly meet,
The heart of Christ and ours!

—John G. Whittier.

Easter Bells

BY MRS. M. E. LITTELL

Sweet, joyous bells of Easter time,
Glad hearts respond unto your chime.
"The Lord is risen," is risen today,
And now all gloom has passed away,
And fear no more hath power to shake
The souls of men, who would forsake
Their sinful ways; for lo! the door
Of Hope is open evermore.
Bring fragrant lilies, pure and white,
Sing heartfelt anthems of delight.
Life's sweetest offerings let us share,
Our love for Jesus to declare.

—In Herald and Presbyterian.

Creston, Ohio.

Praises Ringing

Praises ringing on the air
Tell of gladness everywhere;
This the news from mount and cave,
Christ arose the world to save.

Through all ages ring and sing
Praises to the risen King;
Tell the joyous tidings 'round,
With the King shall we be crowned.

When the dead in Christ arise,
We shall meet Him in the skies;
There to praise, eternally,
Christ, who rose for you and me.

—Ex.

He is Risen

That Jesus lived, that Jesus died,
The ancient stories tell;
With words of wisdom, love and truth,
That He could speak so well;
And all so great His work for man
I hail Him, brave and free,
The highest of heroic souls
Who lived and died for me.

That Jesus rose, that Jesus reigns,
The hearts that love Him know;
They feel Him guide and strengthen them,
As on through life they go.
Rejoicing in His leadership,
The heavenward way I see,
And shall not stray if I can say
He rose and reigns in me.

—A. Irvine Innes in Canadian Friend.

Some Lessons from Easter-tide

BY JOHN R. CARY

As the successive Easters come and pass, we are conscious that a great change has taken place in the relations of life and death since that first Lord's day when the little company, scattered by the apparent triumph of hatred and death, became conscious even dimly that love and life were the final victors. And it is not so much because death has grown more familiar and less important, but rather that life has steadily grown in meaning and value, dwarfing death. Dimly seen by the few and groped after by the most earnest souls before Christ brought life and immortality to light, life has come to mean so much and to be such a wondrous thing to those who have received Him, that death has fallen into its proper place and become as the death of nature in winter, simply a preparation for the new life that the approaching sun is going to reveal, not new in kind, but newly revealed.

And we see love and life slowly conquering hate and death. We have not seen wars cease, but we have seen the change from glory in warfare to universal recognition that war is to be regretted and demands explanation and apology. We have not yet seen greed and selfishness cast out of all men, but we have reached the point where all men hate selfishness—in others. But best of all, the grandeur of living, the joy and glory of a surrendered life, the apprehension that man only begins to live here, and that he can make his life big and rich and full only by the development of those characteristics which carry it through the winter of death into the new life in the eternal springtime,—these are the things which are more and more swaying the thoughts of men. Each successive Easter sees men more and more filled with The Life. As we learn each year more of the secrets of nature so each successive Easter, as we think anew of the power over death revealed in the empty tomb, we understand more and more of the wondrous love which came to the cross and the tomb; and the power of that life which could not be held in the sepulchre more and more appeals to us and draws us to itself.

And the fresh courage for the fight that comes with Easter! We look around us and see sin and suffering: we seem not to be making much progress and men's hearts are frozen and dead. We cannot see below the surface that life is still there and only needs the sun and showers, but Easter comes round and the springing life tells us that God is working and that fruit comes from our working with Him. If we could only learn that love is the sunshine that melts frozen hearts; that warmth and not sledge-hammers will take the frost out of the ground! As we grow toward the Sun we find more and more that love and life are different words for the same thing.

Baltimore, Maryland.

The Resurrection and Its Message

The Message of Easter

Jesus was dead! That was the grievous news of Friday noon. There was no doubt about it. It was Bad Friday for the disciples; but Good Friday for the world. Toward sunset two men appeared—aristocrats at that—Joseph of Arimathæa and Nicodemus of Jerusalem. Richly laden, too, they were carrying as they did a huge parcel of precious gums and spices and matchless linen with which to enwrap the beloved dead. They were but men however, and wholly unused to the niceties and delicate character of the work. In the morning came some women to do it over and to do it well. It was very early. Love is never sleepy when love is anxious. They too, brought loving ministries—linen and gums and spices. They were anxious, however. The mouth of the tomb was sealed; how with their weak fingers could they ever open it? But God in whom they trusted, had been there before them. "They saw that the stone was already rolled back." Into the tomb they went, nor ever for a moment thought of defilement. To their astonished eyes, the form of a lad in bright raiment appeared. They were terrified. Upon the silence of the tomb came the music of the reassuring words, "Be not afraid! You are looking for Jesus. He is not here; he is risen. Here is where they laid him. Now go and tell his disciples and Peter that he goes before them into Galilee; and that there they and you shall see him, as he told you." This they did in great agitation of heart and mind, not daring to hope that such good news could be true.

There are those who discredit the bodily resurrection of Jesus. And still the undisputable and irresistible witnesses to it are the Christian Lord's Day, the Christian festival of Easter, and the Christian Church. For all of these go back to the great fact of that first Easter Sunday, the fact of the bodily resurrection of Jesus. The history of the early Church has no explanation apart from it. The disciples not only believed it, they preached it. If Christ be not risen from the dead, says Paul, our preaching is vain and your faith is also vain; ye are yet in your sins. The book of Acts cannot be intelligibly interpreted if Jesus did not rise from the dead. The addresses of the apostles to various communities which constitute the most important part of that book would be utterly meaningless apart from the resurrection which is their central teaching. The issue is not an issue of the place of the resurrection in the faith of the disciple; it is an issue of the place of the resurrection as a fact in history and in the faith of the Church. The world has never been the same since the first Easter Sunday. Given the resurrection the change is intelligible; deny the resurrection and you have a wonder transcending the resurrection and much harder to believe.

Go tell the disciples and Peter. Why Peter? If as many believe, this particular gospel was written by Mark at the dictation of Peter, the chronicling of this detail has special significance. Peter loved the Master. But Peter denied him. Peter went out and wept bitterly, but up to this time he had had only tears for his portion. Now his comfort had come. The risen Lord was still a loving Lord and a forgiving Lord. And Peter! No other words were ever more richly freighted with consolation and comfort for the human heart. His Lord though dead, had not forgotten him. His Lord alive again, had forgiven him. Happy Easter for Peter. Glorious Easter for us all. If Jesus can remember Peter's denial of him and forgive, such heart of love is assurance that for every contrite heart is forgiveness and peace. And that is the message of Easter.—N. W. Christian Advocate.

The Glory and Joy of Easter

August and joyful is the fact of Christ's resurrection from the dead. It sets the divine seal on his royal claim to be the Son of God and the Savior of men. He not only willingly laid down his life as a sacrifice for sin, but he took it up again in assertion of his power to conquer death, to dictate to all the realms of darkness, and to save forever all who will believe. It is a majestic and magnificent fact in itself and, because it so intimately concerns our spiritual and eternal welfare, it is calculated to fill our hearts with joy. It does rejoice us. We have a right to shout aloud for joy as we gaze into the empty tomb, and as we gaze upward into the heaven to which he has gone, his home and our home, forever.

The fact of Christ's resurrection is entirely apart from the joyousness and beauty of the opening of the Spring. Some people seem to think that Easter is a celebration of the opening of bud and blossom. So far as the great and glorious fact of our redemption is concerned, Christ might have arisen from the sepulcher in mid-winter, and we should have rejoiced over it through time and eternity, just the same. The condition of the season's progress is so utterly trivial, as compared with the infinitely important matter of our salvation through the merits of the dying and risen Redeemer, that it is scarcely a circumstance to be considered. * * *

Thank God for all that is beautiful in the material world, but let our attention be so engaged and our thought be so enthralled by the supreme truth of Christ's resurrection as our Savior that we shall be filled with reverential love and worship. In the great meaning of the word and truth each Sabbath is an Easter day to the Christian. Each Sabbath is the recurrence of the day on which Christ conquered the enemy of our souls. Not only did he rise from the grave and from the world of the dead, but he led captivity captive, and as a gift to men brings us eternal life and glorified immortality. If we accept his Saviorhood, we also rise from the dead. Through him our sin and guilt are conquered. Through him we have eternal life.—Herald and Presbyter.

Risen Together With Christ

The approaching Easter season will recall the greatest outstanding event in the history of mankind. The fact of the resurrection of Jesus Christ is so well established that we accept it without the least hesitation as a basis of belief in His deity. The "Son of God with power according to the Spirit of holiness" having this crowning seal affixed to His claim of equality with God, lays claim to our faith in Him as the deliverer from the power of sin and the great transformer of heart and life. This is the keynote of New Testament teaching. Jesus lives, the Redeemer, the Head of the Church. As, lifted from the earth in crucifixion, He draws all men to Himself, so also He does this when risen from the earth in resurrection.

Associated with this great truth is another of vital interest to us that all who believe in Jesus and identify themselves with His death are also raised with Him to walk in newness of life. Rising implies a new height above the old depth. The consciousness that one has risen above the old entanglements and hindrances and is free to move on the wings of the Spirit is most exhilarating and satisfying. In proportion as our sense of companionship with Christ is full and joyful, will the delight in the thought of being risen with Christ be complete. He who said "I am the resurrection and the life," said also, that "whosoever liveth and believeth in me shall never die." This resurrection centers in Christ and depends upon His power and will. Because He lives, we live also, when we trust Him with our life to remake and keep it pure, strong and inviolable.

But this requires our co-operation. "If then ye were raised together with Christ," says the apostle, "seek the things that are above," "set your mind on the things that are above, not on the things that are upon the earth." How this exceeding weight of privilege presses upon us with resistless force. An eagerness for the things that abide, with fixed thoughts upon them facilitate the work of the Spirit in our hearts. Reading and meditating upon the truths of Scripture deepen this interest. The joy of obedience to the will of the Master further intensifies the longing for that which is noble and sublime. A right understanding of earthly things in their relation to the heavenly will enable us to put first things first and know the joys of the risen life.

We are conscious of this new power in an elevation of thought. The vile and the vicious cannot for a moment be considered. Any degrading tendency is readily detected and speedily corrected. The exaltation of Christ and His work, ministering to the fallen and the indigent in His name, loftier ideals of life and purpose drawing towards the goal of human possibilities in Christ—these displace and lift us above the old thoughts of time and sense sadly distorted by selfishness and sin.

We note also, an increase in affection for a royal worth that calls for loyal devotion. Risen with Christ we are free to worship. The heart is enlarged, and having found its true objective, can love with intensity and solemnity. Identified with Him in His love for others we love them "with a pure heart fervently." To love as He loves means more and more to us with the passing of time and the growth of experience and the aggressively unifying force of the living Christ binding together all the graces into one whole makes thus the Christian character complete.

Again, the buoyancy of hope makes easy the advance to a higher level of life. In striving for the best things heaven has to bestow, and man to achieve, the power which brought Christ again from the dead working in us mightily, brings us nearer to being where and what the risen, exalted Christ is. A hope sustaining us in trials, animating us in duty, and leading us to persevere in keeping His commandments and to do those things that are pleasing in His sight, lifts steadily heavenward towards its consummation, for "No hope He prompts shall vainly plead." Risen with Christ to a new, a good, a glorious hope soon to be reality, we hail with joy the day in which so many will commemorate the wonderful manifestation of divine power which produces in all who believe in Him, noble thoughts, pure love, blessed hope, and life, perfect and eternal. "Our Lord's resurrection warrants us in living for Him as the supreme object in life, and this rescues us from the misery of an aimless existence."—The Canadian Friend.

The Laborer's Friend

"Behold, I stand at the door and knock." It is the voice of Jesus, the carpenter of Nazareth, the maker of worlds, the Son of Man, the Son of God. At the door of the shop, the factory, the mill, the store, the office, the bank, the barn, the mine, the field, the school, the study, the kitchen, the nursery, stands Jesus, the laborer's friend, the burden bearer, and his voice calls unceasingly, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

To follow this Divine-human "Labor Leader" in all the toils and trials and perplexities of this work-day world; to make common cause with Him for righteousness and truth, and to cast upon Him the intolerable burdens of life—this would go far to meet many of the most distressing situations in the sphere of labor. When all else fails, he is "the never-failing Jesus."—The Evangelical.

The best medicine for our own sorrows is the effort to heal the sorrows of some one else. However heavy our personal trials may be, we shall forget our quarrel with life and with God if we will give ourselves steadily to the endeavor to make life brighter and fuller of comfort and blessing to others.—Philip Moxom.

The David Livingstone Centenary

Born March 19, 1813—Died May, 1, 1873.

March 19. My birthday. My Jesus, my King, my Life, my all! I again dedicate my whole self to Thee. Accept me. And grant, O Gracious Father, that ere this year is gone I may finish my work. In Jesus' name I ask it. Amen.—LIVINGSTONE'S FIFTY-NINTH BIRTHDAY WISH.

Inscription over the grave of Livingstone in Westminster Abbey:

Brought by Faithful Hands
Over Land and Sea,
Here Rests

DAVID LIVINGSTONE,

Missionary, Traveller, Philanthropist.

Born March 19th, 1813, at Blantyre, Lanarkshire;

Died May 1st, 1873, at Chitambo's Village, Ilala.

For Thirty Years

His Life was Spent in an Unwearied Effort

To Evangelize the Native Races

To Explore the Undiscovered Secrets,

And Abolish the Desolated Slave Trade of Central Africa,

Where, with His Last Words He Wrote:

"All I can say in my solitude is,

May Heaven's rich blessings

Come down on every one—

American, English, Turk—

Who will help to heal this open

Sore of the world."

A TRIBUTE

Open the Abbey doors and bear him in

To sleep with king and statesman, chief and sage,

The missionary come of weaver-kin,

But great by work that brooks no lower wage.

He needs no epitaph to guard a name

Which men shall prize while worthy work is known;

He lived and died for good—be that his fame:

Let marble crumble; this is Living-stone. —Punch.

The following is taken from "The Pageant of Darkness and Light," as exhibited in New York and Baltimore, and to be exhibited in Chicago this Spring:

DAVID LIVINGSTONE

To lift the sombre fringes of the night,
To open lands long darkened to the light,
To heal grim wounds, to give the blind new sight,
Right mightily wrought he.

Like Him he served, he walked life's troublous ways,
With heart undaunted, and with calm high face;
And gemmed each day with deeds of sweetest grace,
Full lovingly wrought he.

Like Him he served, he would not turn aside,
Nor home nor friends could his true heart divide;
He served his Master and naught else beside,
Right faithfully wrought he.

He passed like light across the darkened land,
And dying left behind him this command,

"The door is open! So let it ever stand!"

Full mightily wrought he.

Forth to the fight he fared,

High things and great he dared,

In his Master's might to spread the light,

Right mightily wrought he.

He greatly loved—

He greatly lived—

And died right mightily.

HIS EARLY LIFE

David Livingstone, missionary, traveler, philanthropist, was born March 19, 1813, at Blantyre, Lanarkshire, Scotland. His parents were poor, but pious. He always spoke of the poor working people as "my own order." "It is hard," said he, "to be rich in temporal goods and in eternal virtues."

The family had a pedigree and a history as much as any ducal chieftain of any of the Highland clans from which they sprang—"rich in holy and heroic character." The home was ruled by an industry that made the most of the six days, and welcomed and honored the seventh.

Livingstone's religious life was not one of spasmodic effort. The dying advice of an aged Sunday-school teacher, "to make religion the every-day business of his life," was closely adhered to.

At the age of ten he began work in the cotton-spinner's mill at Blantyre. Here he received the Spartan training which proved so helpful in later life. He attended an evening school, studying until twelve o'clock, making it necessary for his mother to interfere, solicitous of her son's welfare. He, however, acquired much knowledge valuable to him in after years.

Through these early years a great longing remained unsatisfied. The sense of sin and evil came over him powerfully. Not until his twentieth year did the light come which kindled his whole life. "The change," he wrote, "was like what may be supposed would take place were it possible to cure a case of color-blindness."

In the glow of love which Christianity inspires he resolved to devote his life to the alleviation of human suffering and misery. At the age of twenty-three he spoke to his parents and pastor of his desire to become a missionary. He had set his heart on China, but God directed him to another part of the field.

Four years passed before he entered upon his career. Of two of these the winters were spent in study in the University at Glasgow, and the summers in working at the loom. The other two were spent in and near London, in direct preparation for missionary work. To the study of theology he added that of medicine. He also learned how to use the turning-lathe and other tools. Every bit of his knowledge came into use afterwards in the canal and road making, house building, and medical practice of his missionary life.—By Frieda Wittlig in Lutheran Observer.

HIS RELIGIOUS LIFE

Scott gave the world many books and laid humanity under lasting obligation for his clean, wholesome stories. But Neil Livingstone would not allow his David to read the novels that Sir Walter wrote, especially those which treated of the Covenanters. Though he read science and theology, David Livingstone was, as the sculptor has portrayed him, the man of one Book. As a lad of nine he recited the 176 verses of the 119th Psalm with only five "hitches." When he left Scotland for Africa he read, with the family, Psalms 125 and 131. He read the Bible through four times while he was in Manyema. Always he read with power. Hesitating once about an advance in the face of seeming impossibilities he read the words of the Master, "Go," and "I am with you." "It is the word of a Gentleman of the most sacred and strictest honor and there is an end on't," and the soldier went forward. An African chief, Sekomi, came to the white man and said: "I wish you would change my heart. Give me medicine to change it, for it is proud and angry always." Livingstone took up a Bible to hand him as the only medicine or magic which could change hearts. If Peter Parker opened China at the point of a lancet, David Livingstone made the great "Forward" movement into Africa in the power and spirit of that Book.—By T. C. Richards in The Congregationalist and Christian World.

HIS LAST DAYS

In David Livingstone's camp on the southern shores of Lake Bangweolo his men were talking in low tones. "Master is too ill to travel today," said Susi. "He has taken medicine from his chest for many days, but he grows weaker." "It is the rain," said Chumah. "Every day we must travel through the rain and wade the marshes." "Master says if the sun would shine and we were on high ground, he would get well again." "Let us make a bed for him which we can fasten to a pole and bear on our shoulders. We will carry him until he is strong again." "Good," said the other men, and quickly they fastened his stretcher by stout ropes to a long pole and made a swinging bed. When it was finished they came to Livingstone's hut and, showing him what they had made, said: "Master, let us carry you until you are strong again." "Good Susi, good Chumah," said Livingstone. "May God, our Father, reward you." "He has rewarded us in giving us our Master," said they. Tenderly they lifted their sick leader and placed the pole on their shoulders; and the large company, who had now broken camp, started on their day's march.

After an hour or two of travel, with the constant splash, splash of mud and water, which filled the paths and covered the country about, they reached a strip of higher ground. "Let us rest a little here," said Livingstone. "I want to see where we are." "Will Master have something to eat now?" asked Susi, as he came to Livingstone's side with a bowl of food. "I cannot eat any of it," was the reply. "But Master has not eaten any food today and little for many days," said Susi, distressed. "If we only could reach a village where there were herds and could get milk!" sighed Livingstone. "Alas, Master, alas, the slave raiders have left neither villages nor herds in this country." "Yes, yes, I know," said the master wearily, and he lay down again to rest. All that day they marched, fording streams, where they carried the master on their shoulders, through marshes, and across great rivers. Many times they passed the ruins of a village where the slave raiders had done their awful work of burning, stealing, and capturing the people for slaves, leaving only a desolate country behind. At night they camped on a hillside overlooking the lake. They quickly built a little hut for the master and a fire in front of it, so he could rest comfortably there. The men resolved that night in their counsel to go to Chitambo's village, for their eyes told them that their master could not be with them much longer, but their hearts refused to believe it. Four long days they marched steadily through the rain. At last they came to the village where Chitambo was chief. * * *

The next morning Chief Chitambo called at the hut where his guest, the white master, lay sick. It was with difficulty that Livingstone could raise his head, but he bowed to the chief, who said: "The white master is very sick. What does Chitambo or his men have that would help the white chief to get strong again?" "Chitambo is very kind," was the faint reply. "Rest and food, which my men are giving me, are all I need now. Will Chitambo come again tomorrow, when I am stronger and can talk with him?" "Yes, yes," said the chief, but he looked long and tenderly at the thin, pale face before he passed out.

That night Majwara slept at the door of the hut. Late in the night he awakened and after looking in the hut ran to Susi and said, "Come quickly to Master." Susi with four others hurried to the hut, and there by the dim light of the candle, they saw their master kneeling by the side of his bed. They were frightened, for they knew he was very weak, but they waited reverently while he prayed. Presently they slipped in and found that their master had offered his last prayer and his spirit had gone home to his Father.—By Susan Mendenhall in North-Western Christian Advocate.

AN ESTIMATE OF HIS WORK

We shall miss the real lesson of Livingstone's life if we fasten our attention upon the adventurous side of it and forget the purpose that runs through it like a thread of gold. For Livingstone's faith was fed at sources which are open to every one of us. He was a student of the Book from the days in his cottage home in Scotland to the last hours of weakness in the swamps of Africa. The Bible to him was a living book, the message, through the teaching of the Holy Spirit, of his Heavenly Father for daily help and encouragement and instruction. His purpose was the purpose that must possess the church today if it is to do Christ's work in the world where it is set.—The Congregationalist.

Declaration of Faith on the Resurrection

Apropos of Easter time, it is well to call attention to the words of the Richmond Declaration of Faith, in the chapter on "The Resurrection and Final Judgment," which is as follows:

"We believe, according to the Scriptures, that there shall be a resurrection from the dead, both of the just and of the unjust (Acts XXIV: 15), and that God hath appointed a day in which He will judge the world in righteousness, by Jesus Christ whom He hath ordained (Acts XVII: 31). For, saith the Apostle, 'We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad' (II. Cor. V: 10).

"We sincerely believe, not only a resurrection in Christ from the fallen and sinful state here, but a rising and ascending into glory with Him hereafter; that when He at last appears we may appear with Him in glory. But that all the wicked, who live in rebellion against the light of grace, and die finally impenitent, shall come forth to the resurrection of condemnation. And that the soul of every man and woman shall be reserved, in its own distinct and proper being, and shall have its proper body as God is pleased to give it. It is sown a natural body; it is raised a spiritual body (I. Cor. XV: 44); that being first which is natural, and afterwards that which is spiritual. And though it is said, 'This corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality' (I. Cor. XV: 53), the change shall be such as will accord with the declaration, 'Flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God, neither doth corruption inherit incorruption' (I. Cor. XV: 50). We shall be raised out of all corruption and corruptibility, out of all mortality, and shall be the children of God, being the children of resurrection (Luke XX: 36). (See also Declaration of 1693, Sewell's History, Vol. II, 383-384.)

"Our citizenship is in heaven' (R. V.), from whence also we look for the Savior the Lord Jesus Christ, who shall change our vile body that it may be fashioned like unto His glorious body, according to the working whereby He is able even to subdue all things unto Himself (Phil. III: 20, 21).

"We believe that the punishment of the wicked and the blessedness of the righteous shall be everlasting, according to the declaration of our compassionate Redeemer, to whom the judgment is committed, 'These shall go away into eternal punishment, but the righteous into eternal life (R. V.) Matt. XXV: 46)."

The light that streams from Him is all-pervading in our lives. It gives another and a higher meaning to every labor and duty; it breaks like sunlight upon every dark night of life and makes sudden morning.—J. C. Greenough.

One of the crying needs of society is the revival of gentleness and of a refined considerateness in judging others.—Newell D. Hillis.

Livingstone

BY T. R. WOODARD

In England's famous Abbey,
Where honored names are shown,
There rests no grander hero
Than David Livingstone.

He heard the wireless message
And answered, "Here am I,"
When Africa to Europe sent
The Macedonian cry.

No army followed where he led,
No battle sounds were heard;
A soldier of the Cross, he bore
His sword, God's Holy Word.

Not cannon balls but cannibals,
The danger he must face;
To conquer savages and sin
By power of God's free grace.

In jungles of the heathen mind
Where tangled error grows,
He cleared a field where Christian truth
May blossom as the rose.

His zeal a fire Time could not quench,
Nor perils daunt his will;
Where need was greatest there he strove
God's purpose to fulfill.

With faith that could the mountains move
He counted not the price,
But gave himself to Africa
A living sacrifice.

Now o'er that vast "Dark Continent,"
An Easter dawn appears,
Where Livingstone—a living light
Shone bright for thirty years.

O royal soul! O loyal heart!
What hardships he withstood
To give world-meaning to the thought
Of human brotherhood.

Knightstown, Indiana.

A Believer in Prayer

Dr. Sun Yat Sen, the first President of the new Republic, and who has become widely known as the "George Washington of the Republic in China," is a great believer in prayer. Of his darkest hour, while a prisoner in the Chinese legation in London, he says: "My despair was complete, and only in prayer could I gain any comfort. I shall never forget the feeling that seemed to take possession of me as I rose from my knees on the morning of Friday, October 16, 1897, a feeling of calmness, hopefulness, and confidence that assured me my prayer was heard, and filled me with hope that all would be well."

Don't live your life alone, without forming friendship and love; poor nature needs love, you were made for it, and other natures need you. You are robbing yourself, you are robbing others, if you live like a hermit. Therefore go out into God's world, and live your life for others.—Great Thoughts.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

California Yearly Meeting

C. M. Hobbs, wife and daughter, who have been spending the winter in southern California, mostly at Whittier, have returned to their home in Plainfield, Indiana. On the evening of March 3, the Men's Bible Class, of which President Thomas Newlin is teacher, and in which class C. M. Hobbs had identified himself while in Whittier, held a social and business meeting in his honor. Richard R. Newby was an invited guest. Short addresses were made by C. M. Hobbs and Richard R. Newby. This class has been organized only a few months, yet has already reached several men who have been lost to the Sabbath School for many years.

Whittier Quarterly Meeting was held at Whittier, California, February 15, with probably the largest attendance in its history at a business session. Arthur and Eliza Dann, of England, were present and took a leading part in the ministry to the edification of the congregation. In response to a request for a Monthly Meeting to be organized at Ontario, 40 miles east of Whittier, a business meeting was directed to be established there, under the care of the executive committee of the Evangelistic Board of the Yearly Meeting, this action seeming preferable in this particular case to the establishment of a Monthly Meeting. This request grew out of a work that for several years has been conducted among the Japanese, who are employed in large numbers in the orchards of Ontario, and many of whom joined in the request with a view to becoming members of the new meeting.

The men and women who were active in helping the slaves both before and after the Civil War are fast passing away. In another column is the notice of the death of one of these, Mary Elizabeth McCowen. She went with her parents in 1845 to Salem, Ohio, where she afterward became quite well known as a teacher. Later she taught in Avery College, Pennsylvania; Earlham College, Indiana; and Bloomingdale Academy, Indiana. Her work in all these places was marked with energy, cheerfulness, and a power to inspire her pupils to earnest and noble effort. During her stay in Salem, she organized and conducted evening schools for the colored people. During the Civil War she was engaged for some time in teaching the "contrabands," as the freed slaves were then called, in Louisiana and Mississippi. After a few years she returned to her parents, who had then removed to Muscatine, Iowa. Here, in 1867, she married Dr. George McCowen, who had been a pupil of hers in Bloomingdale Academy. They went to California, where they have since resided, making their home for the past forty years in Ukiah. As there were no Friends in the place, she united with the Baptist Church, of which she was a valued member.

Richard R. Newby, of Union Springs, New York, attended Whittier Quarterly Meeting the middle of February, and afterwards conducted a series of meetings with two sessions a day for two weeks, in which the pastor, H. Edwin McGraw, and President Thomas Newlin of Whittier College, co-operated. The ministry was most helpful and illuminating, and will doubtless have a far-reaching effect in directing the activities of the meeting. A wholesome and harmonizing tendency was evident throughout the meetings. Many were brought to a definite consecration to God's service. Especially was this true in the large Bible School, where the last day of the meetings was made "Decision Day," and where the importance of choosing for Christ and a life enlistment in His service was lovingly pressed home by teachers and superintendents with most gratifying results. A most interesting feature of the work was the holding of a monthly session of the Men's League, a brotherhood of Whittier Meeting, at which 200 men sat down to a bountiful supper in the dining room, following which Brother Newby gave a brief and forceful talk on "What the Church Owes to the Community." The League then attended the meeting in the auditorium in a body, and supplied a men's chorus for the evening. Richard Newby went from Whittier to Long Beach to hold meetings, expecting later to engage in evangelistic work at Pasadena.

Canada Yearly Meeting

The following items are taken from The Canadian Friend:

"Friends in Canada have contributed $122.75 to the Balkan-Turko War Victims Fund, now being raised by the Friends of London Yearly Meeting."

"The Women's Missionary Society at Chain Lakes, Hartney, held a profitable social on the evening of January 14. An interesting program, consisting of songs, readings and recitations, occupied about an hour and a half. A missionary offering of $11.50 was taken."

"Alfred Young conducted a helpful series of meetings at Uxbridge, January 19 to 26. On two evenings, Bible readings on 'God's Promises' were given, together with the testimonies of their fulfillment. As a result of the meetings quite a number of young people took a decided stand for Christ."

"At Newmarket Quarterly Meeting, held in February, the question of the time of holding Yearly Meeting was again considered and the weight of the argument strongly favored no change."

Indiana Yearly Meeting

The Friends Meeting at Parker, Indiana, is now in the midst of what promises to be a great revival, held by Wallace Johnson of Ohio.

Since their revival, held in the early winter, the meeting at Bear Creek, Indiana, is settling down to real service and is hoping for a good year.

West Milton (Ohio) Meeting reports the work to be in excellent condition. The pastor, J. L. Kittrell, and wife, are helping to organize and strengthen the church in all lines of work. A large choir of consecrated singers adds much to the interest of the meeting. Twenty-eight new members have been received as the result of a revival during February. There is a marked degree of growth and interest, both in attendance and spiritual power in all the departments of the meeting.

The Friends Meeting at Anderson, Indiana, under the pastoral care of Charles E. Thornburgh and wife, is uniting with others in a revival effort. The meetings are being held in a tabernacle prepared for the occasion, with French E. Oliver in charge as the evangelist. At the Friends meeting house, on the evening of February 27, Henry C. Fellow, of Kansas, read some of his poems and delivered his lecture on "The Constructive and Destructive Forces of Civilization."

A series of meetings lasting two weeks closed at Cedar Meeting, near Farmland, Indiana, March 7. The services were in charge of John M. Binford, of Carthage, assisted by John Hardwick, the pastor. The gospel was preached in its purity with demonstration of the Spirit and with power. The ministers preached the doctrine of the baptism of the Holy Spirit and the people received it. As a result of their earnest efforts more than thirty souls were definitely blessed, some converted, some reclaimed and others sanctified. The influence of the meetings was felt for miles around, on account of the presence and power of God, which was manifest from the first. The church was built up and strengthened.

Marion Quarterly Meeting was held at Marion, Indiana, in the First Friends Church, March 7-9. Morton C. Pearson, of Indianapolis, was present and gave three helpful and inspiring messages. There was a note of praise through all the sessions, as a result of the local option city election held a few days before. Being a city of about 20,000 inhabitants, it was a question whether Marion alone, without help from the country districts, could win the battle; but after a vigorous campaign by both pulpit and press, mass meetings and much prayer, the election was held, and when the votes were counted, church bells ringing all over the city proclaimed the result to be a great victory for the temperance forces. The dry majority was 123.

Spiceland Friends have completed the remodeling of their church building, which is now very convenient and comfortable. They raised the floor in the auditorium, erected a balcony that will seat a goodly number, arranged fourteen class rooms for the Sabbath School and have a basement with a good heating plant. The acoustic properties of the building are very much improved. The building committee reported the work done at a cost of $4,300. On the Sabbath of Quarterly Meeting, March 9, at 10:30 o'clock, the rededication service was held, conducted by the pastor, George C. Levering, who preached an excellent sermon from 1 Samuel x: 26. A large and appreciative audience was present.

A series of meetings continuing for two weeks, has just closed at Laura, Ohio (Lick Branch Meeting in West Branch Quarter). The meetings were conducted by the pastor, Elwood S. Hinshaw. His messages were very clear and strong, edifying believers and bringing conviction to the unsaved. The young people of the community were especially touched, resulting in thirteen conversions and renewals. As a church we feel that all have been strengthened and encouraged. Forty have already requested membership at our next monthly meeting.

Evangelistic meetings held at Farm-land, Indiana, by the pastor, M. S. Hinckle, resulted in a great spiritual uplift, not only to the members of the meeting, but other denominations as well. Many were reclaimed, and others brought into closer relation and walk with God, for which He is given the glory. A great interest was manifested by those outside the church as shown by the large attendance and close attention given. While we hoped to see more saved, we have faith to believe that more will accept Christ before it is too late.

The Friends of Greenfield, Indiana, have added a much needed room to their church building at an expense of $863.84. The new room was dedicated free of debt on March 9, with appropriate exercises conducted by the pastor, Mary Miars Harold, and participated in by the Bible School. On the evening of March 10, the Quaker Round Table held their meeting in this room. The Round Table is reading and discussing "Christianity and the Social Crisis," by Rauschenbusch. At each meeting a sketch is given of some prominent Friend. These meetings have proved to be very profitable to both old and young. The president is a senior in the high school, who always leads out in the discussions on current topics. On February 28, Prof. Elbert Russell, by invitation, gave a lecture at the church, on "The Next Struggle for Liberty," which was largely attended and of great interest to all. On April 1, the Earlham Glee Club will come for an entertainment.

The revival meetings which were held at the Friends Memorial Church at Muncie, Indiana, with Daisy Douglas Barr, the pastor, as evangelist, closed March 9, with great success crowning the effort. The revival began February 18, with Church Awakening week. During this week the members were organized to make a systematic religious campaign. On Tuesday evening the organized class, "Friendly Helpers," gave a banquet. On Wednesday evening the C. E. Society gave a program with Dr. David Davies of the M. E. Church giving the address, his subject being, "What can the C. E. do for the Revival?" Thursday evening the Ladies' Aid Society were responsible for the program, at which time Rev. F. E. Smith of the Jackson Street Christian Church gave the address on "What can Women do for the Revival?" On Friday evening a supper for men was given, at which some of the men gave toasts, their subjects dealing with Men and the Revival. Dr. Waldo of the Baptist Church gave an address on "How to Promote a Revival." During the next two weeks powerful sermons were delivered at each service by Mrs.

Barr, which had a marvelous influence in causing people to have an intense desire to become followers of the Master. Edith Pearson of Ludlow Falls, Ohio, directed the music. Her beautiful Christian character exerted an influence which was very helpful. There were 45 requests for membership with Friends and all these gave evidence of their acceptance of Jesus Christ as their Savior. Three Sabbath afternoon mass meetings were held, two of which were for women. There was an attendance of 700 or 800 at each of these special services. A mass meeting was also held for men, which was largely attended and proved to be uplifting and helpful. Able addresses were given by Mrs. Barr at each of these mass meetings. Several weeks prior to the meetings, the pastor had devised every means that would help in creating a revival spirit in the hearts of the people. She wrote 100 letters to business men of the city, asking questions on "Christianity and Business." From these letters four addresses were given. This method stirred up a great interest, on the part of those receiving the letters, as well as those who heard the sermons.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

At a meeting of the Jamaica Field Committee held at Oskaloosa, Iowa, March 4, H. Alma Smift was elected superintendent of Friends Jamaica Mission work. She has recently completed the raising of $3,000.00 for a boys' dormitory at Sea Side.

A revival meeting of two weeks' duration was held recently at New Sharon, Iowa, conducted by J. T. Maloy, evangelist, of Albion, Iowa, assisted by the pastor, Edwin Loft. Fourteen were converted, renewed or received the blessing of sanctification. Two united with the church.

Des Moines Quarterly Meeting was held at Des Moines, Iowa, March 1-2. Owing to the inclement weather the attendance was small. Melinda B. Hunt of Iowa Falls and Dr. D. M. Edwards of Oskaloosa were the visiting ministers. Melinda B. Hunt preached good sermons, both on Saturday and on Sabbath.

The evening meeting of March 2, at Oskaloosa, Iowa, was given over to a Young Friends rally, in charge of members of the Senior Christian Endeavor Society. The distinctively Young Friends movements were discussed—the English Young Friends Movement, the Whittier Fellowship and the Winona Conferences. Following this, the opportunities and needs in the Bible School, Christian Endeavor and Mission Fields of our Church were presented. Altogether the evening was one of great interest and profit. The meeting was largely attended by young people of the college and community. We believe that in them a larger measure of interest in, and loyalty to, our church has been aroused.

Notice is given in another column of the death of one of the remarkable women of the Friends Church, Eliza J. Lindley. Her father, Samuel Hill, a Friend of much influence in the community, was one of the first trustees of New Garden School (now Guilford College), and Eliza Hill, with her brothers and sisters, attended the school, as did also Alfred Lindley, whom she married in 1850. At the outbreak of the Civil War they moved to Minneapolis with their growing family. They immediately connected themselves with the Friends Meeting already established there, and were always its devoted supporters. Their interest in Friends' education was shown by their generous contributions to Earlham, Penn and Guilford Colleges. Eliza Lindley was one of the earliest members of the Women's Christian Association of Minneapolis, and for forty years, until her death, was president of the board of directors of one of its branches, the Woman's Boarding Home. It was largely through her efforts that the first Home was established, and thirty years later she was equally helpful in building the larger and better equipped new Home. She was a woman of unusual breadth and strength of character, and was endeared to all with whom she lived and worked.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

Hesper Quarterly Meeting was held at Kansas City, Missouri, March 7-9. The meeting of ministry and oversight sent a recommendation to the Monthly Meetings that a neighborhood canvass be made of all families within reach of each of the meetings, to encourage them in religious work. On Sabbath morning John D. Mills, formerly pastor at Kansas City, now at Hesper, preached, with great profit to those present. In the afternoon the secretary of the local Railroad Y. M. C. A. gave an inspiring address on the Bible.

A fortnightly class in the study of Friends history is being conducted at Kansas City. A course of eight lessons has been outlined. The class is peculiarly representative in its membership, for in addition to Friends, progressive and conservative, are United Brethren, Methodists, Christian Scientists, and Presbyterians.

Wichita Quarterly Meeting was held at Rose Hill, Kansas, on February 28 and March 1 and 2. Aside from our home ministers, S. Adelbert Wood, a minister from New England Yearly Meeting, was in attendance. He remained the following week, holding meetings at night and a few day meetings. His teaching was practical and delivered in a loving, forceful manner to the edification of those who heard him.

S. Adelbert Wood, from New England Yearly Meeting, attended the Quarterly Meeting at Buffalo, Kansas. His line of teaching was of a type greatly needed throughout this section. He also held services at La Harpe, giving words of encouragement which were appreciated.

A revival meeting closed at Stafford, Kansas, on March 9, with very good success. About 35 were definitely blessed, and believers were strengthened. J. Arthur Wollam, of Emporia, was the evangelist in charge. He preached the gospel with power and demonstration. One man threw away his tobacco and pipe, and set up an altar of prayer in his home. Others will likely follow his example.

Nebraska Yearly Meeting

The new Friends Meeting House at Grant, Nebraska, was dedicated on February 23, John H. Hadley, of Central City, preaching the dedicatory sermon. This is one of the more recently established meetings in western Nebraska. The pastor, R. L. Cosand, has been working hard for the past year to raise the money needed for the new structure. During the past year services have had to be held in an old store building. A nice frame edifice has been erected at a cost of about $1,400.00, but only about one-half of this amount has been subscribed thus far, and that at a great sacrifice to the membership and others, owing to the almost complete failure of the crops during 1910 and 1911 and very light crops in 1912. Donations from Friends elsewhere will be thankfully received, all of which should be sent to R. H. Vance, Grant, Nebraska. E. G. McDaniel is conducting a revival in the new building and the members are praying for a great spiritual uplift in the community.

Oregon Yearly Meeting

A special series of evangelistic meetings has just closed at Newberg, Oregon, lasting for three weeks. The pastor of the meeting, Charles O. Whiteley, was the leader in the work, assisted by local ministers and other workers. The day meetings were held as union services with the Methodists, who were holding special meetings at the same time. About thirty professed definite blessings during the series, more than half of whom were students at Pacific College. The church experienced a decided awakening, and it was a time of great blessing from the Lord. At the Monthly Meeting immediately following the series of meetings, over a score were received into membership with Friends, and more are to follow.

The final steps have been taken by the Newberg (Oregon) Meeting for the recording as ministers of Edith Minchin of Dundee and Perry Macy of Springbrook. The former has been evangelistic superintendent of Newberg Quarterly Meeting of Friends for some time, while the latter is a graduate of Pacific College, and has since taken extensive work in Hartford Theological Seminary.

Philadelphia Yearly Meeting

A meeting of the Friends Educational Association of Philadelphia is planned for third month 22, 1913. Dr. E. M. Lyttle, of the New York State Board of Education, will give the address. Subject: "History—The Greatest and the Least." All interested Friends are invited. Meeting place: The Friends Select School, 140 N. 16th St., Philadelphia. Time: 2:30 p. m.

Western Yearly Meeting

Rush Creek Meeting closed a three weeks' series of meetings on February 23. They were conducted by the pastors, Martilla and Mary Cox. The gospel was preached to the edification and strengthening of believers and to the conviction of the unsaved. It is hoped that much good was done. As visible results, some twenty were definitely blessed, mostly young people and

Waking Up in the Spring; or, An Old Story Retold

BY LYRA D. TRUEBLOOD

Once there was a little flower that lay asleep in the brown earth. All winter long it had been sleeping there in its little house, warm and comfortable under a nice white blanket of fleecy snow. No one had disturbed it or tried to wake it up.

By and by one day the little flower dreamed that it heard some one knocking. But it was so sleepy that the patter of the rain drops was not loud enough to rouse it, and soon it was far away in slumber-land again. Then there came a louder knock on the brown walls of its bulb-house, and this time the flower began to feel so warm that it rubbed its eyes and said: "Come in and take off some of the covers. There are too many blankets on me." This time it was a sunbeam, and he replied: "I can't come in unless you open the door and let me in; I'll come again tomorrow." The flower was too drowsy to make any answer, and returned to its dreams once more.

At last there came a day when its bulb-covering grew so heavy that it could no longer bear the weight, and it yawned and stretched its arms and legs and pushed the covers right off. The next morning when Mary went out into the garden, she cried: "O mother, come see this tiny green thing poking its head out of the ground!" "Why yes, that is one of my daffodils coming up," said her mother. And in a few days the ground was covered with pale green leaves, seeking the sunshine and light and air. And very soon—so soon that we should call it a miracle, if we did not see the same thing happen every springtime,—out of what had been only a short time before dull dark earth, there stood straight and tall and beautiful in their green dresses and yellow

Easter bonnets, rows and rows of gay daffodils. They nodded their heads and whispered to each other; "We know what Easter day means. For we should have been cold and dead in the ground still, had not the Heavenly Father sent his raindrops and sunbeams and called us up from death into a beautiful life." Washington, D. C.

Mr. Easter Rabbitt

BY LYRA D. TRUEBLOOD

There is a pretty German legend of how colored eggs came to be used at Easter time. It is called the story of Herr Oster Hase or Mr. Easter Rabbitt.

Long ago and in a country very far away, there was one year a severe famine. There had been no rain, and the fields were all dried up, and the grain and vegetables and fruit could not grow. So the people had hard work to find enough to eat, and they could not give their children presents at Christmas or on their birthdays as they used to do.

Spring was approaching and with it Easter Sunday, which they always celebrated. The fathers and mothers were very sad because this was a special festival season, and they were so poor they could not think of a thing with which they could surprise the children. "To be sure we have plenty of eggs just now," they said, "because the hens are laying, but we have those every day."

One night there came a bright idea to one of the mothers, and she could hardly wait until morning to go and tell her neighbors. They all agreed that it was a splendid thing to do, and so they planned a grand surprise.

Easter Day came, and everybody went to the village church to the service, and after church the mothers said, "Let us take a walk in the woods before we go home." The children were pleased, and ran and frolicked among the trees. Suddenly one of them called out, "Oh, come quick and see what I've found." And that very moment another jumped up and down with delight, because he too, had discovered a nest full of eggs of every color, red and blue and yellow, mottled and striped. Before long nearly every child had found some of the bright eggs hidden under leaves at the foot of the trees. "What kind of eggs can they be?" they wondered. "They are too large for birds' eggs; they look about the size of hens' eggs, but no hen ever laid such pretty eggs as these."

Just then a rabbit leaped from behind a bush and disappeared among the trees. "See the rabbit!" cried the children. "Why, it must be the rabbit that laid the eggs." And they shouted in chorus: "Hurrah for the rabbit! Three cheers for Mr. Easter Rabbit—for Herr Oster Hase!"

And every Easter since that day, in the far-away land across the sea, and in many other lands too, the children hunt for eggs, and always they find some gay-colored eggs hidden in out-of-the-way places.

An Evening Prayer for Children

BY ANSON R. GRAVES

Lord send me sleep that I may live,
The wrongs I've done this day forgive;
Bless every deed and thought and word
I've rightly done, or said, or heard;
Bless relatives and friends away,
Teach all the world to watch and pray;
My thanks for all my blessings take,
And hear my prayer for Jesus' sake.
Amen.

IN A SHADOW

Inveterate Tea Drinker Feared Paralysis

Steady use of either tea or coffee often produces alarming symptoms as the poison (caffeine) contained in these beverages acts with more potency in some persons than in others.

"I was never a coffee drinker," writes an Ill. woman, "but a tea drinker. I was very nervous, had frequent spells of sick headache and heart trouble, and was subject at times to severe attacks of bilious colic.

"No end of sleepless nights—would have spells at night when my right side would get numb and tingle like a thousand needles were pricking my flesh. At times I could hardly put my tongue out of my mouth and my right eye and ear were affected.

"The doctors told me I was liable to become paralyzed at any time, so I was in constant dread. I took no end of medicine—all to no good.

"The doctors told me to quit using tea, but I thought I could not live without it—that it was my only stay. I had been a tea drinker for twenty-five years; was under the doctor's care for fifteen.

"About six months ago, I finally quit tea and commenced to drink Postum.

"I have never had one spell of sick headache since and only one light attack of bilious colic. Have quit having those numb spells at night, sleep well and my heart is getting stronger all the time." Name given upon request.

Postum now comes in concentrated, powder form, called Instant Postum. It is prepared by stirring a level teaspoonful in a cup of hot water, adding sugar to taste, and enough cream to bring the color to a golden brown.

Instant Postum is convenient; there's no waste; and the flavor is always uniform. Sold by grocers everywhere.

children. At the Monthly Meeting, held March 6, ten were received into membership.

An evangelistic effort of two weeks' duration, terminating March 2, 1913, has been held by the Friends of Westfield, Indiana. The ministry of George H. Moore, the pastor, who had the meetings in charge was, at all times clear, definite and spiritual. Clarence Cosand, a singing evangelist from Lupton, Michigan, rendered valuable assistance during the latter part of the meetings. This young Friend, while gifted in song, has the happy faculty of knowing just when and what to sing at the various stages of the services, so as best to harmonize with the exercises before the meeting. While the fruits of the services were manifest in several conversions, we believe by far the larger effect of the work done has been apparent in the deepening of the spiritual life, with the consequent unifying effect resulting therefrom, of the body of the membership. At a session of the Quarterly Meeting during which these services closed, a subscription was taken to augment the Evangelistic Fund of the Five Years Meeting, which resulted in the raising of $117.50 for this purpose.

At St. Petersburg, Florida

The Friends residing or wintering in St. Petersburg, Florida, had a very pleasant social meeting on the afternoon of March 8th, at the residence of J. Elwood Cox, who has a winter home there. Thirty-four persons were present and spent the time very pleasantly in making and renewing acquaintances. Hannah Lewis Smith presided and made a short, impressive talk. Others also made remarks. Everyone was requested to write his or her name and address and the name of the Yearly Meeting to which he belonged. As Mrs. Smith called the roll, the person designated arose. Indiana, Western, Wilmington and North Carolina Yearly Meetings were represented, and three Hicksite Friends were also present, belonging to Baltimore and Miami Yearly Meetings. Two Earlham and two Guilford College students were among the number present. It is of interest to know that about half of the thirty-four had ancestors who came from North Carolina.

As the pleasant occasion came to a close it was the general feeling that meetings of a similar character should be held again next winter. In fact, it is possible that sometime in the future steps may be taken toward establishing

Was at Bryn Mawr

It is not generally remembered perhaps, that President Woodrow Wilson ever had any connection with Bryn Mawr College. In response to an inquiry which reached the AMERICAN FRIEND office from a western state, we sought to ascertain the facts from M. Carey Thomas, president of Bryn Mawr. Under date of March 3rd, she sends us the following:

"Woodrow Wilson was called to Bryn Mawr as Associate in History when it opened in 1885, and was here for two years. He organized our department of history for us. This was when the late Dr. James E. Rhoads was president of Bryn Mawr College."

GOD'S LOVE AND WISDOM.

THY plans and purposes are, Lord, beyond our ken;
Thy providence oft leading us both where and when
We would not choose; sometimes thy wisdom leads
Through darksome labyrinths, remind-

By ways thus intricate thou teachest us thy will;
That we, our lives with service sweet,

Till in each life, shall more and more

Concerning The American Friend

A MESSAGE TO BE READ BY ALL FRIENDS

We need make no apology for devoting space to the interests of the AMERICAN FRIEND. As a publication owned and controlled by the Five Years Meeting, it seems reasonable that it has claims upon the patronage of Friends throughout America never possessed by any other publication.

While appreciating thoroughly the fact that in the last analysis the paper will stand or fall largely upon its own merits, this does not relieve Friends generally from the responsibility of bestowing a patronage sufficient to enable it to become a positive force in contributing to the up-building of all our denominational interests.

ALL SHOULD BE PATRONS

It is no idle assertion to say that the AMERICAN FRIEND ought to make weekly visitations to every Friends's family in America. In the first instance the paper needs the support, moral and financial, which this patronage will bring. It cannot exist without patronage. That is self evident and needs no elaboration.

In the second place, every Friend's family needs the AMERICAN FRIEND. By reason of its weekly messages, reflecting both the purposes and the activities of the church at large, no other agency contributes so much to the unification as well as the inspiration of our denomination.

The Church Boards, which now represent the organized activities of the Five Years Meeting, are entitled to have a channel through which to reach all our membership. This is not possible except through the publication of a periodical which will be read by our membership. A vision of enlarged opportunity came to the Five Years Meeting at Indianapolis last October. In no other way can the lessons of that occasion be brought home to our scattered membership so effectively as through a publication reaching into every home.

INCREASE TOO MEAGER

So far as is apparent, the AMERICAN FRIEND under the new arrangement has met with well nigh universal favor east, west, north, south. The management is thankful for the increased patronage, which has already developed. But we are forced to admit that the increase has been all too meager for the safety of the project.

With this issue, the new AMERICAN FRIEND has had an existence of three months. We start on the second quarter with about 500 new paying subscribers, or 504 to be exact. In addition, the subscription lists of two of our Yearly Meeting publications have been taken over, Western Work and the Central Friend, and the AMERICAN FRIEND is carrying out their subscription contracts, in the hope that about 300 families now receiving the AMERICAN FRIEND as a result of this arrangement will become permanent subscribers. The results thus far in this direction are not reassuring.

Within the quarter now closing, there have been upwards of 200 discontinuances for various reasons, or 218 to be exact, leaving a net increase of 286 new paid subscriptions for these past three months.

STATUS OF INCREASE

We submit herewith a report of new subscriptions and discontinuances, which will make an interesting study to those interested in the success of the AMERICAN FRIEND.

REACHING ONE IN FIVE

By a conservative estimate, the AMERICAN FRIEND is not reaching more than one in five of Friends families or parts of families. As a denominational publication this is a sorry showing, and Friends may well begin to inquire as to their responsibility in the matter. It is to enforce this responsibility that this article is written.

Steps are being taken at this office to acquire data as the basis of a careful and wide-spread canvass throughout the Church for new subscriptions, but comparatively little will be accomplished unless the burden of the undertaking rests heavily upon Friends generally.

These are some of the practical things which may be properly done to enlarge the subscription list speedily.

SOME PRACTICAL SUGGESTIONS

1. If everyone who is now a subscriber would take a few minutes of time within the next thirty days to secure an additional subscriber, our subscription list would be sufficiently enlarged to warrant the management in enlarging the paper, a change which is already so much needed. This is not an impossibility, and is one of the ways in which genuine appreciation of the periodical may be shown.

2. If in the next Quarterly Meeting, the next Monthly Meeting, and in a Sabbath morning service soon, a few minutes were devoted to presenting the claims of the AMERICAN FRIEND, and steps taken to

Seeking Christ With Sincerity

"With my whole heart have I sought thee."

Expediency is too often the rule of human conduct. Too many try to serve self while at the same time professing to serve God. Their affection and interest are divided. They have not learned the law, "Ye cannot serve God and mammon."

The Psalmist has set the standard for whole-hearted endeavor. There was sincerity and conviction back of his appeal to God. Without reservation, as one seeks for the most desirable treasure, he was finding his way to the Father.

How little of reality there is in many a Christian experience! Religion is more honored in the profession than in the possession. God seems afar off. Christ is more a typical figure of history than a living Presence who enriches life by His nearness and His personality. It is all due to the fact that men have not sought Jehovah with their whole heart. There has been reservation where there should have been dedication. Having professed religion they realize no change in their lives. Religion is experimental rather than realistic.

The need of the age is for sincerity in life, especially in religious life. We have too few of the best examples in Christian living. The line of demarkation between the Church and the world is too indistinct. Christ is "lifted up" in human life too little, with the result that all men are not drawn unto Him. Too few know the real joy of the unselfish, sacrificing, consecrated life of service for others.

"He that seeketh, findeth." There is no truer statement in all the Bible. But it must be a whole-hearted seeking. It means more than an aspiration, or a holy desire, or an impulse to be good. It involves persistency, sincerity, determination. It means an exercise of the will, a renouncement of sin and a full surrender to Christ. The sacrifice may seem great, but the compensation is adequate beyond all measure.

Beyond the Sky Line

The uncertainties in life are frequently our most beneficent providences, however much they may be disguised. For out of uncertainties springs hope, and hope is ever "an anchor to the soul, both sure and steadfast." By a wise economy the future is veiled from our vision, and the possibilities of our ambitious dreams, like a beckoning star, lead us on in anticipation of realities already idealized in the imagery of our thought.

Unheeding the possible failure which storms and drouth may threaten, the farmer toils laboriously through the seasons in expectancy of a bountiful harvest. Brushing aside the disappointments that are incident to the professions, the lawyer, the physician, the educator, the statesman halt not at any environment, but with hope press on to the achievement of their ambitions. Regardless of the mishaps which throng the pathway of life, tradesman and laborer, minister and reformer, missionary and philanthropist, youth and old age alike peer into the future with joyous anticipation and turn not back from difficulties which oppose themselves at every turn.

Beyond the sky line are possibilities that are worth the striving to attain. They are the goals of human endeavor; the embodiment of highest hopes; the culmination of ambitions; the realization of fondest expectancy. They are the vision which faith reveals and upon which hope and anticipation feed. What though they never be realized? No matter. For generally in a normal life, hope ends only when life ends, and life is prolonged in which faith and hope are the guiding stars of endeavor.

There is no sadder sight on earth than the abnormal life which is drifting without a rudder, drifting with no star of hope to guide. There are some such; ambition crushed; hope dead; expectations unrealized; simply existing, waiting for a hopeless end. They see not beyond the sky line. To them there is no region except that within the contracted horizon of their own vision, and that is cheerless and cold and well nigh lifeless.

Repulsive as is the picture, yet in the last analysis it will become the portion of all who try to live without the gospel, who come to the end of life and realize how futile human endeavor is, that has no element of hope in God. Humanity at its best is finite, and in the final reckoning its efforts will be futile that have not been inspired by faith in the Infinite Jehovah.

There are no certainties beyond the sky line to those upon whom Christ's presence has not shone, who have failed to harmonize their ambitions and aspirations with His eternal purposes. True, men are architects of their own fortunes. If they choose to build without faith in the Divine, they are building upon the sands, against which the storms and the floods will inevitably prevail. No human standard of conduct that ignores or repudiates the Divine rule will stand the test in any practical sense, either of man's own conscience or God's infinite judgment. If on the other hand, men choose to pattern after God's workmanship, how different the building! It is like the house upon the rock against which the elements contend in vain.

To the Christian the future is always bright with promise. No matter how joyous and satisfying the present, there are better things ahead. In the midst of difficulties and trials, faith peers beyond the sky line and revels in the foretaste of a larger life and a more bounteous service. The Christian life is an evolution. In it "we are changed into the same image from glory to glory." The injunction is to "go on unto perfection." Like the discovery of treasures which awaited the coming of the pioneers of the 40's to the region of the golden gate of the west, so are the realities of experience, enriched by the favor of the Father, which await the toiling, faithful sons of men, who by faith and an abiding trust in God, press on to their inheritance.

Quakerism in this country, as we believe, has caught a vision of possibilities beyond the sky line, which as yet are not visible except by the eye of faith, but which as we are obedient to the call of Jehovah, will ere long reveal themselves as opportunities in a larger sphere of religious endeavor. As a church, we are hearing the call to "go forward," and we dare not disobey. Just what the future will disclose, and into what particular form of activities we may be led, may not be determined with exactness, but as God's promises are true, we know that as we are faithful now, we will ultimately become "ruler over more," and thereby enter into the fuller joy of our Lord.

Bickerings and strife among good people do not commend to others the religion we profess. Sparring for position has no place in the activities of the Christian Church.

It requires as much bravery and of a higher order to combat the evils of earth, as it does to stand against the foe in warfare with carnal weapons.

The Suffrage Parade

All will not agree that the great parade at Washington City on March 3rd was a wise procedure, but all who believe in Christian courtesy to women and the "square deal" for everyone, will deplore and condemn the carelessness, if not the opposition, of the Washington police in permitting the throngs to crowd the line of march in almost brutal interference with the procession.

The Senate wisely decided to investigate, and it is possible that some men high in police authority in that city will lose their positions. Meanwhile, despite the shameful interference with the demonstration, the cause of woman suffrage has undoubtedly gained adherents by the deplorable occurrences. Certain of the law makers remarked the next day that, while they had not favored universal suffrage, if women could not be protected upon the public streets, the time had come to give them more power, and many men will look at it in the same light.

The Revival Season

In common practice, the so-called revival season is nearing an end, but the circumstances which make the winter more convenient for special times of religious endeavor are merely incidental. We do not doubt that the Holy Spirit is often grieved, and his work often handicapped, merely because our meetings generally are prone to wait until a certain season of the year for the manifestations of spiritual refreshing.

We are not objecting to special efforts at special times, but Christian believers should live so close to the heart of God that their special seasons of activity will be God's appointed times. Our purpose now is to emphasize the fact of Christ's presence at all times, in winter or in summer, in seed time or in harvest. How much it would mean to our church, to any church, if the revival spirit were realized throughout the year!

Too many men are trying to find substitutes for the Christian religion. While there may be different conceptions of it, there is only one way, and he who seeks to climb up by some other method is declared to be a thief and a robber.

If only our meetings that have grown discouraged would set about doing the little things that make for community betterment, they would soon find the inspiration, as well as the opportunity, for larger tasks.

With too many persons, salvation primarily is a matter of selfishness. "Saved to serve" is a motto that should be stamped upon every heart.

Religion is to be taught both by precept and example, and no less by the latter than the former.

American Friends and Their Problems

BY ISAAC SHARP

My recent visit to America is so fresh in memory and so full of happy reminiscence, that when asked to contribute some "impressions" I find it difficult to condense them into a few paragraphs.

Every place visited has left the remembrance of warmth and hospitality contrasting with our cold insularity. The average Englishman loses much human intercourse by the fear of "giving himself away" in more senses than one: the American gains by openness and frank expression of opinion. This directness of speech combined with the wise exercise of the time limit in Indiana and Kansas Yearly Meetings, as also in the Five Years Meeting, gave a crispness to the consideration of the subjects before them that is sometimes lacking with us. In the two Yearly Meetings, however, the time honored "Consideration of the State of the Society" did not assume the importance that it does in London Yearly Meeting where two sittings at least are usually devoted to it. It forms the basis of our General Epistle, the evolution of which through all its stages until its presentation at the final Yearly Meeting sitting, and subsequent passage through the Press Revision Committee, may be worth the careful study of American Friends.

In general interests in the welfare of mankind we are essentially one on both sides of the Atlantic, nor is this unity confined to those who are connected by the ties of official recognition through "correspondence." All bodies bearing the name of Friends in America betray their common origin in their care for the oppressed and downtrodden of whatever race or color—for the outcast suffering from his own sin and folly, or the tyranny of man. And herein lies, in part at least, the hope of closer rapprochement. The barriers which divide are matters of faith and doctrine, and also the diverse character of Meetings for Worship, of which more anon. In faith and doctrine, concentration on realities rather than labels, accentuation of concurrent rather than divergent lines of thought, may draw all but extremists of the several bodies closer together. There were at the Five Years Meeting representatives of different theological schools working in the greatest harmony. May not the expansive tolerance that made this harmony possible find a still wider field of operation? The forces making for unity which have during the last thirty years prevented separation in London Yearly Meeting, should slowly but surely bring together separate bodies in America.

The establishment of a general office and permanent staff for the centralization of the work of the Five Years Meeting will, I hope, be followed by the setting up of similar offices by the several Yearly Meetings. From the days of Ellis Hookes, its first Recording Clerk, London Yearly Meeting has found this machinery necessary for the relief from routine work of its busy workers in various departments, and for keeping its constituent parts in touch with each other.

In education American Friends have, in one respect, the same problems to face as Friends in England. For a time Friends were pioneers on both sides of the Atlantic, and their schools maintained a high educational standard. Now they are feeling the difficulty of keeping pace with State establishments, and have need to see to it that they do not lag behind. It is essential, amidst modern developments, not to lose that Friendly influence and training which are worth even more than intellectual equipment. In the denominational colleges such as Earlham, Friends in America have a valuable asset the like of which we do not possess. Friends who have the means of doing so can find no better field for their benevolence within the borders of Quakerism than in increasing by further endowments the usefulness of these colleges from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

In the Bible Schools American Friends have a uniting congregational agency, of which we have no equivalent. Our "week-end" and "summer schools" are doing, to some extent, spasmodically what Bible Schools are doing with continuity. These might with advantage supplement the work of Bible Schools without interfering with their usefulness, especially as they offer scope for the expansion of the "Young Friends' Movement" which, though still in its infancy, should have a great future before it.

The working of the pastoral system is a subject in which English Friends are keenly interested. With the kindred system of supported Home Missionaries in England, it has come to stay. That many, where it prevails, are conscious of the need of some modification of it is evident. There are Friends who habitually attend meetings where there are pastors who would be quite as much, if not more, at home in a conservative First-day morning meeting with its periods of silent waiting upon the Lord. The effect of valuable sermons is sometimes to a large extent destroyed by the absence of a succeeding period of silence. In some cases too, a quieter delivery would help to drive home a really good message. In one meeting in the week at least the self-effacement of the pastor would lead the congregation to rely less on the human instrument and more on the direct teaching of the Holy Spirit. It would give also opportunity for the exercise of a diversity of gifts amongst those whom the Lord may call to vocal service. The case is admirably put in the second recommendation of the report to the Five Years Meeting on "The Meeting and its Pastoral Care." Whatever may be said for or against the pastoral system, either in the main or in its extreme developments, one cannot but admire the devotion of the men and women who are giving themselves unsparingly to the work of the Church. I write with happy recollections of friendships formed with many of them during my brief stay in America. But the work will become more effective still, as these pastors become shepherds amongst other shepherds in the several congregations. There is all the difference between a pastor and the pastor, wrote a beloved English Friend when commenting upon the pastorate some twenty years ago. Everything that tends to a one person system needs a careful watch, including such details as the use of the words "reverend" and "parsonage."

In conclusion I would press upon Friends on both sides of the Atlantic, the advantage of personal visitation and interchange of thought. We have much to learn from America in warmth and enthusiasm: America may gain something from the caution that prevails with us. Our differences are rather of degree than kind. Friends of fifty years ago would have thought us all, from London to the extreme West, dangerously progressive in our "creaturely activity."

Problems of the "Rural Church"*

BY CHARLES M. WOODMAN

The Five Years Meeting put itself on record as enthusiastically endorsing the report and suggestions of the Commission on Social Service. With its assent came the request for information as to ways and means. The publication of the Minutes of the Five Years Meeting places within easy reach of all meetings the suggestions offered by that Commission. We must not, however, ignore the fact that books pertinent not only to the social needs, but also to the spiritual needs of country meetings are coming from the press in great numbers. The rural awakening is a great and hopeful fact which is arousing intense interest in all circles of thoughtful life. The Friends have thrived in rural districts. The freedom and freshness of the fields, the lakes, and the forests strike notes in harmony with those moments in the experience of the soul of man, when in the quiet openness of the Friendly worship, its fellowships with the brooding Spirit whose only laws of revelation are those of the sound of gentle stillness, and the wind which bloweth where it listeth. The Friend has a message for the man and community whose great business is partnership with God in the tilling of the soil. The Friends meeting in the country must therefore keep itself in constant touch with all the best that is to be found on this question pertaining to our growth and mission.

The "Rural Church," one of the publications of the Men and Religion Forward Movement, deals with this question in a fresh, vital, suggestive and practical way. A copy of it should be on the desk of every Friend minister who lives in a small town or the open country, and Monthly Meetings thus located should make a careful study of the entire book. It is not theological; it is practical. It gives positive backing to the statement of the Commission on Social Service of the Five Years Meeting in which these words occur, "The time is forever gone by when a rural church can live and maintain its existence if it is content merely with holding preaching services, prayer meetings and occasions for worship. It must be a center of inspiration, of spiritual guidance and social leadership for the community life of its neighborhood—." On the other hand, the book directly faces the spiritual needs of the open country, and suggests in a more than superficial way how to meet the problem. The type of resident Friend minister who works his farm during the week, and sows spiritual seed in the hearts of the worshipers on the Sabbath receives here his commendation. "The gospel for the country must be vital, modern attentive to life as it is. The man who preaches it ought to be able to live on the soil and know the people who till it so well as to teach them that 'the soil is holy'."

Its twenty writers, thoroughly alive to the needs, the opportunities, and the ideals of country life, have in as many chapters conspired to inspire, instruct, direct and, where necessary, rebuke the man or the meeting which is responsible for the spiritual welfare of any country community. Its chapters on "Description of an Ideal Rural Civilization," "The Means at Hand for the Development of an Ideal Rural Civilization," "The Rural Awakening," and "The Enlarging Ideal of the Country Church" fairly tingle with a healthy idealism drawn from nature's own sources, which is an elixir of life for discouragement, and a spiritual tonic for the man who feels himself "lost in the country." In some way one feels that the call "back to the country" is as pertinent to the church ministering to the sources of life and leadership as to the young man seeking to make a living. At the same time he realizes in reading it, that just as the young farmer of today will fail in agriculture unless he uses the latest and best scientific methods of farming, so the church will fail in the country unless she is willing, not to change her gospel which must ever be the same old story, but change her method of presenting her gospel, and grapple with the problems of the man of today in terminology familiar to him because allied to the things he is thinking about in his daily task. A knowledge of some historical geography of the Holy Land is a good asset for any preacher, but a working knowledge of some valuable modern treatise on agriculture will give him more points of contact with the man of today and his problems, than all the historical geographies ever written. If we have eyes to see, we shall discover that spiritual and moral issues are as evident and as numerous and far more complicated in this age and in this country than they were in the eighth century B. C. in the Holy Land.

A chapter on the "Literature of the Church and Country Life Movement" contains a valuable list of more than thirty books and articles bearing on the subject. Here is opened up a field of study for inspiration and practical suggestion of which this book is a fitting sample.

Inasmuch as the "church survey" is being undertaken in some counties where Friends meetings are located, and such meetings are co-operating in this work, the suggestions offered along this line are much to the point. Surveys are always in danger of becoming mere lists of statistics and card catalogues. We welcome a book which not only tells how to make the accurate study of the community, but how to use the facts when they are gathered. We are all aware that many meetings are losing ground, their membership is dwindling, interest in religious matters is a thing of the past. We must not be satisfied simply to denounce sin and worldliness. The trouble is often obscure and deep; the carefully carried out survey will discover not simply the sinful human heart (that is evident without study of any kind), but the conditions in the community which have fostered and cultivated individual and social sin. We must get not simply at symptoms, but causes. It is better to attack the causes of a disease than to assail the symptoms. Smothering a cough will not cure a cold. Evangelistic zeal and spiritual fervor have everything to gain and nothing to lose from this study. The naval figure will readily be forgiven in such a cause as this when I conclude by stating that these things prepare the ship for battle, clear the decks for action, and give the guns of the old gospel the chance to be heard and felt in the overthrow of sin and the establishment of righteousness, until our country shall be God's country not only in name but in reality.

Ellen Collins and Prison Reform Work

Reports of indignities to women prisoners in the city station houses excited the attention of philanthropic women in New York City during the eighties. Dr. Annie S. Daniel, of the Woman's Prison Association, made a personal investigation, that was presented to various groups of people interested in reform. Her report justified the complaints made as to conditions in the station houses. The Woman's Prison Association advocated the appointment of police matrons, and efforts were made to arouse the public to realize the need.

The Religious Society of Friends, meeting in Fifteenth street, New York City, had a Philanthropic Committee and a representative on the Board of the Prison Association, but the women were doing no prison reform work. Dr. Daniel spoke before a gathering of Friends, telling of the need for police matrons, and for better conditions in the station houses for women prisoners. From this meeting, at which Mrs. Josephine Shaw Lowell was present, grew the Woman's Prison Reform Committee of the Religious Society of Friends. Of this committee, Ellen Collins and Mrs. Lowell were active members. They had worked together in many causes, and were able to stimulate and direct the inexperienced members of the committee. The struggle was long and hard before matrons were appointed. Smaller cities had them and their work was approved. A bill was passed in 1888, but no matrons were appointed. The agitation was continued and finally a mandatory bill was passed in 1891 and matrons were appointed.

During this entire time, Miss Collins visited, investigated, and gave money for publicity of reports. Always quiet, she allowed others to do the public speaking; but her influence and her pocket-book were often what made the opportunity for them.

Ellen Collins and Josephine Shaw Lowell attended, by request of officials, the first examination, under Civil Service rules, of the applicants for position of matron. These numbered 120 and the time occupied was three days. They questioned each applicant and paid particular attention to the personality of the women and endeavored to ascertain their motives in applying for the position. Miss Collins was always indignant, because a woman who had passed with a low mark in the examination, was given a position because she had political friends. Miss Collins watched her career later, with great interest. Although the woman had not as good an education as many other matrons, she seemed to have sympathy with her prisoners, and to be a fairly good matron. Miss Collins always insisted that capability was the only reason for appointment to any position. She would never consider a person solely because she needed it.

As soon as matrons were appointed, it became the duty of the Women's Prison Reform Committee to visit them. There were usually two women appointed for each station house, and they were expected to visit each alternate week. Miss Collins took two station houses as her share, Elizabeth and Oak Street Police Stations. She usually went twice a month to each, sometimes oftener. The committee met each month, and the visitors then made their reports. In addition, there were occasional night visits. Ellen Collins and J. S. Lowell would get one or more carriages and invite other members of the committee to accompany them. It seems almost incredible that as recently as twenty years ago, conditions should have been what they were. Almost all the station houses had rooms for lodgers. Men and women, who had no other place in which to sleep, came to the station house and were sent to a room, where on a wooden platform, on the floor, they could sleep. There was no bathing and no undressing. The stench was fearful. The door of the women's lodging room would be opened just enough for the visitors to see within, and they would then make a hasty retreat.

The results of these original investigations were forwarded to the proper authorities. Miss Collins had a special gift for making reports. The reports were never lengthy, but were definite and clear. Her quiet sense of humor often served a good purpose in presenting a trying subject in a way that did not offend. She was saved many unpleasant experiences because she had no sense of smell. She was absolutely fearless in her investigations when necessary, but usually her quiet ways did not arouse antagonism. One evening she took with her another member of the committee and called on one of the four Police Commissioners, to ask for some changes in the care of women prisoners. They talked for some time without seeming effect. Then Miss Collins asked, "Did you ever visit a station house, and see a woman brought in?" Her eyes were so bright, and her manner so impressive, it seemed as if the man must have felt that she was looking into his soul. He said he never had, and she carefully explained to him what he would have seen if he had gone.

Before her death, she was able to see great improvements in the station houses of New York City. There are more matrons, the prisons are in better condition and the Commissioners of later times know exactly how arrests are made. There is still room for much improvement, and younger women are taking up the work laid down by women like Ellen Collins.

The Children's Right to a Peace Day Celebration

BY MARY DOAN HOLE

The Young Czar and the Young Queen and Their Part

As the 18th of May comes around year after year, it is the right of every schoolboy and schoolgirl to be reminded of the significance of Peace Day. They should be told how a little more than fourteen years ago the young Czar of Russia wrote a letter to the heads of the various nations proposing that they send delegates to a meeting to consider what should be done to prevent nations from going to war with one another. They should be told how the lovely young queen of Holland offered that this great meeting convene in her summer home, her invitation being in harmony with the thought that it would be best not to hold the conference in the capital of any one of the great powers, where so many political interests are centered.

The Villa in the Wood

Thus it was the child should be told, that the most beautiful and historic building in Holland became the meeting place of the First Hague Conference. It was one of the great world-events when the one hundred delegates representing twenty-six of the most important nations of the world, came together in this quiet and beautiful park away from the bustle of the little city. No description of the Orange Zaal gives one a real understanding of that interesting room which was set apart for the general meetings. Other apartments on the same floor, handsomely furnished with beautiful Chinese and Japanese hangings, with frescoed walls and ceilings, were given up to committees. The dining room upstairs added to its already long list of historic associations, for it was there that the Dutch Government served luncheon to the delegates every working day of the conference.

Since the meeting in 1899 tourists who visit The Hague go to this villa as to a shrine, and linger particularly in the great room where the general sessions convened. Among the immense paintings which cover the wall and dome of this hall, the one over the front entrance receives the most attention because almost prophetically its author depicted the purpose of the great meeting, long before the idea of such a gathering there had even been conceived. This picture represents Peace descending from heaven and entering the hall, and a description or copy of it easily makes an appeal to children. The reference to this painting in his opening address by M. de Beaufort, the honorary president of this first conference, expressed the hope that Peace having entered the hall, would go forth to bless the whole world. Those of us who have had the privilege of visiting the public schools in the interests of Peace Day, and who have felt the sincere enthusiasm which its observance engenders there, are ready to prophesy that Peace having entered the public schools, will go forth to bless the world.

The Palace of Peace

The young people of our public schools have a right to know about the new home being prepared for future sessions of these International Peace Conferences. They are interested in material proofs that ideals are being realized.

For long years the wonderful avenue leading from The Hague to Scheveningen has been one of the attractions of the capital of Holland, and few visitors have failed to include a drive along it in their plans. In the future the avenue will still be appreciated, but no one can doubt that the celebrated Palace of Peace will draw a far larger number of visitors than even this justly celebrated highway along which it is being erected. The present "forest of scaffolding" to be seen a little distance to the left as one goes out from The Hague, is gradually giving place to an incomparably useful building, the Palace of Peace. As Americans, we are glad that the gift to the Netherlands Government of $1,500,000 by our generous fellow citizen, Andrew Carnegie, is making possible the erection of a building with so beneficent a purpose.

It is most fitting that all countries are contributing to the beautifying of this palace, and children will quickly see the appropriateness. It does us good to go over the list of offerings that the nations are bringing to this temple where it is hoped that the religion of the Prince of Peace will be practically applied to world problems. The following are the contributions from the nations as given in Bulletin No. 8, series of 1912, of the United States Bureau of Education:

Great Britain gives the four stained-glass windows of the Great Court; France, a picture by Besnard for this court, and Gobelin tapestries, designed by Luc O. Mercon, for the Small Court; the Dutch Government, a collection of paintings, by Ferdinand Bol, for a room over the Small Court, and seven stained-glass windows for the staircase; Germany, the monumental entrance gates to the grounds; Italy, part of the marble for the corridor; Austria, the bronze and crystal candelabra; Norway, the granite for the entrance slopes; Sweden, granite for the basement and certain columns; Denmark, the porcelain for the fountain in the courtyard; Switzerland, the works of the clocks; Russia, a jasper vase, over eleven feet high, for the central hall; the United States, a large marble group representing the purpose of the building, "Peace through Justice," for the first landing of the staircase; Mexico, onyx for the staircase; Belgium (probably), the bronze doors of the building; and Japan, some gold-embroidered tapestries for the room of the administrative council, which is paneled in wood from Brazil.

One's sense of the real significance of these contributions might easily lead to an unfruitful expression of emotion. We pity the man who is not tempted to indulge in tears of gratitude that at least the ideals of peace are accepted by the world. Let us rejoice that many a patriotic citizen in many a land, reading this list, will transform the emotion it awakens into renewed endeavor to promote Peace Day celebration in the schools of his community.

What Has Been Accomplished for World Peace.

The boys and girls of our country have a right to know about the most important action of the First Hague Conference, and it is one of their rights to be told about the most important of the decisions agreed upon by the Second Conference. If we expect the time to come when our young men shall dream dreams of a Supreme Court of the World, we certainly must know that they ought to be talked to at least once a year about the great event in the not far distant future—the Third Hague Conference.

In trying to tell children about the deliberations of the First Conference, a clever writer put it this way: "The key to the whole subject, and that which became the most important part of the program, is how to end a dispute before war begins. Many differences between nations have been settled without war by calling in a third party, just as an umpire on the ball field is called upon to decide which side is in the right.

Wouldn't it look ridiculous if the two teams in a ball game should, every time a disputed point arose, stop the game and go to fighting to settle the matter? And how would it look to the spectators to see the advantage given to a side merely because it was stronger in the fist scramble? And yet this is exactly what nations do which go to war to settle disputes." The great statesmen at this first peace conference saw the folly just illustrated and asked the nations to refer their misunderstandings to an umpire or arbiter. Then it was that the world took its first great step toward a permanent international court of arbitration.

At the second peace conference the American delegates urged the establishment of an international court, which should be to the nations of the world what our Supreme Court is to the states which make up our Union. It is to be recorded that the nations which at the previous peace conference had considered this world's court to be an impracticable vision voted unanimously for it at the second. The method of selection of judges was alone left unsettled, but some peace advocates believe that, in spite of troublesome difficulties in the way, this court may yet be organized before 1915. There is no reason why high school students may not understand something of this problem. (See "International Arbitration or International Justice?" page 21 of THE AMERICAN FRIEND). The decision to hold regular conferences made "the Parliament of man, the Federation of the World," seem well nigh a reality. May the pupils in the public schools be led to anticipate the approaching peace conference until the expression, "To The Hague," coined by Oscar S. Straus in quite another connection, will seem to them a not unfitting cry. Instead of the barbarous call, "To arms! To arms!" they will learn to use his enlightened cry, "To The Hague! To The Hague!"

*A Home Celebration on May 18.

It is inspiring to read the topics in the course in Good Will, which Mrs. Fannie Fern Andrews has copied in her Peace Day Suggestions, a free publication of the United States Bureau of Education. Gradually through the first eight years of school life the child is brought from simple talks about his relation to his playmates and pets to the fundamental principles underlying the interdependence of nations. You are lamenting that the following out of such a course in your public schools is at present impossible, and some of you have the added regret that you are not able to secure soon the observance of Peace Day. Can you not have a home celebration in at least one of the following ways?

1. Why not on May 18 try to direct the conversation—the family table talk, for instance—along some line suggested by the above study course? Have a good story ready to help you start: then if the con-

*The school celebration of Peace Day was discussed at some length in the March issue of the Messenger of Peace, where definite suggestions in regard to a program may be found. versation does not spread enthusiastically, it can at least be dismissed by a live quotation or a pleasing anecdote for the emergency.

2. There is one thing which can be done in any home to celebrate Peace Day. "Hear, O ye Nations," our national peace hymn, can be taught to the children and recited by them on the appointed day; or, one of the parents can read or repeat it. What more important duty or happy privilege can that day bring to you than an endeavor thus to prepare the children in small measure for the World Federation of which they will some time be citizens?

HEAR, O YE NATIONS

Hear, hear, O ye Nations, and hearing obey
The cry from the past and the call of today!
Earth wearies and wastes with her fresh life outpoured,
With glut of the cannon, and spoil of the sword.

A new era opens, transcending the old,
It calls for new leaders, for new ranks unrolled;
For war's grim tradition it maketh appeal,
To service of man in the world's commonweal.

The workers afield, in the mill and the mart,
In commerce, in council, in science and art,
Shall bring of their gifts and together create,
The manifold life of the firm-built State.

And more shall the triumph of right over wrong,
Be shield to the weak and a curb to the strong.
When counsel prevails and, the battle flags furled,
The High Court of Nations gives law to the world.

And Thou, O my Country, from many made one,
Last born of the nations, at morning Thy sun,
Arise to the place Thou art given to fill,
And lead the world-triumph of peace and good-will.

PEACE ASSOCIATION OF FRIENDS

It seems particularly desirable to call the attention of Friends at this time to the following topics:

1. Hague Peace Day

In attempting to do effective work in any great reform it is necessary to remember that an appeal must constantly be made not only to adults but to children. It is with this important consideration in mind with respect to the Peace work, that the entire space allotted to us in the Department of Peace in this issue of the AMERICAN FRIEND is devoted to the subject of Peace Day exercises for the children. The injunction concerning the words of the law repeated again and again to the Hebrews of old: "Ye shall teach them to your children, speaking of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way," must be put into practice literally today in regard to the facts about peace and war if we are to hasten the day when "nation shall not lift up sword against nation."

2. Work Being Done by Friends.

Elias Rogers, of Toronto, Canada, is a member of the Canadian General Committee which is helping to arrange for the celebration of the Centenary of Peace between the United States and Great Britain.

Robert C. Root, of Los Angeles, California, as a representative of the American Peace Society on the Pacific Coast, has been active in the work of preparing for important national and international Peace Congresses to be held in San Francisco in 1915. On February 6th the Federated Peace Committee for 1915 elected Dr. David Starr Jordan as its president, and Robert C. Root as secretary.

Franklin S. Blair, of Guilford College, North Carolina, has recently done excellent service as secretary of the committee in arranging for the North Carolina Peace Conference which was held in Raleigh, March 1st and 2d. At this conference on March 2d, William Jennings Bryan, now Secretary of State, spoke to an audience of eight thousand people on the subject of "Peace."

Spiceland Quarterly Meeting of Friends, held at Spiceland, Indiana, on March 8th, authorized its clerk to forward to the senators from Indiana and to the representative from the Sixth Congressional District, a letter setting forth Friends' position in regard to war, and protesting against further increase in expenditures for military and naval purposes.

3. A Word as to the Future.

The Fourth American Peace Congress is to be held in St. Louis on May 1st, 2d and 3d. As in the case of the Peace Congresses held in New York in 1907, in Chicago in 1909, and in Baltimore in 1911, the St. Louis meeting is to be national in character, representatives from a number of states having already been appointed. Visitors as well as official delegates will be welcome, and those who wish to help to advance the cause of peace, or those who wish to learn more fully about what the peace reform really is, are urged to attend this Congress. Full information in regard to plans for the meeting may be obtained by addressing Mr. Walter B. Stevens, Secretary of the Fourth American Peace Congress, St. Louis, Missouri.

For the Peace Association of Friends in America,

As Ye Would

BY HENRY COFFIN FELLOW

From the darkness of the night,
So grim,
Came a stranger to our door,
Sick and sore, in the rags of sin,
Reaching feebly for the light,
Pleading for an entrance in:
He asked but a crust,
Yet we gave him more;
For the Master had come,
Had garnished a room
And cleansed it of dust
For Him.

secure an active canvass for subscribers in each local meeting, our hopes of doubling the circulation would be in a fair way to be realized speedily. In such cases, the names and addresses of canvassers should be reported at once to the AMERICAN FRIEND office.

A WORD TO PASTORS

3. Pastors can do more than anyone else in pushing the claims of the AMERICAN FRIEND effectively. In other denominations, the pastors feel the responsibility of looking after the interests of their denominational papers. Evidently this is an art yet to be acquired in our own denomination. From about four hundred letters addressed to pastors and other leading Friends, the first of the year, we have had fewer than fifty responses, and so far as we have information in this office, not more than that many pastors feel any special interest in presenting the claims of the paper. Is it any wonder that our denominational work progresses haltingly often, when so many servants of the Church evince such a strange lack of interest in certain of our important denominational activities? Many ministers are not even taking the paper, and have no touch with the broadened field of endeavor upon which the Church has entered. Judging from reports, many members have never seen a copy of the AMERICAN FRIEND, while others have taken no trouble to examine it. Upon pastors, ministers and others interested must lie the responsibility of seeing that no member continues longer without a somewhat intimate knowledge of this product of the Church.

OUR YOUNG PEOPLE

4. Our young people and Young People's Societies can do much in the way of increasing the circulation of the paper, following the definite suggestions of Charles M. Woodman in a recent issue. The young people took the lead at the Five Years Meeting in advocating a Publication Board, and by planning to canvass every community now, they can insure the success of the project.

5. Friends can help materially by paying their subscriptions promptly and by making remittance on delinquencies, of which there is far too large a number.

PRICE OF THE PAPER

The price of the AMERICAN FRIEND, as formerly, is $1.50 per year. In answer to suggestions concerning club rates, it needs to be said that the cost of the mechanical work upon the paper alone, typesetting, press work, cost of paper, and mailing, is a little in excess of $1.00 per year, or to be exact, about $1.05 at the present rate. We are ready to allow a small commission for new subscriptions concerning which plans may be ascertained by application to the office, but to allow a reduction in price, together with a commission, will reduce our income below the limit where there will be a surplus for office, clerical, editorial and management expenses. Ministers may for the present still get the paper at $1.00, but the Board asks that in such cases the one receiving the reduction be prepared to help the paper by sending items of news and forwarding any subscriptions that may be received.

TIME FOR ACTION

We feel that the time has come when the entire Church should supplement the efforts of the AMERICAN FRIEND office by entering upon a nation-wide campaign to build up the circulation list.

We need a larger paper badly, but to secure it we must have 4,000 more subscribers. These we should have during this second quarter of the year—4,000 new subscribers by July 1st next. That means an average of thirty to each Quarterly Meeting and of seven to each Monthly Meeting in America, including Ohio and Philadelphia Yearly Meetings. To reach the goal, many monthly meetings will have to exceed this number several times.

Will not Friends generally help us to realize this achievement? There will be tremendous potentiality in such a subscription list, because such patronage means more advertising, and hence a larger paper, with which to minister effectively to our denominational necessities.

Religious Education Association

The tenth annual meeting of the Religious Education Association occurred at Cleveland from the 10th to the 13th instant. It brought together leaders in practically all phases of educational effort in which there is or may be a religious element. The general theme this year of all the sessions was "Religious Education and Civic Progress." Three general sessions were held on three successive nights. Sectional meetings were held during the day by the fifteen sub-organizations, i. e., The Council, Universities and Colleges, Teachers of Bible in Colleges, Theological Seminaries, Churches and Pastors, Sunday-schools and Teacher Training, Public Schools, Christian Associations, The Home, Penal Institutions, Social Service, Lay Training Schools, Eugenics and Sex Hygiene, Church Director of Religious Training, and Joint Conference of Denominational Commission. Altogether as many as fifty sessions were held. There is no means of estimating the number of persons who attended or were influenced by these meetings, or the amount of good that was done. It was a wonderfully inspiring and significant thing, however, that the leaders in promoting American life and civilization, not only of our country but of Canada, not only Protestants but Jews and Catholics, in such large numbers spent their time and means in coming together for the exchange of ideas and the renewing of faith and strength. Incidentally the meeting was a tribute to the genius of that educational Napoleon, President Harper, who conceived the idea and was the inspiring figure in the first meeting ten years ago. The proceedings will be published in full as usual. At the same time there was an independent meeting of the Denominational Boards of Education, accounts of which will be given upon subsequent occasions.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

California Yearly Meeting

The Douglas C. E. Society of Pasadena, California, has undertaken to canvass the community for subscriptions to the AMERICAN FRIEND.

Richard R. Newby, of New York, opened a ten day's series of meetings at Pasadena, March 19, preceded by cottage prayer meetings among Friends in various parts of the city, and a day of prayer at the church. The meeting has just been supplied with 200 copies of Friends Hymnal.

The W. F. M. S. of Pasadena had a most interesting meeting on March 14, at the home of Martha E. Newlin, wife of the pastor. The principal speaker was Mary E. White, of Friends Jamaica Mission, now spending her furlough at the home of her mother in Whittier. Charles E. Tebbetts and wife, of Richmond, Indiana, were also present and gave important addresses.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

Friends at Mooreland, Indiana, closed a very successful series of meetings recently, Milo S. Hinckle, of Farmland, Indiana, being the evangelist. The gospel was preached with much power, and much good was accomplished in the whole community. Nineteen conversions, five renewals, and eleven accessions to Friends were the visible results. For the past four years Mooreland Meeting has been battling against great difficulties, but we feel that by the help of the Master and the loyalty of our own forces, the meeting has a bright future. A Christian Endeavor Society will be organized in the near future.

The pastor, together with the superintendent of the Bible School at Van Wert, Ohio, is making a special effort and has issued a call for an increase in enrollment, and an attendance of 100 by May 4. Every department of the school is thoroughly awake and at work among acquaintances and friends to secure this increase. This school generally accomplishes what it undertakes. Not long since, the pastor issued a call for a self-denial period of two weeks and asked that $100.00 be raised to make the last payment on the piano. When the offerings were turned in they amounted to $117.00. One class of young men gave $32.50. We are still praising the Lord for His wonderful work among the people.

North Carolina Yearly Meeting

Clarence Pickett, a Senior of the Hartford Theological Seminary, preached at the Asheboro Street Meeting, Greensboro, North Carolina, both morning and evening of March 9.

New Garden Monthly Meeting was held at Guilford College on February 22. A few persons were received into membership. Julia S. White, a minister of the gospel and librarian of the college, who has a prospect of attending Woodbrooke School, England, during the coming spring and summer, was granted a minute to attend Dublin and London Yearly Meeting and perform other religious service if such should open to her.

New Garden Quarterly Meeting was held at Greensboro, North Carolina, March 8. Prayer was offered by David E. Sampson. The work and spiritual condition of the five Monthly Meetings composing the Quarterly Meeting were reviewed and approved. At the eleven o'clock service, Delphina Jenkins, a minister from Oklahoma, preached earnestly and scripturally on the baptism and leading of the Holy Spirit. After a substantial luncheon the afternoon session was called to order. Varied and extensive work by younger and older members on evangelism, Bible school, prohibition, peace, Bible study classes, Quaker study classes, education, rural church problems and civic righteousness was reported. The good service of Arthur and Eliza Dann of England, in Greensboro and New Garden Meetings, together with those of Tilman Hobson of Pasadena, California, in the Greensboro Meeting, were reported approvingly. A like report of the services of Delphina Jenkins came from Pomona Meeting. Franklin S. Blair, chairman of the peace work of the Yearly Meeting, gave an account in brief of peace work being done in North Carolina. He is also organizer and leader of the intercollegiate oratorical peace work of the State and said that seven colleges had held local contests, and each had sent a representative to the State oratorical contest at Raleigh. He reported that on the day following this contest the first State convention to organize a North Carolina Peace Society as a branch of the American Peace Society was held. Three Friends, Dr. L. L. Hobbs, Professor J. F. Davis and F. S. Blair, attended the contest and convention, Dr. Hobbs reading an excellent paper.

Oregon Yearly Meeting

Portland Quarterly Meeting was held at Lents, Oregon, March 7-9, and was an occasion of great profit. The presence of Arthur and Eliza Dann, of England, added much to the interest of the sessions. The exposition of some of our principal doctrines was able and well adapted to our needs. This opportunity of learning something of the fundamentals of Quakerism was much appreciated by some of the younger part of the membership as well as the older. The general status of the work in Portland Quarter is encouraging. The young people are seeking places of helpful service. One new Monthly Meeting has been recently organized in a section of Portland, which is not well provided with churches. The coming of Homer L. and Blanche Cox to labor with us is a means of added strength to the church in Oregon.

Benjamin F. and Eliza Hinshaw celebrated their fiftieth anniversary of their wedding at the home of their son in Portland, Oregon, on March 5. Their five children were present and letters were read from relatives and friends in various places and numerous tokens were received. In the evening an appropriate program was rendered. B. F. Hinshaw is a minister and has done much in pioneer work for the Friends Church, first in central Kansas and later in Oregon, where he has resided for more than twenty years. By her encouragement and interest, his wife has had no small part in his labors.

Western Yearly Meeting

A series of meetings was held in the First Friends Church at Noblesville, Indiana, from December 29 to January 19. During the entire series the ministry was in charge of the pastor, Gertrude Moon Reinier, who was assisted in the music by Miss Leora Bogue of Fairmount, Indiana. There was a real revival of spiritual interest among church members and there were thirty-five conversions and renewals. Eighteen have been added to the church and several others have signified their intention to unite with Friends, at our next Monthly Meeting. Great power attended all the services and such Christian harmony prevailed as to make the special effort the most successful in the history of the church. The young people were reached and are loyal to all the services. Since the meetings closed, great interest has been manifested in the prayer meeting. We feel encouraged and the outlook for the future is hopeful.

NEWS FROM OUR COLLEGES

Earlham College

It has been announced by Prof. E. P. Trueblood that the Interstate Oratorical Contest will be held at Earlham in May, 1914.

In order to meet the increasing demand for vocational work, two full years in Domestic Science will be given at Earlham after this year, with Miss Marshall in charge.

Professor Edwin S. Morrison was recently elected to membership in the American Physical Society. This is in recognition of his important investigations upon the molecular properties of liquids.

Professor David W. Dennis, who has spent the past three months in Arizona for his health, has announced his intention of returning to the college and resuming his work for the spring term. He will not have any laboratory work, but will confine himself to giving lecture courses.

On the evening of February 28, at the annual Indiana State Oratorical Association contest, held in Indianapolis, Fred Hollowell won third place for Earlham College, first honors going to DePauw University. Mr. Hollowell spoke on "Co-operation and International Justice," and made a plea for the time when all nations will settle their disputes by arbitration and not by the sword. His oratory was considered to be of a splendid type.

Announcement has been made that Prof. Elwood C. Perisho, Earlham class of '87, state geologist of South Dakota, will give the Earlham Class address next June. It is also announced that Prof. Rayner W. Kelsey, Earlham class of 1900, professor of history at Haverford, will give the address at the time of Earlham commencement, to the Y. W. and Y. M. C. A.'s. It is the intention of the college to have Earlham graduates as prominent speakers during commencement week, which is in harmony with the "home coming" of all Earlham students, now being arranged for.

Friends University

Mrs. L. S. Carter, of Wichita, has contributed to the University library a set of twenty volumes containing the choicest literary productions of all ages.

The Biblical School has shown the strongest evidences of real growth in all its history. Classes are larger than usual. More solid and consecutive work is being done, and there is a marked increase in the classes for the more advanced courses.

The second semester opened with the month of February and continues until June 6. A system of weekly reports was instituted at the beginning of the present college year with a view to finding out and helping students who might show signs of weakness in any part of their work. The results of the new system have been very satisfactory.

Penn College

Those interested in missions as a life work are formed into a group known as "The Volunteer Mission Band." Its object is to study the world as a field for Christian service. In the past many members of this band have gone to foreign fields and have become excellent and proficient workers.

For the third successive year Penn College won both contests in the triangular debate with Parsons and Leander Clark Colleges. In the six contests in which Penn has engaged, three have been won unanimously. Mr. Homer L. Morris has trained the debating team during the last two years.

Courses in social service are being given in the department of sociology. These are intended to give the students an accurate knowledge of the actual conditions of community life, both rural and urban, and to teach methods of supplying these needs. Christian Social service is held up as the type, which is to help bring in the kingdom of God.

Penn College has suffered severe loss recently in the death of several of its close friends and staunch supporters. These are: Mary Pearson, of Springdale, Iowa; I. C. Green, Ft. Dodge, Iowa; Eliza J. Lindley, Minneapolis, Minnesota; and William H. McCracken, of Richland, Iowa. The first of these three aged Friends had passed the eightieth year. All of these had been associated with Penn College from its very beginning. They had contributed to it largely of their means, and had rendered assistance in many ways.

Whittier College

During the series of meetings held in Whittier by Richard R. Newby, he spoke three times to the students of Whittier College very helpfully. Many students received great help from the meetings.

More than half the whole number of students of Whittier College are taking work in Bible study in the regular curriculum. Both the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. are organizing Bible study and mission study classes in addition to the above.

Departmental Conference

A remarkably successful Departmental Conference of Plainfield Quarterly Meeting was held March 11th, at First Friends Church, Indianapolis, Indiana.

An active interest had been manifest in this enterprise previous to date, as was evinced by a willing response from those selected for service. The topics discussed covered practical problems before the church at the present time, Bible Schools, Education, Evangelism, etc., and the committee having the matter in charge feels grateful to all who contributed to the success of the program. The attendance of friends outside of the city was all that could be expected, and the prevailing feeling seemed to be that these conferences are well worth while.

The morning session opened at 10 A. M. with devotional services led by E. James Carter, of Plainfield, followed by a solo by Leona Wright, of Indianapolis, "Jesus the Bread of Life."

Exceedingly valuable addresses were given, as noted in the program which follows:

10:15 A. M.—The Tragedy of Adolescence
Simon Hester, West Newton.

10:45 A. M.—Standard of the Ministry
Willard O. Trueblood, Indianapolis.
General Discussion, led by Morton C. Pearson.

2:00 P. M.—Devotional, led by John B. Stipp, Indianapolis.

Solo, Mildred Barrett, Indianapolis.

2:15 P. M.—Character Construction, Albert Brown, Wilmington, Ohio.
Ladies' Quartette.

2:45 P. M.—The Distinctive Problem of the Country Meeting, Peter Raida-baugh, Plainfield.

Open discussion, led by Dr. W. D. Hoskins, of Indianapolis.

The addresses were made the basis of interesting and instructive discussions in which many helpful ideas were made prominent. Round tables were conducted by Morton C. Pearson and Eliza Armstrong Cox, of Columbus, in which were discussed "The Twentieth Century Elder," "Teachers' Training Class," "Athletics and Boys' Clubs for the Sunday-school," "Grading in the Sunday-school," "Teaching of Quaker Theology," and many other points.

The evening program began at seven o'clock with devotional, led by John B. Stipp, of Indianapolis. An address by Elbert Russell, of Earlham College, on "A Revival of Quakerism by Convincement," was discussed by Albert Brown, of Wilmington, Ohio, in a very helpful way.

Not the least important part of the conference was the social feature. Lunch was served at noon by the ladies of the Indianapolis church, and again in the evening a delightful hour was spent eating and in social intercourse. Taken as a whole, the day was one of pleasure and profit.

At Washington, D. C.

Hon. O. P. Austin, who during his incumbency of ten years as secretary of the great National Geographic Society, has seen the society grow from a membership of 2,300 to the enormous number of 180,000, delivered his famous lecture, "Around the World in Eighty Minutes" in Friends Meeting House, Washington, D. C., the night of March 11th, to an audience that packed the meeting house and overflowed into the corridors.

For fifteen years Mr. Austin has been chief of the Bureau of Statistics of the United States Government, and as such was sent around the world for the purpose of visiting all countries with which the United States has commercial relations. He gathered on his journey a great store of novel and wonderfully interesting and instructive information, his lecture being illustrated by one mile of beautiful motion pictures. It was felt that great benefit had been derived from the lecture, which was given free of charge on account of the friendship between Mr. Austin and one of our Friends, Henry W. Coffin.

This is our second lecture this season. The first having been that by William Charles Braithwaite, on the "Adult Schools in England." On Wednesday evening, March 27th, Henry W. Coffin will lecture on the "History of the Under-ground Railroad." His father, Levi Coffin, was called the president of the under-ground railroad, as many of the older Friends will recall.

At Greensboro, North Carolina

The Asheboro Street Friends Church of Greensboro, North Carolina, has recently held a most successful revival meeting, with Tilman Hobson, of Pasadena, California, as evangelist. Mr. Hobson was raised a Friend, but is now engaged in inter-denominational evangelistic work. He is a strong preacher and a man of deep spiritual conviction and pleasing personality.

There were between sixty and seventy conversions, and the meeting and the entire community were much strengthened. Under the direction of the Y. M. C. A., Mr. Hobson preached to large congregations of men in the Grand Opera House the three Sunday afternoons during his revival.

Earl J. Harold, whose successor as pastor has not yet been secured, co-operated in every way as a pastor would, and also had charge of the singing. Five united with the church upon request and others will follow.

One notable feature in connection with the progress of the meetings were the paid advertisements run in the daily newspapers. This was a new departure in religious work in that section of the country, but the meeting felt it was well repaid in so doing.

Mr. Hobson will preach occasionally at the regular Sunday meetings, as he will be spending some time in North Carolina, with Greensboro his headquarters.

The Portuguese government has decided to refer all questions regarding the property of religious congregations, seized under the law separating church and state, to The Hague tribunal.

Roman Catholic Bishops in Ireland are engaged in a crusade against the circulation of low-class Sunday papers and other indecent literature among their people.

The proposed extra session of Congress, called to meet April 1, may be delayed a week, pending additional preparation of tariff policies and measures.

THE KNOW HOW To Feed Children and Get Good Results

There are more nervous persons made so by undigested food lying in the stomach than the average individual would suppose.

If food remains undigested in the stomach, it begins to ferment, set up gas and a large portion is thus converted into poison.

That's why imperfectly digested food may, and often does, cause irritation of the nerves and stupor of the mind—brain and nerves are really poisoned.

"My daughter had complained for some time of a distressed feeling in the stomach, after eating, which set me thinking that her diet was not right," writes an anxious and intelligent mother.

"She had been fond of cereals, but had never tried Grape-Nuts. From reading the account of this predigested food, it seemed reasonable to try Grape-Nuts for her case.

"The results were really wonderful. The little brain that seemed at times unable to do its work, took on new life and vigor. Every morning, now, before going to school, she eats the crisp little morsels and is now completely and entirely well; she seems to have a new lease on life—no more distress in the stomach, nor headache, but sound and well every way." CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

APRIL 6.

TOPIC—The Ideal Christian. IV. His Humility. Matt. XX: 20-28. (Consecration meeting.)

Worldly ambition, properly guarded, is laudable, yet has been the bane of many a life. A consuming desire to excel has led many a young man to excesses which have blighted his life. The trouble is not so much with the desire as with the lack of self control.

"Whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant." This is a law which many are loth to learn. Service in humility is the cap sheaf of the Christian life. "Blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth." He who takes the sword invites opposition, but he who wears the emblems of peace will win a multitude to his standard.

Man must ever be humble when comparing his own finiteness with God's infinite power and love and goodness. It is the essential attribute of the ideal Christian. We cannot imagine a genuine disciple of Christ as being haughty, arrogant, proud, abusive, tyrannical. These are the characteristics of the worldly ambitious.

There may be such a thing as false humility, assumed for effect. That is mockery, and not genuine meekness. To assume such a part is to play the hypocrite, and has no place in the conduct of Christ's followers.

John Ruskin said, "I believe the first test of a truly great man is his humility." It is a precept to be taught to every youth, to be emblazoned in every dwelling, to be proclaimed from every pulpit. By its pattern, every ideal life ought to be measured. The truly great scorn not the humblest service, wherein lies the call of duty.

In all our acquaintanceship, the man or woman who seemed most Christ-like, whose daily life made us feel that we wanted to be good and lovely, too, was one who was always humble, one who was characterized by meekness and simplicity, whose daily acts were like a holy benediction.

"From all that fate has brought to me I strive to learn humility,
And trust in Him who rules above,
Whose universal law is love.
Thus only can I kindly view
The world that I am passing through."

GRADED HELPS

In regard to the graded helps, I would say that four of the large denominational publishing houses have formed a syndicate in which the smaller bodies have also entered, for the purpose of publishing graded lessons. The Methodist Book Concern was chosen as the house for getting out these supplies. This was done because of the limited demand and large expense necessary to publish these helps. The publishers demand an edition of five thousand copies of each publication to secure the privilege of an imprint edition. The Friends, being one of the smaller bodies, cannot use enough copies to get an imprint edition, but must send them out with the imprint of the M. E. Book Concern. All helps for the graded system, no matter where secured, except from the Baptist and Christian Publishing Houses, will be the same. I ask Friends to order through me as it will cost no more than through any other house.

The Commission on a Central Publishing House, and Friends Literature, recommended that the Friends Sabbath Schools should use the new graded system of Lesson Helps, and the Lesson Helps published by us at Plainfield, Ind. This was done after a very exhaustive study of the condition and needs of the Friends Church, and was very gratifying to me.

Hymn of the Workers

[For The American Friend.]

Through the toil and the weariness, sadness and strife,
Mid the curse and the crush of the throng;
From the depths and the dark and the dolour of life,
Love's labor lifts up into Song!

Into gladness beyond understanding,
With a joy above earth's expletive,
Never gained by a selfish demanding,
But in seeing how much we can give;
Not by cowardly, skeptically scanning,
But in fighting Faith's battle to live.

For I know there's a Glory emerging
Out of sorrow and travail and grime;
From the Cross and the Thorn and the Scourging
God's building a spirit divine;
Some day with its diadem burning
The Crown of that Glory will shine—
Some day past the heartache and yearning
Love's Light of the world shall be thine!

So let me rejoice with exceeding great joy,
As I jog on my jubilant way;
Making nobler each deed of the day's dull employ
By the lilt of a Laborer's lay!

HENRY YOUNG OSTRANDER.

Our Gains in Circulation

Last week we published a table, showing the new subscriptions received by THE AMERICAN FRIEND under the new management, since January 1, together with a list of discontinuances. This week we present the same classification by Yearly Meetings, brought down to date. By comparing the tables last week and this, it will be seen that during the week we have added 28 new subscriptions and within the same period have had 10 discontinuances.

These tables presented from week to week, will make an entertaining study to all who are interested in increasing the patronage of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. If we reach the 4,000 new subscribers by July 1, we will need 300 per week, as against the net gain of 18 the past week. In the vast majority of meetings there are more families that are not taking the paper than are. There is an abundance of material upon which to work to insure the 4,000.

A Prayer 274 Years Old

Oh! that mine eyes might closed be
To what concerns me not to see;
That deafness might possess mine ear
To what concerns me not to hear;
That truth my tongue might always tie
From ever speaking foolishly;
That no vain thought might ever rest,
Or be conceived in my breast;
That by each deed and word and thought
Glory may to my God be brought!
But what are wishes? Lord, mine eye
On Thee is fixed, to Thee I cry;
Wash, Lord, and purify my heart,
And make it clean in every part,
And when 'tis clean, Lord, keep it, too,
For that is more than I can do.

THOMAS ELWOOD, A. D. 1639.

O, what a glory doth this world put on,
For him who with a fervent heart goes forth
Under the bright and glorious sky, and looks
On duties well performed and days well spent.

—Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

Striving to Attain the Best Things

"But, beloved, we are persuaded better things of you."

The average man is inclined to dwell upon the lower planes of life. Few attain the best, or even strive after it in any real sense. The tendency is to be satisfied with the average standard of merit and achievement. There is always abundant room at the top.

Too many Christians are content to live in the lowlands. They see no vision of the sun-crowned hill tops where the breezes of heaven refresh the soul with never ending gladness. They are subject to moods, and religion to them is mostly a matter of feeling. They stumble on in the twilight of Christian experience, enduring rather than enjoying the obligations of the Christian life.

Christian example ought to be the most effective ministry in the Church today. We have no purpose to lessen the power of the spoken word, or minimize its necessity, yet an ideal Christian life in a community will win men to the Master when all else fails.

"I can answer all the ministers I have ever heard, and I can account for the Bible," said a professed infidel, "but I cannot account for the changed life of ———," mentioning the name of a man well known in the community, in whose life the work of grace had been wrought out with completeness. How few of us appreciate the magnetic power of a life that is hid with Christ in God! Not more surely is the needle drawn to the magnetic pole than is needy humanity, conscious of its sin, drawn to the Savior by the power of an ideal life.

The instability of Christian experience manifested in so many lives is the greatest hinderance to the Church in the world today. Men are not easily attracted to the grosser sins. They turn to the Church instinctively for the pattern of better things. But their search is not always reassuring. "Beloved, we are persuaded better things of you." The Apostolic admonition is pertinent to present day experiences. In the Church ought to be found not only the best types of human life, judged by the highest standards of conduct known to earth, but these types should predominate so exclusively that humanity will not only be attracted but irresistibly drawn to embrace the truly religious life, as being the highest embodiment of human attainment.

Lessons from the Flood Disasters

At the time of this writing it is too early to calculate the results of the devastating floods, which have swept so much of Indiana, Ohio and Western Pennsylvania during the past few days. That the loss, both in life and property is tremendous, is certain. Within less than four days, fully eleven inches of rain fell at Richmond, and this typifies conditions throughout a vast section. Readers will understand therefore, the delay in receiving last week's issue of the AMERICAN FRIEND, when it is known that for four or five days the mails could not get out of Richmond except for brief distances and only in one or two directions.

Every calamity has its lessons, some of them pointing to delinquencies, moral and otherwise, as the source of the disaster, some merely suggesting moral reflections for the public benefit.

First and foremost, men will read in the tragedies of these floods, the story of the frailty and uncertainty of human life. Multitudes of men and women live on, year after year, with scarcely a thought of eternity, happy with present enjoyments or busied with worldly cares, expecting some day to attend to the demands of the religious life, before it is too late. But these floods, which have not yet fully abated, as in the case of all calamities which levy a heavy toll upon human life, are warnings that it is not wise for man to choose his own times and seasons, in which to surrender to God. One does not have to read into these disasters by flood or fire or earthquake, the visitation of the judgments of Jehovah, to learn the lesson in all its fullness, that the probations of life are uncertain, and that it is not safe to postpone the day of salvation.

Just as a dutiful child is obedient to parental guidance, not because of the fear of punishment, but through filial love, so ought men to serve God, not so much to avert judgment, as to typify the highest embodiment of love and service, which the creature can show to the Creator. This is the highest type of Christian service. But when men are prone to delay, and delay becomes a habit, which all too many never overcome, it is well to impress the tragedies of life as warnings that no one has a mortgage upon any time except the present. "Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." Human life in relation to its future, no less than to the present, is far too important to risk, without harmonizing its conduct with the purposes of the Infinite Father.

Another valuable lesson that has been taught with impelling force is the fact that in a primary sense, all men are their brother's keepers. At no other time is the common bond of human sympathy stronger or more manifest than in the face of wide-spread human suffering. At such times the selfish in the average man or woman is lost to sight, and risks both to life and property will be taken as under no other circumstances, in behalf of those who are victims of tragic misfortunes. At his best, man is a dependent creature. By faith in God and by determination of will, he may triumph over the ordinary environments, but when facing death, which is the heritage of all, or when caught in a maze of disasters beyond his control, how instinctively the longing for friendly sympathy, and how naturally the cry goes out for succor! It is such a cry that warms the hearts of all normal men and women and impels them to action. It is under such circumstances that the multitude becomes the good Samaritan.

The cry of distress, which came out of the dark from Dayton, Hamilton, Indianapolis, Peru, Logansport, Brookville, Piqua, Columbus, and many other points, where human life was apparently being endangered upon a large scale, touched not only the sympathetic heart of every city, village and country district for many miles around, but the heart of the Nation as well, and the impulse was universal to lend a helping hand, no matter how great the sacrifice. It is at such times and under such circumstances, that the spiritual nature of man is emphasized. It is from such tragedies the Church may learn the lessons of the adaptation of the gospel of Jesus Christ to human necessities. Man will not be won back to God by the formulas of the theologians or through the disputes of the doctrinaires half so readily as through the friendly touch of Christian sympathy, which ministers to sinful humanity at the points of its direst needs.

Other lessons less vital perhaps, will impress themselves, touching the material protection which ought to be guaranteed to great communities. It is reported that a bursting reservoir a few miles above the city of Dayton, and the breaking of the levee along the river which divided the city, were responsible in the main for the flood which devastated that vast community. It was the same flood which swept through smaller towns and overwhelmed the city of Hamilton. The time will come perhaps, when reservoirs will have to be located by the authority of law, where the risk to human life will be reduced to the minimum.

In other cities like Peru and Indianapolis, it appears that bridges which were finally swept away or had to be dynamited, clogged the swollen streams, and added greatly to the horrors of the flood at least temporarily. Cities will probably have to learn the lesson of building their bridges higher and beyond all reasonable danger of menace to the adjacent territory, while at the same time the channels of streams through great communities will have to be widened.

The deluge of waters has been abnormal. Throughout the stricken district all streams rose far above the highest previous records. Many Friends' communities have suffered in the general devastation. We join in the universal sympathy which is being manifested toward all who have suffered through loss or distress. May the God of all grace comfort and cheer the broken hearted, where man's help must fail.

The principal trouble with the church, where trouble exists at all, is that there are too many drones upon the membership roll. God's kingdom will grow through the instrumentality of human endeavors, and a live, active membership will mean a fruitful church.

While planning for larger things in our American Quaker life, the obligations of planning for our children should not be overlooked. They are the future church in embryo.

Many a church, like many an individual life, is in a rut and making little effort to get out. Oh, the sadness of it, when there is the King's highway, which is solid ground!

Christianity is a life to be lived seven days in the week, and not a cloak to be doffed at the outer door of the meeting house.

The peace of God which passeth all understanding is not a thing to be philosophized upon, but an experience to be realized.

Church politics is the abomination of denominational procedure. A church ring is just as deplorable as a political ring.

Some men are loud in their profession at prayer meeting, but are not on speaking terms with their neighbors.

The King's Work and the World's Work

BY RODERICK SCOTT

"Unto Him shall the gathering of the nations be."—Genesis 49: 10. "I must work the works of Him that sent me."—John 9: 4.

It is a commonplace of our teaching that all men crave life; but a closer view of the matter will suggest that it is not abstract life they crave, but the filled life; they desire not the form but the content, the substance. The ancient philosophy divided men into two classes according as they desired that the substance should be pleasure or toil; but our modern standards of values agree that the better life is the work-filled life, that work alone gives significance to life. Even in the commercial world, success is reckoned by what a man has done; and money itself is of value by virtue of what it can do. Those of us who most desire a month's vacation would fret exceedingly if the rest were to last a year; the college student who seems to be looking most ingeniously for a place to sit down, does get up in a day or two. "Two pieces of advice I have to give you," said President Hastings, of Union Seminary, to a graduating class, years ago: "Find the place where God wants you; and when you have found it, burn to the socket."

It is fair therefore, to pursue a re-examination of our missionary responsibility along the courses of the following questions: What is the best and biggest work that we can do? Where is the best and biggest work that we can do? When is the best and biggest work that we can do?

I. WHAT IS THE BEST AND BIGGEST WORK?

"The best and biggest work in the world is making the world over in the likeness of Jesus Christ."

These words of J. Campbell White, General Secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, deserve profound consideration. What do they mean? Of what sort is this transformation? Can a responsibility for it be laid upon us? How is it to be accomplished?

a. Of what sort is this transformation?

"The kingdom of God is not eating and drinking, but righteousness, and peace and joy in the Holy Spirit."

The transformation that Jesus works in men is one from sadness to joy; from hopelessness to peace; from the slavery of sin to the freedom of righteousness. You can take all the categories that men use to classify men: Engineer, lawyer, teacher, artist, doctor, business man, merchant, politician, clerk, captain of industry, social worker, laborer, Republican, hod-carrier, man, woman, child, father, mother, son, daughter, soldier, sailor, agnostic, hedonist, cosmopolitan, Hoosier, New Yorker, European, Hindu. You can take any or all of these and think of them as sad, hopeless, sinful, without doing violence to their classification. But you cannot be at the same time a Christian and sad, or hopeless, or sinbound. To be a defeated Christian is to deny Christ.

Again, the transformation that Jesus works in men is that of the giving of life. This it is that makes his message a universal one: all men crave life; he brings the one eternal, victorious, abundant, perfect life.

What is life?

Life is right relation to environment.

What is the environment?

The environment is God and man.

The right relation is: To know God as Father, wise, just, loving, strong, to be loved with strength, mind, heart, soul; to know oneself as God's child, docile, trustful, obedient, to be loved as such; to know one's fellowman as one's brother, to be loved as oneself. This love is to be the kind of force Christ used when he loved his disciples, and that he now uses in loving us; the love that expresses itself in service. "And this is life eternal, that they should know Thee, the only true God, and him whom Thou didst send, even Jesus Christ." "He that hath the Son hath the life, and he that hath not the Son of God hath not the life."

This love is a motive power; it transforms men; it redeems men from sin; it energizes men to high action; it gives the power that the Moral Law does not possess to enable men to obey the Moral Law. The Gospel of Jesus Christ is the power of God unto salvation of everyone that believeth. This is the transformation that Jesus works in men. To bring this power to bear upon men is to transform them to the likeness of Jesus Christ.

b. Can a responsibility for this transformation be laid upon us?

Take the categories again. Can you be at the same time an engineer, lawyer, teacher, doctor, hod-carrier, politician, soldier, father, mother, child, Hoosier, New Yorker, and Christian? Are these classifications incompatible with the lives of righteousness, joy, peace?

No. "Christ has not come to add one more heavy burden to lives already weighed down, but rather to capitalize character to meet fully all the claims of life." "The Christian religion is a means of enduring hardness, a gift of strength."

Can you carry the message of the abundant life; can you be a factor in the transformation; can you engage in making the world over in the likeness of Jesus Christ, and be at the same time engineer, lawyer, teacher, hod-carrier, politician, captain of industry, parent, American, African?

Yes; for so only can the message be carried, the transformation effected, the making over accomplished. "Even as the Father sent me, send I also you." Every Christian is a messenger; love, if it be love, must express itself. "Go, thou, and publish abroad the kingdom of God," said Jesus to the men he healed. "To refuse to deliver the message means to confess that we have never received it." The world is to be evangelized by laymen; the very universality of the message requires that it be delivered by all men. Jesus and the Apostles were laymen. There are a few men whom we call the clergy, intending thus to distinguish them from the laymen. But it is not their business to evangelize the world. "The clergyman gathers the laymen about him, instructs them in methods and inspires them with motive: the laymen go forth into the world, having caught the meaning of the great truth of Jesus—'the kingdom of God is in the midst of you'—i. e., not in the church edifice nor in a Zion city (John 4: 21), but right in one's own profession, wherever one has intercourse with men, there is the place where he, not the clergyman, can best accomplish the coming of the kingdom of God." And there are people whom men call missionaries, as though that title distinguished them from doctors, or engineers, or politicians. But missionary is not a profession, it is not even a location; it is a spirit, a motive, a purpose: a missionary is simply one sent, a messenger.

c. How is this transformation to be effected?

Christ's own directions are succinct. "Lift up your eyes and look upon the fields, that they are white already unto harvest."

That is, study the field, know the need, recognize the opportunity, realize such crises as those, for example, that have laid the Chinese nation today so peculiarly open to the influences of Christianity. To apprehend the present advance of the kingdom of God is a liberal education in itself. The Spirit of the living God is moving in the non-Christian countries in this year of 1913, with as great power as He ever moved in Palestine or the Roman Empire in the days of Paul. The days of the crises of humanity are the days of the Son of Man.

"Pray ye the Lord of the harvest, that he thrust forth laborers into his harvest."

That is, learn the laws of prayer and engage widely in the most strenuous intercessory prayers for the speedy coming of the kingdom, by the only means that God has appointed for that coming, human messengers to carry the message. We shall accomplish none of our ends in the mission field or in the efforts at social transformation in our own country, till we begin in great measure to release the power that can be released only through intercessory prayer.

"Go ye into all the world, and make disciples of the nations."

Become forthwith one of these messengers, with a sympathy which shall be wider than the horizons, which shall know and admit no limit of race, or language, or color, or ocean. Grasp the cosmopolitanism of the mind of Christ and act; if disciples have been made in the land where you find yourself, go to the lands where they have not been made. All the world is both a point of view and a postoffice.

Five Days in a Country in the Throes of War

BY A. EDWARD KELSEY

As I write, our ship, the "Odessa," is skirting the northern shore of Crete. I raise my eyes frequently to rest them upon one of the most beautiful snow-capped mountains I have ever seen, near the eastern end of the island.

Within an hour, we will turn due south and then cross the path of the great apostle who, in a storm-tossed vessel, was carrying the gospel of Peace to the capital city of the greatest war power the world has ever seen. This morning the sea is calm, the sun shines bright and warm, even in the heart of winter, and the sky is almost cloudless.

But for the past five days we have been in Greece, a country over which the cloud of war hangs heavily. From the time we entered the torpedoed harbor of Patras until last evening at sunset, we followed in the wake of five other vessels out of the harbor of Piræus similarly guarded. We were almost continually reminded of the awful scourge that is again devastating the birthplace of philosophy and art.

On our ship from New York to Patras there were over three hundred young Greeks returning to enter the army. They were a very small contingent of a company variously estimated from thirty to fifty thousand, who have returned for the same purpose from many parts of the United States. They have also returned from many countries in Europe. Greece now has an army of two hundred thousand in the field and with a total population of only three million, this means that one out of every fifteen of her people is now enrolled as a soldier.

Soldiers were in evidence everywhere. From the window of our compartment as we rolled into modern Corinth, we could see the ruins of the ancient city a few miles away, to the church of which Paul wrote the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians. At the same time we saw barracks and hundreds of soldiers of a so-called Christian nation preparing to engage in carnal warfare.

Wherever we went in Athens, we were reminded of war. The University, the Academy of Sciences, the Polytechnic Institute and many other public institutions have been turned into barracks and hospitals. From the Acropolis we could see companies of soldiers drilling in almost every open space about the city.

At our pension, English and German nurses were stopping, who had returned for a few days' rest from the seat of war. We took tea one afternoon at the American School of Archæology, and there met the German chaplain to his Majesty King George. He told of his arduous labors among the wounded in the hospitals.

Business is paralyzed, men have left their rightful occupations, and women and children are bearing burdens too heavy for them. At the above mentioned tea, I talked with a Greek lady of Athens. Educated in England, she told me in faultless English of her great sorrow at the resumption of the war. The look of pain in her dark face showed how deeply she felt the scourge that was afflicting her fatherland.

As we stood on the pier, waiting for the boat to take us to our steamer, a hospital ship passed us, and the poor maimed fellows with limbs and heads bandaged, stood at the rail.

And yet as I reflect, it seems that the physical damage is not to be compared with the moral. Returning to his home in Cairo for a brief furlough, is a young surgeon of the Greek army, a graduate of Rush Medical at Chicago. He has just come from the front, where he has been contending with pneumonia and typhoid, as well as the ghastly wounds of the battlefield. As I talked with him, I realized as never before, the damaging moral effect of the passions of war. The hatred of the enemy, engendered at such times must be utterly demoralizing to all the finer instincts of manhood.

As we sail away from this poor distracted country, I feel that I am a peace man as never before. One cannot see a country in the throes of war, without dedicating himself afresh to the Prince of Peace, in the power of whose gospel there is no occasion for war.

A Letter from Japan

Editor The American Friend:

Dear Friend—On the last Sabbath evening of the old year, the members of the Friends Mission, Mita, Tokyo, were surprised and gladdened by a telephone message from George H. Braithwaite, of Bradford, Yorkshire, of the Friends Provident Institution, who had just arrived from Australia. This was the beginning of a very precious fellowship, lasting until George H. Braithwaite's departure from Yokohama. During this period of ten days he attended three meetings in our meeting house.

On Sabbath morning he gave a very helpful message to the Christians. The evening meeting was attended by a number of non-Christians. At this meeting the message was based upon the words "Christ Jesus—wisdom, righteousness, sanctification and redemption," emphasizing first enlightenment, then righteousness. It is impressive to note how this fitted in with the modern trend of Japanese history. The reign of the late Emperor was designated "Meiji," "Era of Enlightenment," while the new era is called "Great Righteousness." There are indications that the name of the new era has been deliberately and carefully chosen as expressing the feelings and aspirations of the nation.

The following translation of extracts from The Japanese Friend (Ai no Tomo) will show how the visit of George H. Braithwaite impressed the Japanese Christians who have editorial charge of the paper:

"A welcome social meeting was held (at the home of Gilbert and Minnie P. Bowles) at 4 p. m. First month 7, for George H. Braithwaite, an English Friend. His zeal overflowed in his message, making our hearts burn within us. The Holy Spirit was poured out upon our hearts like oil. Crying and praying or crying and witnessing, we forgot the passing of time. Having continued for four hours, it closed at seven." Another item reads:

"George H. Braithwaite, a business man who has his membership with English Friends, is now on a trip around the world for rest and the regaining of his health. He came to Japan from Australia, via the Philippine Islands and China. He left on the 9th, sailing from Yokohama for China, thence to India and Palestine. Although he was with us for only a few days, he left on our hearts an impression which will not soon be forgotten."

To have a Friend who has been active in business and religious work at home take time and trouble to hunt up our Friends Mission, and then during his stay give most emphasis to getting in touch with our mission work, mingling in a most helpful way with the missionaries and Japanese Christians, was a cause for great encouragement. We all bear witness, with our Japanese friends, that we shall not soon forget this visit. We are always glad to welcome Friends from England or America who are enough interested in Christian work in Japan to hunt us up. Even a passing visit and a message through an interpreter may leave a lasting impression on some hearts.

Very sincerely, GILBERT BOWLES.

Resolve

BY ELLA WHEELER WILCOX

Build on resolve, and not upon regret,
The structure of the future. Do not grope
Among the shadows of old sins, but let Thine own soul's light shine on the path of hope
And dissipate the darkness. Waste no tears
Upon the blotted record of lost years,
But turn the leaf and smile, oh, smile to see
The fair white pages that remain for thee.

Prate not of thy repentance. But believe
That spark divine dwells in thee. Let it grow.
That which the unpreaching spirit can achieve
The grand and all-creative forces know.
They will assist and strengthen as the light
Lifts up the acorn to the oak tree's height.
Thou hast but to resolve, and, lo! God's whole
Great universe shall fortify thy soul.

We search the world for truth; we cull
The good, the pure, the beautiful,
From graven stone and written scroll,
From all old flower-fields of the soul;
And, weary seekers of the best,
We come back laden from our quest,
To find that all the sages said
Is in the Book our mothers read.

A Letter from Hawaiï

HONOLULU, HAWAII,
17, February, 1913.

We are delighted with the new AMERICAN FRIEND. We congratulate thee, as also the Five Years Meeting.

Enclosed please find two photos; one of Mills School (found on the front page of this issue—EDITOR), the other of our three "peace scholarship" holders (presented herewith). There are annually offered at Mills School, through the kindness of Theodore Richards, of Honolulu, five "peace scholarships" of one hundred dollars each, available to young men students of certain high schools in Japan.

Two of this year's appointees were detained, one by sickness, the other by government service. Thus there are but three now with us. I am forwarding these snap shots and this outline to the AMERICAN FRIEND to show how the influence of Quakerism is radiating. Each of these three men came from a different city of Japan. The two on the ends have studied under Horace Coleman in one of his Bible classes. The one in the middle is acquainted with Gilbert Bowles, and was so much attracted by his peace principles that he became a candidate for the peace scholarship which he now holds with much credit. The one, the part in whose hair shows in the picture, is K. Hayashi, so far as I know, the only Japanese member of the Society of Friends, in the Hawaiian Islands. All the peace scholarship boys are "making good." Such links form the surest chain of peace in time of international storm!

Heartily,
STEPHEN S. MYRICK.

With the Boards of the Church

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BOARD

The year, nineteen thirteen, is one of the most interesting years upon which the Society of Friends has ever entered. There is an atmosphere of expectancy. The eyes of the membership in all the Yearly Meetings are turning to the things and the people which give promise for the future.

Groups are gathering north, south, east and west among progressive, conservative and liberal Friends to study the glorious past, where are found the roots of our present and whence we can gain hope and confidence and enthusiasm for the future. We must believe in a great future.

Between the lines in the writings of early Friends we read of a spirit of devotion to truth which speaks to a like spirit of today. With a vision of the supreme nobleness and worth of our aim—which is to express God to human kind—comes the response of the bright spirit of youth to this challenging vision of greatness. If we believe we have a great future before us, it is our immediate duty to prepare for it.

How shall we do the work unless we know each other? The young Friends all over the world must get to know their comrades, must learn to hear the self-same voice of the Spirit as it speaks in differing lives in different places. They must learn to speak in the language and with the accent of the hearers they would ask to listen. No body of workers can succeed in their task if they have not confidence in each other and in the sincerity of purpose of each and all.

George Fox and Allen Jay spoke to young people in the language of the days in which each lived, and in the power of the spirit they revealed a God of life and magnetism, of wonderful purpose and surpassing loveableness.

Is it not possible for groups of our young Friends to get acquainted—to meet in that open-hearted freedom which seeks the realities of intimate companionship in service? If we cannot travel from one part of the country to another, our letters can. Let us start a series of group letters, which will carry real interests and feeling, not formal phrases and quotations.

Into the Society of Friends can be infused an intimate family feeling, which in the old days used to suggest the remark: "See how Friends love each other."

In the next six months there are many friends for each one of us to find among Friends.

BIBLE SCHOOL BOARD

The Bible School Board of the Five Years Meeting is anxious to be all it should be to that line of work throughout the meetings of Friends in America. The Board was appointed to promote Bible School work. One special line, that of the Graded Lessons, was to be introduced and pushed as rapidly as possible. This the Committee is attempting to do. The Graded Lessons, especially for the Primary and Junior Grades, are much more easily and satisfactorily taught. The material thus provided by the lesson committee is adapted to the age and condition of the child.

The Board is anxious to have news, notes and suggestions from schools all over the country. Any new and successful methods of work, such as building up classes, schools or departments, better methods of teaching, time of holding school, local council meetings or anything of special interest to the Bible School work, should be reported, and will be greatly appreciated.

The Board has recently joined the Federated Sunday-school Council of Evangelical Denominations of America, consisting of twenty-eight denominations with 18,490,873 members and 15,188,444 Sunday-school pupils. This puts Friends in direct touch with the latest and best Bible-school work and workers in America.

In entering this Council, Friends agree to try to bring our standard of efficiency up to the general standard for America, which is as follows: 1. Cradle Roll. 2. Home Department. 3. Organized Bible Classes in Secondary and Adult Divisions. 4. Teacher Training. 5. Graded Organization and Instruction. 6. Missionary Instruction and Offering. 7. Temperance Instruction. 8. Definite Decision for Christ Urged. 9. Offering for Denominational Sunday-school Work. 10. Workers' Conferences Regularly Held.

This means that the Board wants each Bible School amongst Friends in America to pursue work along these lines regularly, if there is any need of it in the community where the School is held. It looks like each school ought to be doing the above lines of work already and probably many have advanced beyond it.

So much the better if they have. Many have entered the fields of Personal Evangelism and Social Service, and are devising means for securing attendance upon the Sabbath morning service, all of which are very commendable.

Once a month, at least, articles and items of interest will be published, giving lines of progress and reports of individual schools.

The President of the Board is anxious to have such items, and will find a place for them in the columns of the AMERICAN FRIEND from time to time. Please send to

RICHARD HAWORTH,

Fairmount, Indiana.

Correspondence

Editor American Friend:

Dear Friend—At the recent Quarterly Meeting of West Branch Quarter the subject of Friends literature was considered, and the hope expressed that all of our Bible School literature will soon be published by our own Society.

The quarterlies and other literature, published or jobbed, in the interest of Friends is so inadequate that teachers and even the pupils of our Bible Schools have to go outside of our Society publications for our literature to use in the study of our lessons.

And yet we have as deep thinkers, as consecrated teachers, as lucid writers as any denomination. We have men who believe that "Quakerism" is a real, true, live, spiritual message to humanity. It seems to me that a few of these men would contribute thoughts, truths and discussions on the Bible School lessons, and thus build up a good live Bible School department in the AMERICAN FRIEND.

Then young Friends could find ample literature for Bible study in line with "Quaker" ideals. It would be a means of more closely uniting us, for the Bible School is the teaching and training department of the church and if Friends have to go outside of our Society for their Bible School literature, is it any wonder that our members are continually going into other denominations, getting away from the high ideals of the early Friends?

We greatly need a good live Bible School department in the AMERICAN FRIEND. One that will be an inspiration to our Bible Schools, pregnant with high ideals of "Quakerism" and the Spirit of the Master.

Very sincerely,

Ludlow Falls, Ohio,

March 11, 1913.

O. L. MILES.

[NOTE—The question of a Bible School department in the AMERICAN FRIEND is still under consideration, and is being given the most earnest attention. We are trying to plan for the future as well as the present, and there are difficulties that must yet be overcome.—THE EDITOR.]

People are always happier for having been happy; if you make them happy now, you make them happy twenty years hence by the memory of it.—Sydney Smith.

The Conference of 1887 and the Five Years Meeting, 1912

AN OUTSIDE VIEW

BY JOHN KENDALL

The Friends originally were a force of protest against the formalities and the ceremonies of the Church of England, as well as against the non-recognition of the liberty of conscience in citizenship and in the worship of God.

Planted in America, the Friends were an exclusive democracy, resting on the accomplishments and victories of their fathers and mothers,—martyrs for the Truth under English intoleration, and holding and revering individual effort and sacrifice in promoting "Ancient Christianity Revived."

They took delight in the "Holy Experiment" under William Penn and magnified it as an attraction to Dissenters with conditions from which to likewise flee. They never flinched in their "Testimony" to the "Truth" and the "Light within," but with a foundation achieved in blood and human suffering the Society declined in numbers with a position secure in history.

The Conference of 1887 seems to have been the first general and substantial co-operative effort to re-declare the Society's long standing testimonies and declarations of Faith and practice, as a protection to the many against the onslaughts and liberal interpretations and practices of a few. That conference was a setting of the first "stake" and the meetings held since, including the Five Years Meeting of 1912, have had the purpose to "strengthen the stakes," "lengthen the cords," and "enlarge the place of the tent."

It takes time for a church with the individual unit so conspicuous as it has been with the Friends, to become a full-fledged individual-blending, co-operative and constructive force.

The popularity of the meeting last year, had preceded its assembling. This fact was an element of concord amongst its delegates. It offered an incentive and an opportunity for many delegates and onlookers to visit their former home and haunts, in Indiana, all of which contributed to the prominent and social feature of the event, as well as the elimination of differences, imaginary, slight or non-existent.

Best results are obtained and attained in all deliberative bodies through the mingling and mixing of those holding adverse ideals, opinions and temperaments. Hospitality curbs a tendency to "cross paths" and "set opinions." "If thine enemy hunger, feed him,"—eat with him.

The "typical Friends' Meeting" as held during the time of the Five Years Meeting, as in all such attempts, is likely to be overdone, under-done or not done at all, and persons expecting to see such reproductions are apt to ask if such meetings have not become extinct? Or are they the result only of voluntary acts of silence, preaching, prayer and song, by individuals or congregation, without books or instrument and quotation from the Poets? If silence is the basis of a Friends' Meeting, then the basis has been pretty well shattered in actual practice.

The late Five Years Meeting was to all outward appearance distinctively a representative one. College men and presidents of colleges were conspicuous as delegates, while the men and women of experience and fewer words or less verbiage, could muse, think and listen, as good ballast or sail, in reaching the conclusion or bottom of things with or against the current. At this stage of the Five Years Meeting, it is important to note that there is developing the college and the Yearly Meeting "sphere" and "atmosphere." Which shall be the strongest force in the present or future Friends Church? The former will expect to rule by its wisdom or knowledge, and the latter by its numbers.

Another question for the future is, what shall be done with the "Fraternal Delegate"; which now seems to be an illogical adjunct,—a kind of semi-official irresponsibility, and which should have no place in a religious legislative assembly. Fraternal privilege should co-operate in and with its own wisdom and advice, practically applied. A people not lacking in religion, and having ideals alike on the same and sane essentials, ought not to be slow to find a basis of co-operation for disposing of the "goods" they hold in common. "Getting new visions" along with the "light within" of other days, "testimonies," "faith and doctrine," are valueless unless worked out by the practical machinery of "commissions" and good business form in all working units.

Has the Five Years Meeting set a new pace, "position," "constructive" and progressive, in literature and "new visions"? We shall see. There is room.

Weakness and Strength

When you and I are weak, Christ in a true sense owns the claim of our weakness, and comes to serve us with his love. Behold, how this transfigures life! The times that make us weakest, and that force our weakness most upon us, and make us most know how weak we are, those are our coronation times. The days of sickness, days of temptation, days of doubt, days of discouragement, days of bereavement and of the aching loneliness which comes when the strong voice is silent and the dear face is gone, these are the days when Christ sees most clearly the crown of our need upon our foreheads, and comes to serve us with his love.—Phillips Brooks.

Emerson's definition of a great man is one "who, in the midst of the crowd, can maintain, with perfect sweetness, the independence of solitude." It is easy to think our own thoughts and preserve our integrity in solitude. It is comparatively easy anywhere to do right in a harsh, domineering spirit which will make righteousness hateful to all who come in close contact with us. But to do always the right thing "with perfect sweetness"—that is, indeed, greatness more than royal.—Great Thoughts.

At Earlham College

Announcement has been made of the resignation of Professor Roderick Scott from the Earlham faculty to take effect at the end of the present year. For several years Professor Scott has been actively interested in the Student Volunteer work of the Y. M. C. A., and he has now accepted a position in the foreign department of the International Committee and will work in China. During Professor Scott's stay at Earlham, he has been active in the Y. M. C. A. work. He was the founder of the Mission Study Classes here, which now have an attendance almost equal to that of the Bible Study classes.

The fact that a large per cent. of the Earlham Alumni are engaged in Christian work was again emphasized last week when two of the alumni visited the college with a definite purpose of getting the students interested in various lines of church work. Thomas Elsa Jones, of last year's graduating class, came as a representative of Hartford Theological Seminary. Mr. Jones is making a tour through the western states attempting to get college men to go into the Christian ministry for a life work. He was very enthusiastic, and was instrumental in getting at least two men to decide to go into that work.

Another of the visitors was Edmund Albertson, who is traveling superintendent of the Indiana State Sunday-school Association. He met with the leaders of the Christian Associations and put before them a plan to form a Teachers' Normal Training class in the Bible Study work, and thus enable the students to be of greater benefit to their Sunday Schools, when they return to their homes. His plan was approved by the cabinet, and it is likely that such a class will be organized early next term.

During the past term there has arisen a new interest in the Friends Church among the young Friends who are attending Earlham, and each Monday morning a group of more than twenty men have met before breakfast for an hour to discuss some of the present-day problems which confront the church. Several of the faculty have been called in to bring their various problems before the Quaker Study Class. The interest in the class is increasing, and before the end of the year it is likely that almost all of the men in college who are Friends will be attending the class.

One of our contemporaries has characterized the recent evangelistic meetings of Evangelist "Billy" Sunday at Columbus, Ohio, as "the greatest evangelistic demonstration of modern times."

At Banes, Cuba

In last November, Bible Day was observed at Banes, in both the Spanish and the English services. The pastor preached on the Bible, its history, influence, etc., and an offering was taken up for the American Bible Society, which amounted to $7.00 in the English services, and $1.88 in the Spanish services.

Special Christmas services were also held and an offering of $15.55 in the English service and $4.70 in the Spanish service was received, which amounts were distributed among the needy.

Charles C. Haworth, and his native helper, Arthur Collado, attended a Sunday-school Institute in Antilla, near Banes, March 11 and 12. The institute was directed by the General Secretary of the Cuban National Sunday-school Association. The pastors and a few native workers from five nearby stations were present. The institute was held in a new brick and concrete Methodist Church which had just been opened. While the attendance was not what had been desired, the institute was very helpful to all who attended. The Methodist, Baptist and Friends Churches were represented. Antilla, though a new town, is the port of the Cuba Railroad, on the north coast, and is one of the most important ports in Cuba.

It was thought advisable to separate the boys and girls in the Banes school, so another native teacher was secured to take charge of the girls' room after the new year. She is a graduate of the Baptist school at El Cristo and a member of the Baptist Church. Bertha Lawrence's health being such that she was obliged to give up the school work entirely two weeks before Christmas, Charles Haworth has taken charge of her room since that time. In this room are the boys of the third, fourth and fifth grades. Dolores Santos, a member of Banes Monthly Meeting, has been employed since the beginning of the school year for the primary grades, and since the boys and girls were separated she has continued with the boys of the first and second grades, in which she has rendered very good service. Thus while the school work has met with several difficulties, it has continued without interruption.

A new cistern at Banes is just being completed which will insure an abundant supply of good drinking water for the pastor's and teachers' homes and for the school.

The arbitration treaty between the United States and France, concluded in 1908, and which expired on March 12, has been extended for another five years.

An Appeal for Aid

Editor American Friend:

Will thee please publish this little article. There is an old Indian woman who belongs to the Quapaw Indians, who reside right in the northeast corner of the State of Oklahoma. Her name is Elizabeth H. Tousey, and I officiated at her marriage with Benjamin Tousey twenty-five years ago. She joined Friends twenty-three years ago, and now lives in Baxter Springs, Kansas, her husband having died several years ago. She believes there should be a Friends' meeting house at Baxter Springs, where a few Friends reside. She sent for me to come there, which I did, and held a few meetings.

They have now bought a lot of ground and paid for it. It is a very nice location, and some money has been raised toward building the house. The deed was made to Kansas Yearly Meeting, and there are quite a few who are thinking strongly of joining Friends. Eli Kain, Baxter Springs, is the treasurer, and all money sent to him will be applied as desired. It is felt that local Friends will require some outside help to insure the success of the project. All money sent will be thankfully received, and will be an encouragement to the old Indian woman, who is now seventy-five years of age.

Very truly,

JEREMIAH HUBBARD,
Miami, Oklahoma.

At Dayton, Ohio

Dayton Friends are planning for a "Quaker Day," to be held on Sabbath, April 6. The regular Sabbath School services will be held at 9:30. President Robert L. Kelly, of Earlham College, will be present at 10:30 A. M., and remarks will be made by the pastor, James B. Unthank. Ira C. Johnson, evangelistic superintendent of Indiana Yearly Meeting, will have charge of the services at 7:00 P. M.

By this special effort we hope that all Dayton Friends will get together on that day. We extend a hearty welcome to all who are now Friends, as well as those who have been, whose families have been or who in any way are connected with Friends, or who are interested in them.

More than 100,000 Turkish peasant farmers have left Europe for Asia Minor, where they will take up agriculture.

The growth in population in New York City now averages 140,000 annually.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

Indiana Yearly Meeting.

Appropriate and interesting services were held at the Friends meeting at Economy, Indiana, on Sabbath morning, March 23, in commemoration of the life and work of David Livingstone. Besides sketches of his life, which were read, songs of a missionary kind were sung.

For the tenth consecutive year, the Friends Meeting at Muncie invited the railroad employees of the city to attend the services on Easter day. The invitation was accepted, and a committee of the men representing all the railroads entering the city urged the workmen to show their appreciation of the invitation by attending. An appropriate sermon was preached by the pastor, Daisy Douglas Barr.

According to a recent letter written by Emma Phillips De Martinez, of Ladero, Texas, to friends in Fairmount, Indiana, where she formerly resided before going to Mexico as a missionary, her husband, who is employed as a baggage man on a Mexican railroad, has been seized by the Mexican revolutionists and forced to work on their trains. The road upon which he worked extends into Texas. Indirectly his wife learned what had befallen him. He is a Mexican of Spanish descent, which will account for his seizure.

White's Indiana Manual Labor Institute, which is located five and one-half miles from Wabash, Indiana, is in a flourishing condition, according to reports made by the superintendent, Llewellyn Harkness, at a recent meeting of the board of trustees. Two hundred and ten children are being cared for and most of them attend school, for which efficient teachers are provided. Both girls and boys are given various duties to perform about the buildings and grounds so that they may learn habits of industry. The horse barns are to be rebuilt this summer, and possibly other improvements will be made which will add to the efficiency of the institution.

Fairmount Quarterly Meeting was held at Fairmount, Indiana, March 14-16. Visiting ministers present were: President Robert L. Kelly, of Earlham College; Aaron Napier, pastor of the meeting at Amboy; and Daisy D. Barr, pastor at Muncie. President Kelly preached on Saturday and again on the Sabbath. This was his first visit to Fairmount Quarterly Meeting and his messages were very much appreciated.

He made a strong plea for the safeguarding of the young people of the church. The attendance throughout the Quarterly Meeting was excellent, the auditorium being completely filled on Sabbath morning. On Sabbath afternoon J. J. Fred, pastor of the M. E. Church at Swayzee, gave a temperance address, the subject being "Weeds and Flowers of our Civilization." An important item of business on Saturday was the passing of a resolution condemning rifle practice and military drill in our public schools and asking our senators and representatives in Congress to veto the measure.

Fairmount Monthly Meeting at Fairmount, Indiana, is working out some of the suggestions of the Five Years Meeting in connection with the activities of the young people. The meeting is held on Wednesday morning at 10:30 o'clock. In order to give better opportunity for the young people to attend, adjourned sessions have been held that same evening, at which special business and new lines of work have been taken up. At the last meeting held March 12, the members took their suppers and ate together in the basement of the church building, after which Joseph Ratliff gave a very interesting talk on the "Work of Young Friends in the Church, Fifty Years Ago," while Frank Cornell, the pastor of the Friends Church at Winchester, Indiana, gave an excellent address on "The Early Quakers and Quakerism." At the next Monthly Meeting six young Friends will give ten-minute papers on "The Message and Mission of Quakerism." The increase in attendance has been greater than was anticipated and the interest all that could be expected. Fairmount Friends find that the young people readily respond to appeals for service. A standing committee on young people's activities has been appointed. At the meeting on the twelfth, Elizabeth Peacock presented her resignation as clerk, after having served the meeting faithfully for over forty years. Few sessions have been held at which she was not present at the desk. She came to America from England in 1849 in company with her parents.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

The Friends congregation at Minneapolis, Minnesota, has a Quakerism study class, which is proving to be most attractive to the membership. The efficient work of the chairman of the committee having the subject in hand is greatly appreciated.

Susan Berry Sisson, who spent the winter in New England holding successful revival meetings in Lewiston and Portland, Maine, preached at Penn College, Iowa, on her way back to South Dakota. She is now engaged in revival meetings in the Black Hills' towns, beginning at Whitewood, South Dakota. Nathaniel Hawks and wife, Portland, Maine, have located near Vale, South Dakota.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

A special devotional meeting, having for its theme the crucifixion of Christ, was held at the Friends Church in Kansas City on Friday evening preceding Easter. There was no sermon or address. All the exercises were of a purely devotional nature. The regular church choir of eighteen voices sang Hedden's "Story of the Cross" and other appropriate selections.

Ohio Yearly Meeting

A very successful revival closed at the Friends Church in Alliance, Ohio, on March 2. Daniel Whybrew, of Newport News, Virginia, was the evangelist and Merrill M. Coffin, pastor of the Raisin Valley Meeting, Michigan, was the singing evangelist. It was regarded as one of the best revivals held in the meeting since its establishment in 1900. The attendance was excellent and the preaching, logical, clear and strong, was given in a spirit of genuine love. About seventy-five persons were saved, reclaimed or sanctified. We thank the Lord for the coming of these two men of God to us.

A series of meetings beginning March 2, and continuing two weeks, has just closed at Tecumseh, Michigan, conducted by Daniel G. Hodgins, of Brighton, Michigan. Merrill Coffin, pastor at Raisin Valley Meeting, assisted in the singing. The gospel was clearly preached, and the meetings were well attended. Some backsliders were reclaimed and a number converted, especially among the children. Two mass meetings for boys and girls brought many together who are not accustomed to attending Friends meeting, and we believe that much good was done. Many Christians bowed at the altar to pray for others, and some sought and found the blessing of sanctification.

Oregon Yearly Meeting

About twenty persons were received into membership at the last monthly meeting at Newberg, Oregon, held on March 5.

The Friends' choir at Newberg united with the Presbyterian choir in giving a sacred cantata, "The Crucifixion," by Stainer, on Sabbath evening, March 16. The chorus consisted of thirty voices, and was trained by Mrs. C. B. Wilson, leader of the Friends' choir.

The Oregon State inter-collegiate oratorical contest was held at Wood-Mar hall, Pacific College, Newberg, on March 14. This is the big event in Oregon college life, and is participated in by eight colleges and universities. Pacific was well represented this year by Meade G. Elliott. Following the contest, a six course banquet was served to the hundred and fifty delegates, with the woman's auxiliary to the college catering.

Following their attendance at Portland Quarterly Meeting, Arthur and Eliza Dann, of England, came to Newberg on Sabbath, March 9, remaining until the 13. Services were held each evening with an exceptionally good attendance. On Wednesday evening Arthur Dann gave a most comprehensive address on "Quaker Belief." Many members of other congregations joined in the service, and one pastor dismissed his regular prayer meeting to attend. The Dannels did lasting good among the students at Pacific College also, conducting chapel each morning and holding private conferences with students.

Western Yearly Meeting

Enos Harvey, pastor at Bloomingdale Meeting, preached an able missionary sermon on the 16th inst., and reviewed in an impressive way the life of David Livingstone. On the evening of the 19th a union service by the three Sabbath Schools of Bloomingdale was given in the Friends meeting house in honor of the Livingstone anniversary.

Under the pastorate of Noble Trueblood, the meeting at Laporte, Indiana, is doing good work. The Christian Endeavor Society is increasing in membership while every branch of the work is most encouraging. A struggle has been going on for several years to get a Friends Meeting established here. Recently the meeting has been transferred from Kokomo Quarterly Meeting to Chicago Quarter.

The fellowship class of the Union Street Friends Meeting at Kokomo, Indiana, held its business meeting and social in the church parlors on the evening of March 14. Following the election of officers, an excellent short entertainment was given which brought out the fine musical ability in the class. A lively contest was held, after which the young people were invited to the dining room where refreshments were served.

Wilmington Yearly Meeting

Homer C. Biddlecum was recorded a minister by Springfield Monthly Meeting last November.

The W. F. M. S. of Wilmington, Ohio, Meeting gave a Livingstone program to a large audience on Sabbath evening, March 23. Twenty-four new members have joined this society this year, making a total membership of one hundred and twenty.

Woolman's Journal in Japanese

We find the following in the Westonian for March, copied from a recent issue of the Quarterly of the F. M. A. of Friends of Philadelphia:

"The Representative Meeting of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting has kindly offered to pay for the translation and publication of an abridged version of John Woolman's Journal and Biography in the Japanese language. Last spring, Ann Sharpless kindly consented to select passages from the Journal, and then with her permission, the marked copy was sent to Japan, that our missionaries, who are familiar with the present situation there, might make any suggestions they thought advisable. They gratefully endorsed the selections and returned the copy to Ann Sharpless, who spent many more hours in preparing a biographical introduction, and connecting the selected passages by biographical notes. The manuscript was then submitted to the Representative Meeting, and, after careful examination by the Book Committee, was fully accepted. The manuscript has been sent to Japan for translation. The Foreign Missionary Association is grateful to Ann Sharpless and the Representative Meeting for their interest and co-operation."

APRIL 13

SUBJECT—JACOB AT BETHEL.

GOLDEN TEXT—"I am with thee, and will keep thee whithersoever thou goest."—Genesis XXVIII: 15.

APRIL 13

TOPIC—"I can do all things."—Phil. IV: 4-13. (Honorary Members' Meeting.)

Paul was not a theorist. He spoke ever from the depths of his own varied experiences. He had suffered persecution and shipwreck. "Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and a day I have been in the deep; in journeyings often, in perils of water, in perils of robbers, in perils of mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren; in weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness," all this and more had been his lot.

Yet the old apostle was not discouraged. By faith he looked through all that was yet to come, and felt the energy of the spirit re-enforcing every purpose, every endeavor. Undaunted by any environment, and conscious of the frailties of the flesh, his eyes beamed with courage as he looked upon the Son of God, and he exclaimed, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me."

Forevermore let the timid ones take heart; let the faithless believe; let the tired ones feel the rest that comes to the children of God; let the discouraged rejoice in the victories that are yet to be; let the sorrowing ones be glad and look up with the Christian's hope. There are no discouragements to the heart of faith.

"I can do all things," that is, things that are worth while, things that are right, that are ennobling, that are of good report.

Courage is ever the attribute of those who demonstrate their ability to overcome. Such was Paul's experience. Such may be the experience of all whose lives are continually refreshed by the presence of the blessed Christ.

A special court before which delinquent girls can be brought has been opened at Chicago in connection with the juvenile court.

The number of lynchings in the United States for 1912 was the smallest since 1885, with one exception.

With the Children

A Child's Prayer

Father in heaven, hear my prayer;
Then close with kiss of sleep my eyes.
I thank thee for the loving care
That mother gives me when I rise.
I thank thee for good things to eat,
And for the hours of happy play,
For grass and flowers beneath my feet,
And all the beauty of the day.
I thank thee for my many friends—
Four-footed ones, and those that talk;
That I can sleep when daylight ends,
That I can see and hear and walk.
O, make me strong and clean and kind,
And help me, God, to love the best,
That I the truest life may find,
And in thy loving arms may rest.
—Charles A. Murdock.

Keeping At It

There is a very old but very good story about a boy who was engaged one winter day in putting a ton of coal into a cellar. His only implement was a small fire shovel. Noticing this, a benevolent old gentleman expressed his surprise and commiseration.

"My son," said the gentleman, "you surely do not expect to put in all that coal with that little shovel?"

"Oh, yes I do," replied the boy cheerfully. "All I have to do is to keep working at it."

There is a lesson in this story for young and old, and it is exemplified in the lives of the great men of the world. It is a mistake to suppose that the best work of all the world is done by people of great strength and many opportunities. "Keeping at it," is the secret of success.—Unknown.

Was It?

Little Mary went into the country on a visit to her grandmother. Walking in the garden she chanced to spy a peacock, a bird she had never before seen. She ran quickly into the house and cried out:

"Oh, grandma, come out and see! There's an old chicken in full bloom!"

One Monday morning Daisy volunteered to superintend the family washing. When Nora put the clothes on to boil, the little overseer gave one astonished look, then ran to mamma, exclaiming, in great excitement: "O mamma, mamma, Nora's cooking the clothes!"

To Children

THE REV. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN

Not little children only, nor yet alone to children grown old in years with only memories of innocent childhood back of them and pictures in their minds, which ever and ever again bring tears to their eyes as they see them, but to all alike.

Be considerate. If there are burdens upon stooped shoulders, lift them; if there are aches in hearts that have been beating for many years, soothe them; if there are tears in eyes that ought only to shine with smiles now that life's work is almost done, dry the tears with sympathetic touch or tender voice; if the years are not so many and the burdens not yet so heavy, cheer your parents at the beginning of the journey, that they may be better strengthened for all that is ahead.

But remember that boys grow into the strongest manhood and girls come into the most beautiful womanhood when they start life's journey with their mother's Savior and their father's God, and if the first step has never been taken and the years have lengthened, and you have all but forgotten the lessons of earlier days, stop a little while and think, and if you can not be a child again in years, you may, like a little child, enter into the Kingdom of Heaven. The one who stands beckoning you is Jesus.—Chicago Tribune Company.

A Beaver's Working Day

A young beaver in Regent's Park Gardens, London, was once placed at work upon a tree twelve feet long and two feet six inches thick, just as the town clocks sounded the hour of noon. The beaver began by barking the tree a foot above ground. That done, he attacked the wood. He worked hard, alternating his labor with dips in his bathing-pond. He bathed and labored alternately until four o'clock in the afternoon, when he ate his supper of bread and carrots, and paddled about in his pond until half-past five o'clock. Ten minutes later, when only one inch of the tree's diameter remained intact, he bore upon his work and the tree fell. Before it fell the beaver ran as men run when they have fired a blast. Then, as the tree lay on the ground, he portioned it out mentally and began to gnaw. He worked at intervals all night; cut the log into three parts, rolled two of the portions into the water, and reserved the other third for his permanent shelter. The work done, he took a bath.—Harper's Weekly.

Edith came home from kindergarten in a state of excitement. "O mamma," she exclaimed, "we don't have to go to school tomorrow!" "Why not?" asked mamma, smiling. "Because teacher says it's vaccination day, when Bridget left Boston." Mamma thought a moment, and then remembered that the next day was the anniversary of Evacuation Day, when the British left Boston.

Keep our hearts tender;
Keep our souls pure;
Keep our sight clear;
Keep our steps sure;
Keep our faith firm;
Keep our hands free;
Keep our hopes bright;
Keep us with Thee.

—George Rittenhouse.

FLY TO PIECES

The Effect of Coffee on Highly Organized People

"I have been a coffee user for years, and about two years ago got into a very serious condition of dyspepsia and indigestion. It seemed to me I would fly to pieces. I was so nervous that at the least noise I was distressed, and many times could not straighten myself up because of the pain."

Tea is just as injurious, because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.

"My physician told me I must not eat any heavy or strong food and ordered a diet, giving me some medicine. I followed directions carefully, but kept on using coffee and did not get any better.

"Last winter my husband, who was away on business, had Postum served to him in the family where he boarded. He liked it so well that when he came home he brought some with him. We began using it and I found it most excellent.

"While I drank it my stomach never bothered me in the least, and I got over my nervous troubles. When the Postum was gone we returned to coffee, then my stomach began to hurt me as before and the nervous conditions came on again.

"That showed me exactly what was the cause of the whole trouble, so I quit drinking coffee altogether and kept on using Postum. The old troubles left again and have never returned."

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Bring In My Tithes

"BRING in my tithes," the Lord hath said:
"Let plenty in my house be found,
And I will bless your store of bread,
And make your oil and wine abound.

"Bring in your tithes, let God be tried;
Give me my share of every good;
And I will throw heaven's windows wide,
And pour you blessings like a flood.

"Bring in the tithes of hearts and hands,
Of toil and skill, of tongue and pen,
The love that flies at my commands,
The strength that lifts the load from men.

"Bring in the tithes of prayer and praise,
Bring all for God, and ye shall prove,
With grateful joy through all your days,
My glorious power, my boundless love."

—The Evangelical.

AUTHORIZED BY THE FIVE YEARS MEETING OF FRIENDS IN AMERICA.

SUBSCRIPTION PRICE, $1.50 A YEAR.

Suffering by Flood

Friends at Dayton, Ohio, and in West Indianapolis, Indiana, have suffered considerably by the recent floods. At Dayton several Friends' families were left practically destitute, while others suffered severely by the waters.

Unexpected relief came when a telegram was received by Friends at Richmond, from interested Friends in Germantown, Pennsylvania, asking if a committee here would apply any money that might be sent for the relief of Friends and others, especially in Dayton. An affirmative reply was sent, and a substantial sum of money came, which is being used judiciously by the local committee here, which has visited Dayton and gained first-hand knowledge of the situation.

The water flooded the meeting house in West Indianapolis, and many members of the meeting have suffered, but their necessities are being looked after by members of the First Church in that city.

Individual Friends in several other localities have suffered property loss, in common with others, but no cases of destitution have been reported to us thus far, other than as above related.

Executive Committee to Meet

The Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting will convene at the South Eighth Street Friends Meeting House in Richmond, Indiana, at 9:00 o'clock A. M., April 22. The question of the General Secretary, provided for at the last Five Years Meeting, will be considered in detail, and it is probable that that officer will be chosen. It is expected that other important problems will be considered at length. The Committee is made up of the Chairmen of the various Boards and Committees of the Five Years Meeting, with an additional member from each Yearly Meeting not represented by a Chairman. The Central Committee, consisting of the Chairman and Secretary and three other members of the Executive Committee will meet the day before.

Our Gains in Circulation

New subscriptions continue to drift into the AMERICAN FRIEND office, but how slowly they come. The campaign is as yet hardly under way, and we will endeavor to be patient. The new ones this week number twenty-two, while the discontinuances jump to the distressing total of thirty-three.

The situation, however, is not as serious as the figures indicate. For some days we have been making a determined effort to collect delinquent subscriptions with the result which might be naturally expected; that some are dropping out of the ranks. Here are some suggestions which ought to be read and re-read, and then read again:

1. Hundreds of Friends, who are abundantly able to do it, can render valuable service both to the AMERICAN FRIEND and the Church, by sending us the subscription of one or more families that are not in position to pay for it.

2. Each subscriber now on the list can take a few minutes to solicit and secure one or more other subscriptions, and forward the same to this office.

3. Every pastor ought to feel the obligation of seeing that every family in the congregation or congregations served, is given an urgent invitation to become a subscriber. The effort should be repeated as long as necessary. Every family needs the paper and the paper needs the patronage, and the pastor, as in all other denominations, more effectively than anyone else, can interest the entire membership in this product of the Church.

4. Our young Friends especially, should find a field of service in trying to interest our various Friends' communities in this periodical.

5. Send us the names and addresses of persons to receive sample copies, and then follow it up by soliciting their subscription.

All this is in addition to plans which are in process of operation at the AMERICAN FRIEND office. One of the greatest needs of the Society of Friends just now, in every local meeting, is a revival of tremendous interest in this denominational periodical. Think what it will mean to have a twenty-four page paper or larger, making weekly visitations to the majority of Friends' families in America, and how much it will mean to every department of our church life. There is no need more commanding at the present time. Papers of other denominations have more than doubled their subscription list since the first of the year. Friends can accomplish the same result with the AMERICAN FRIEND if they will.

The record from January 1 to April 5, is as follows:

"O love that will not let me go,
I rest my weary soul in Thee;
I give Thee back the life I owe
That in Thine ocean depths its flow
May richer, fuller be."

All service ranks the same with God;
There is no last nor first.

The Need of Clear-Sighted Vision

"Open thou mine eyes."

The cry of the Psalmist ought to be the cry of humanity. It marks the crest of man's aspirations. To see, to be possessed of a vision, to understand, to know; these are achievements, whose value can only be measured in eternity.

There are so many unseeing eyes; men without vision, who see only the surface of things, who are content to touch the merest fringe of great problems, who calculate not beyond the present. The easy way is the rut that has been marked by long usage, and may be trodden by the blind as well as those who see. The unexplored regions of wealth and beauty demand clear eyesight, and the understanding which comes from undimmed vision.

How much it means to see things in their right relationship; to be able to study with proper grasp, world problems and community problems, which in the final analysis, are merely human problems; to discern the intricacies of man's relationship to the infinite Jehovah; and with true prophetic vision, comprehend the laws which operate in both the natural and spiritual sphere of God's great domain! The march of empire, the building of civilization, as against the life of the primeval age mark the difference between sight and blindness, between knowledge and ignorance.

The Psalmist's cry was not for natural vision, but for intellectual and spiritual eyesight. It was a protest against contentment with the commonplace. It proclaimed an aspiration to be able to look into the deep things of God. "Open thou mine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law." It was not enough that he possess the ordinary understanding that would enable him to escape the penalties of God's decrees. The customary interpretations would not suffice. His soul had felt the tug of unseen forces, and the determination was born to study the mechanism of man's deepest problems.

The church is praying today as never before for an open vision. It is seeking to meet the highest tests of efficiency. Credal walls are no longer a bar to the fraternity of discipleship. The goal of Christian effort is world evangelization. The apostolic fervor needs to be paralleled by a present day organism that will master the modern problems of this mighty century. "Open thou mine eyes." The cry of the sweet singer of Israel should be the cry of every soul that would do exploits for the Master.

Some of Our Denominational Dangers

It is now six months since the Five Years Meeting wrote that splendid record of purpose and plan at Indianapolis. Its story has been told by many a fire-side, and recited in scores of our local meetings. Hundreds have caught the inspiration of the vision which came to the assembled delegates, and their hearts have been warmed in anticipation of the awakening which would stir the Church to its remotest boundaries.

The lapse of time has been sufficient to raise the question of the fruitage of that epochal occasion. Wherein has the Church gained; in what manner has its purposes been realized; by how much have we moved forward to more strategic ground? Are our plans still in the forming, and if so, are we progressing toward the realization of our hopes? What has actually been done in the line of constructive work that gives speedy assurance of the larger life that was the vision of that assemblage at Indianapolis?

We are well aware that the time is not ripe for full answers to these pertinent questions. It takes months and even years for large activities to culminate in the richest fruitage. But it is none too early to take an account of stock, and observe the trend of recent developments. While we are conscious that important results have been the outgrowth of the Five Years Meeting, we confess to a feeling of disappointment that the tendencies have not been more marked. It has been easier to talk in general terms about our denominational vision, about our enlarged opportunities, about the awakening that is upon the Church, than it has been to take hold of the problems and work them out constructively in terms of concrete procedure.

It is no disparagement to suggest that possibly the Society of Friends in America has not yet found its work with any large degree of exactness, nor is it any reflection upon the splendid achievements of these past years to admit the possibility that both our mission and our message are yet in process of formulation. For a half century our denomination has been in transition; has been feeling its way out of formalism, toward the light, toward freedom, toward a larger life. Starting with the revival period, which had its first beginnings about the time of the Civil War, and culminating in the plans for a more definite Quaker polity and a better organized mechanism of denominational procedure, which was the burden of the last Five Years Meeting, the Church has progressed marvelously toward the realization of its hopes and its aspirations.

But to expend our energies now upon generalizations, when the time is ripe for definite construction, is to miss the opportunity toward which we have been tending these past decades. If the Five Years Meeting lacked at any point, it was in the failure to define with exactness the mission and scope of our activities as represented by the Boards of the Church. A wise general lays out his plan of campaign and then rallies the component parts of the army, with assignment of definite duties to each department. Could the convention at Indianapolis have defined the Quaker polity with accuracy, setting forth the mission of the Church in terms of adaptation to present day necessities, and then issued a clarion call to our membership to rally to the support of the working Boards of the Church, we might now be witnessing the whole Church alive, with energies well directed toward the accomplishment of well defined purposes.

As it is, the various Boards and Committees have been left largely to find their own particular sphere of activity, and rally the Church to participation in their various endeavors. Thus it is that a responsibility devolves upon the Boards of more than ordinary importance, the responsibility of devising policies in large part as well as plans, about which the Church may be rallied in a forward movement, that will mark Quakerism as an aggressive, constructive, evangelistic force, adapted to the present day needs of individual, community, national and world life.

It is quite possible that our Quaker polity as applied to this day and generation will have to be defined practically in the terms of service which characterize our various denominational machinery. Ordinarily men will respond to the call of duty more clearly, when it can be reduced to definite terms. Quakerism will mean more to the whole Church and to the world it touches, when our Boards can command the service of our membership as the result of a clear and comprehensive presentation of plans and methods, which require immediate attention.

Many members are inactive because they do not know what to do; because the call to service has been too general to command their serious attention. Others feel impelled to do something as a matter of conscientious duty, without understanding clearly the purpose of their aim. Organism is impotent without the intelligent co-operation of all the membership that should be enlisted with well defined intent.

There is urgent need that the Boards of the Five Years Meeting attempt without further delay to co-ordinate their work with the corresponding departments of the various yearly meetings. Otherwise, there will be unnecessary duplication of effort and possible friction and deplorable misunderstanding. Under existing conditions, and in the absence of greater legislative authority on the part of the Five Years Meeting, the work of these Boards for the most part must necessarily be directed toward supplementing and re-enforcing the work of the Yearly Meeting Boards. On the other hand, the Yearly Meeting Boards need to learn that they are no longer independent agencies, but for the sake of greater effectiveness should harmonize their plans and operations with those of the Boards of the general body. It is only by such co-ordination of effort that the best results can be secured.

There is a real danger that our plan of Church organism, as now constituted, will fall down at the points we have indicated. Under our dual system of government and operation, it is easy to shift responsibility, and still easier to scatter our energies in glittering generalities. These are matters which may well claim the serious attention of the Executive Committee at its sessions to be held within a few days. In our opinion there is no problem more vital to the future of our denomination. The Lord will give wisdom when we once apply ourselves to the task of adjustment.

What will be the Harvest?

We have now entered upon a campaign for the enlargement of the subscription list of the AMERICAN FRIEND, as set forth in recent numbers. We appeal to pastors and interested Friends generally in every local meeting to press the claims of the paper vigorously, insistently, upon every family. The paper needs the patronage, and our membership needs the paper. There is not a local Friends Meeting in America that cannot turn in from one to fifty new subscribers before July 1. We want to hear from the whole Church.

The King's Work and the World's Work

BY RODERICK SCOTT

II. WHERE IS THE BEST AND BIGGEST WORK?

That is, in what part of the world is this transformation most needed? One principle and three facts condition the answer to this question.

a. Those persons most need the message who have never heard it.

b. In 1912 there were 24,000 Protestant missionaries reported for the non-Christian world. But there are in the state of Indiana alone, 17,000 teachers: one profession, whereas, the 24,000 missionaries represent all the professions.

c. In China there are a thousand cities with a population of 10,000 people each, and without a single missionary. But the mere buildings in New York City which are devoted to benevolent and religious purposes, if placed side by side, would stretch without break from the Battery to Yonkers, twenty miles.

d. In four-fifths of the world there is one-fifth of the workers for the kingdom; in the other fifth are the other four-fifths of the workers. " 'Like a mighty army moves the Church of God,' in the hymn-book, but not in Western Asia," writes Dr. Samuel M. Zwemer, missionary to the Mohammedans. "They sing 'Onward, Christian soldiers!' at home," wrote Dr. E. H. Richards, when he went alone into East Africa, twenty-five years ago, "so they must think there are at least two of us."

This is as much as to say that the best and biggest work is in the four-fifths of the world, where the one-fifth of the workers is. And the reasons for this will be the reasons for what are called foreign missions.

1. Their reasons. In general, it is safe to say that the people of the non-Christian world, of the four-fifths, are bound physically, intellectually, spiritually, socially, by despair, sadness, sin. Their own religions cannot save them; they have been weighed in the balance and found wanting. "In the study of comparative religion, one fact has never been sufficiently emphasized," says Dr. Zwemer, in his "Unoccupied Mission Fields of Africa and Asia," "the non-Christian religions have had their trial in the lands which we call 'unoccupied fields of the world' unhindered, undisputed and without Christianity as a rival or aggressor for centuries. How far have they tended to uplift society, to develop civilization, to transform character and bring peace to the soul? Have these religions themselves, in their long history, and in their full possession of lands and lives, developed or deteriorated? If the light that is in them has become darkness, how great is that darkness?" Those who hold that we have no right to 'thrust' our Christianity upon the non-Christian peoples, because they have already religions of their own, or that Animism is good enough for the Central African and the Papuan, or Buddhism good enough for the Japanese, or Hinduism good enough for the Indian, or Confucianism good enough for the Chinese, or Mohammedanism good enough for the Turk, the Persian, the Arabian; these people are terribly mistaken; they speak without knowledge of the facts; they welter in ignorance; the truth is not in them. Christianity alone can deliver the non-Christian peoples from their bondage and their darkness; sufficient reason for 'thrusting' it upon them, even if Jesus himself had not always spoken in universal terms. "Come unto me all ye that travail and are heavy laden." "Even so it is not the will of your Father who is in heaven, that one of these little ones should perish." "God our Savior," writes Paul, in First Timothy, "who would have all men to be saved, and come to the knowledge of the truth."

But there are particular reasons why and particular places where Christianity is peculiarly needed.

China is about to undergo a tremendous revolution, industrially, socially, religiously. Under the pressure of international commerce and the development of her railroads and her mineral resources, she will change from an agricultural to a manufacturing nation. The Chinese have been a marrying people, but the emancipation of woman and the entrance of woman into industry will postpone the age of marriage and create a totally new social problem. They have been a religious people, but when they recognize fully, as they now recognize partially, that Confucianism has no message for a modern century, they will become an irreligious people. History shows how sad and cruel have been these upheavals in semi-Christian countries: the French Revolution of 1798; the industrial troubles in England in the early nineteenth century. Chief Justice Fuller once made a great address upon "The United States a Christian Nation;" but think of child labor and the sweat-shop, of the liquor traffic and the white slave trade, of dynamiting by labor unions, and the murder record of Chicago. How terrible will be the readjustments of society in a non-Christian country, with all the aid of the material benefits that go with civilization, but unidealized. Imagine the utter horror of the problems of capital and labor in a heathen civilization. Only Christianity can save China.

India must soon undergo the overthrow of her caste system. Will there not then result such social revolution as only a Christian nation can withstand?

Though defeated politically in Turkey and Persia, Islam is fighting a winning battle for the religious conquest of Africa. The Christian soldiers in Africa represent but a corporal's guard; but every Mohammedan trader is a missionary of the False Prophet. Did Stanley call the Congo "Darkest Africa"? Yes, and pagan Africa is bad and dark, but Africa, still pagan, with Mohammedanism super-imposed upon it, is far worse, far darker, far more impervious to the Christian advance. For the sake of the tribes themselves, for the sake of the struggle of Christianity with Islam, should we not at this time carry the war into Africa?

2. Our reasons. The reasons that we, the people of the one-fifth, of the United States and Europe, may advance in support of foreign missions for our own sake are as follows:

a. Political and industrial. The nations which are about to accept the politics and industry of modern civilization, will be a menace to the rest of the world, if they do not accept Christianity. The unchristianized Oriental can underbid and underlive the Occidental five hundred per cent. When America gets into industrial competition with a nation whose workers can live on wages of two dollars a month, America will have to go out of business. Unchristianized China will inevitably arm herself for aggressive revenge upon the powers who have spoiled her. What chance in war would the United States with a population of one hundred million have with a nation of four hundred million?

b. Social. Here a great spiritual law must be invoked, a law frequently overlooked, save in its application to individuals. But there can be no doubt of its equal application to churches, communities, countries, nations.

"He that saveth his life shall lose it, and he that loseth his life for my sake and the Gospel's, the same shall save it unto life eternal."

Sin is the cause of social destruction and degeneracy; and the center of sin is selfishness.

This means that as an individual gets power for his own battles and tasks by Christian service, by giving himself; so no church can hope for solution of her problems of self-support, community interest, etc., until she give herself to the great outside cause of the Kingdom; no nation can hope for success in her peculiar social and industrial difficulties until she give herself to the tasks of the world.

"It is expedient for you that I go away."

A man must give of himself; a church must give of her young people; and a nation must literally give of her men and women; if they are to save their lives. "For every dollar you give to the foreign work," says Jacob Riis, "God sends ten dollars worth of moral energy and courage to go on with the struggle at home." It is the law of self-sacrifice.

"Only when the Gospel has been laid down upon all the problems of life," in the words of John R. Mott, "will it give its full power to deal with any of the problems of life. Jesus will be Lord of all, or not Lord at all."

Aspects of Worship and Service

BY JOHN W. DORLAND

Can it be true that preaching and the preacher have lost their hold upon the masses; that no longer can the church dominate and sway public opinion; that while once it was considered a great thing to dedicate one son in the family to the ministry, now the sons as a rule go into business, or take up a profession that will at least assure them a better livelihood? We feel that the above question may be answered in the affirmative.

The great problem today is not the filling of pulpits, though more and better preachers are needed, but how to reach the unchurched thousands that throng our streets. Certainly the church today is not doing so. Quoting from an address by H. T. Hodgkin, M.A., of England, on the "Contribution of Friends to the Life and Work of the Church," delivered at the last Five Years Meeting, he says:

"That many workingmen have been practically unable to develop the higher side of their nature on account of the conditions of labor, is generally admitted. The movement for higher wages and better conditions of work is after all, something more than the expression of a grievance against capital. There is the deep yearning for a fuller life. This great aspiration the churches should recognize and seek to meet. Speaking for my own country, I can say that one of the great obstacles with which the churches are confronted in dealing with the workingmen, is the suspicion of the mercenary spirit. To the workingman the clergyman is paid to do a certain job and must justify his existence. Of course, this is a prejudice which is soon removed when the man gets into such personal relations with the minister as to feel the heartbeat of a true friendship, but often these personal relationships are hindered through the prejudice referred to. Do not these facts suggest that there is a need for one section of the church, which has not this disability and whose ministers are all laymen?" We feel that the conditions in this country are very similar to those in England, with regard to the attitude of the workingman to the minister.

The world must be redeemed by the toil of consecrated individuals, and not by a one man system, and it is just here that the Society of Friends steps in. We believe in the priesthood of believers, that a man or woman may be a minister of the gospel who gains his or her livelihood by other means than preaching. It is to be feared that in many Western meetings there is a drifting away from this belief, and that more and more the whole weight of the public ministry is put upon the shoulders of the pastor. The fact that he or she is expected to preach anyway, tends to shift the responsibility very often where it does not belong. Many a faithful pastor tries to overcome this, but try as he may, he is handicapped by the system under which he works.

There can be little doubt that the pastoral system has come to stay in the West, and yet it could be modified in some ways to more fully measure up to Friends ideals of worship. In some of the larger meetings there may be several ministers. Instead of having them sit in the body of the meeting, why not have them on the platform with the pastor? This always lends weight and dignity to a meeting for worship, and would probably help to make them feel their responsibility in a larger degree. As members of the Friends' Church, we must be distinctive in our methods of worship and service, if we would be a power in the community in which we live. We cannot afford to merge ourselves with the methods of worship adopted by other churches, when to do so means submersion. More than ever before other denominations are coming to our thought with regard to these things, then why not be faithful? Why not set ourselves to the glorious task of building up a church that will be alive to the needs of the day, and yet be infused with the spirit of the past, that called forth the expression: "That one live Quaker in a community could shake the country for ten miles around?" The church must be built on a co-operative plan.

There is one practice that is still kept up among the conservative Friends, that was and is a mighty power when used by those who have been filled with His Spirit, and who are especially adapted to this service. I refer to the personal work in the home, which is now relegated to the pastor. We can all remember the "sittings" that often occurred in the old home, when some Friend traveling in the ministry, or from the local meeting, called the family together for a season of worship, and how we were blessed at those times. Many Friends of the present day can trace their conversion to just such "sittings," and it is this personal work in the home that enlarges and magnifies the church, for many young people are not reached in any other way. The hope is that ministers may have this special and important work laid on their hearts, and that ministers who may be located in churches where the pastoral system is in force, may be faithful in doing their duty with regard to this matter.

There seems to be an impression among many young Western Friends, that to be a minister among Friends one must be a pastor. Of course, this idea is wholly wrong, for pastoral work is a distinct calling in itself, as is evangelistic work, mission work, teaching, etc. A spirit-filled individual may have talents as a minister, who would make a poor pastor,—of course, a combination of the two is ideal.

It is a cause for thankfulness that so many young Friends are arising to the sense of their responsibility, but under the pastoral system as it is worked at present, it is a matter of doubt whether many young Friends will be coming out in the ministry, because they have little opportunity to learn to preach. Speaking is an art that has to be cultivated, whether it be on heavenly or earthly things. The Christian Endeavor meetings are a help, but inadequate, as the atmosphere of a meeting for worship is lacking, and it is only here that the right type of ministry is developed. If the evening service were occasionally turned over to the young people, and the pastor asked to give helpful criticism afterwards, which could be done privately to each one that took part, this would be found a great help.

Most of the Friends Colleges have special courses of study which are planned to prepare young men and women for work in pastoral, missionary, and other fields. Those who have felt called to make a speciality of some phase of religious work, certainly have every opportunity for preparation, but the hope is expressed here, that business and professional men may feel the burden as well, and when this comes about, then and only then, will our church be measuring up to the full stature of Christ.

Again referring to H. T. Hodgkin's address, he says: "I am not maintaining that there is no place for the supported minister. You in America, have found for him a larger place in the special conditions of your life than we have among Friends in England; but even here I am persuaded that you recognize to the full the primary thought that a man is not paid for his services or in proportion thereto, but that he is simply maintained in order that he may fulfil the ministry which has been entrusted to him. Is there not also great value in the insistence upon the fact that the ministry of the church is not dependent upon the laying on of hands, or any other outward ceremony? The supreme and only indispensable qualification for the Christian ministry is the Divine call, habitually responded to. Any man or woman so used of God is thereby constituted a Christian minister. The part of the Church is to recognize such ministers. It is not only the mere fact of his salary which makes the workingman shun the parson. It is the thought of a class set apart, different from the ordinary man in the street. Are we making full use of the advantages we possess through having our business men engaged in the active ministry of the Church? If we have broken down the barrier between lay and cleric, have we not at the same time done something to remove the barrier between labor and the Church?"

The Church then needs to be reminded perpetually that the ministry is not the work of a class but of all, and that the service of Christ is not a profession but a free will offering!"

Pasadena, California.

The Spirit of Optimism

The very fact that we are still here carrying on the contest against the hosts of annihilation proves that on the whole the battle has gone for humanity. The world's great heart has proved equal to the prodigious undertaking which God set for it.

Rebuffed, but always persevering; self reproached, but ever gaining faith; undaunted, tenacious, the heart of man labors toward immeasurably distant goals. Discouraged not by difficulties without or the anguish of ages within, the heart listens to a secret voice that whispers: "Be not dismayed; in the future lies the Promised land."—Helen Keller in The American Issue.

"He who follows love's behest Far excelleth all the rest."

The L. T. L.'s of Pop Corn Valley

"To resort to slang, the committee on arrangements for Pop Corn Day has 'done its do' for amusements; but without any spare time or spare place it seems presumption on our part to attempt to inject a serious thought upon the pleasure seeking crowd," said a white ribboner, adding, "But the brave little Salvation Army found a time and place sandwiched in between the many amusements last Pop Corn Day, and 'where there is a will there is a way,' I suppose. We just must provide something beside wandering the streets for our children. We have our rest tent and literature for the mothers under the shade trees by the hall; but children as well as grown-ups" pass by on the other side like the Levite and leave us to nurse our chagrin with our temperance tracts. So this year let's have the children take the tracts with them.

"A little child shall lead them," where often we world-wise grown-ups fail to lead those blinded by greed for pleasure and gain. Town children all love a ride in a hay rack and we will trim it up with bunting and flags and let them have a miniature band with them, and sing some jolly little temperance songs. Though this is a "dry" town, let them sing, "Nebraska's Going Dry," and "Marching from Georgia," that will draw the old soldiers." With such songs and a few good temperance recitations from their perch in the rack, the truth will be brought home to the pleasure seekers who would cast tracts aside in the street along with the empty pop corn sacks.

They bought a mammoth popper this year, costing $75.00, and are prepared to give away 11,000 sacks of corn. That would make many a little popcornless child's mouth water. But there in Pop Corn Valley, where over twenty carloads of popcorn are shipped in a year, it is not so much of a treat. "If we had an L. T. L. here that program might be carried out with the children, but as it is, it will prove a failure," piped up a Mrs. Sanballat. "On the other hand, it is first aid to our injured, broken ranks without an L. T. L., and may be the answer to our prayers for one. We needn't expect to keep our children off of the streets unless we get something to take the place of the street," retorted the more hopeful white ribboner. Merrily the plans went forward with the enthusiasm of youth as the leaven. When the eventful day arrived the parade of the children attracted more attention than all else. And as their band struck up the grand old tune, "Marching through Georgia," set to temperance words, old soldiers fell into step and almost drowned the childish voices as they joined in the chorus:

"Hurrah! Hurrah! We'll vote the jubilee!

Hurrah! Hurrah! Columbia shall be free!

Swell the Dixie chorus, from the mountains to the sea,
Nebraska is proud to follow Georgia."

This children's parade on the morning of the first day proved to be the ballast needed by young and old during the days that followed. "'Twasn't half as hard as I 'sposed it would be," laughed one of the boys when leaving the hay rack. "Thought I'd outgrown my mother's apron strings, but they're the best anchor for a boy after all, 'specially if they're 'white ribbon strings.' Somehow, I don't feel like soiling her white ribbons by smoking the cigars the fellows are giving away at the shooting galleries on every corner. Let's give those brave little white ribboners a 'tip' and let them get after guys that are giving cigars to little shavers like Jimmy Gleeson."

Thus the "leaven" was working, and when it was discovered some cases of liquor had been shipped in for the occasion, those in authority made a thorough investigation, bringing the offenders to court. And though by some loophole in the laws of commerce the temperance folks lost the case, the bugle note of warning had been sounded, and the serpent of intemperance would be less brave, since the children had taken up rocks to hurl at him whenever he was in sight.

When Will Peace Come?

As to asking such a Question

To one who feels sure that permanent, universal peace will never come to the earth, this question is foolish and ridiculous.

To one whose vision penetrates farther into the future than is permitted to most men, the question is useless; or it may be painful, since it seems to such an one to betray on the part of the questioner the kind of weakness which always accompanies doubt.

To most of us, however, who see the beauty of the ideal and hope for its realization, and yet are able to hold our beliefs firmly only as we have some proofs which we can see and touch,—to most of us this question and a definite answer to it are again and again felt to be necessary.

The dark side of the Situation

It is now nearly fourteen years since the first Hague Conference met, a Conference which was called for the avowed purpose of devising some means for preventing an increase of the burdens, which the nations were then carrying on account of preparations for war; but in spite of all that has been said and done in the cause of peace from that time to this, the burden has increased and the demands of the military departments of at least some governments have been greater the past year than ever before.

Again, the wars which have occurred since 1899 furnish a record so dark as almost to blot out the vision of the early realization of world peace, which men began to see when the Czar of Russia issued the call for the first World Conference on disarmament. There was the South African War, which was in its beginning while the delegates were gathering at The Hague in 1899, and that bloody, cruel struggle went on for three years. There was the fearfully destructive Russo-Japanese War in 1904 and 1905. And there is now just closing the Balkan War, which has repeated the old story of butchery and savagery in the name of progress and freedom. Besides, there are numerous minor outbreaks to be considered, which may or may not deserve the name of war, such as the taking of Tripoli by Italy, and the uprising in Mexico, cases in which conditions did not permit the destruction of life and property on such an enormous scale, but in which the spirit and purpose of the combatants has been in no way different from that which animated those engaged in what are called first-class wars.

Furthermore, the failure of the Senate of the United States to ratify the General Arbitration treaties with Great Britain and France in the form agreed upon with the Department of State, has seemed to many a most discouraging proof that we are making little real progress toward the realization of our hopes for the reign of permanent peace between the nations. If such facts do not give just ground for the conclusion that world peace is still as far away as it was in the days of Alexander, or of Napoleon, or of Lee and Grant, what is the fair and just interpretation of these facts of our recent history?

The really greater Truth

A famous saying credited to one of the great historians of the last quarter of a century applies here precisely. In substance it is this: "Men are not to be judged so much by what they are, as by what they are becoming." The principle here stated applies also to nations as well as to men; and it applies to the progress of the peace movement among nations as fully as to any other national characteristic. It is not to be expected that all wars should cease suddenly. Causes have been operating which can result only in war, and we shall no doubt for awhile continue to reap what has been sown. President Jordan has said in regard to the Balkan War, "The problem comes to us too late for any act of ours to be effective. The stage was set, the actors chosen, thirty-four years ago, at Berlin, in 1878. * * * Is it not true that while Turks rule aliens for the money to be extorted, there can be no peace between them and their subjects or their neighbors?" Presence of wars now and for years to come proves only that the conditions which lead to war were made years ago, and the fearful results must come until those conditions are changed. Changing such conditions is a fundamental part of our work; and as proof that the change is going on, witness the 534 cases in which international disputes, since the beginning of the nineteenth century, have been settled by arbitration or by some judicial process instead of war. These cases and the fact that The Hague Conferences have met, indicate the direction in which we are going a thousand-fold more certainly than do all the wars of the past one hundred years.

When will peace come? In years, we cannot answer. But we can say with absolute confidence that it will surely come when the peace principles which in these latter years are gaining ground so rapidly, shall have worked their perfect work. Meanwhile, it is worth our most careful thought to try to determine what is the most effective work that we can do to help change the conditions which ripen into war. The space allotted to this article is too small to permit a discussion of the fundamental causes of war. This suggestion is, however, offered: Peace between nations is hastened most rapidly by those influences which lead men to find soul-peace between themselves and God. In this kind of work for international peace we should all now and continually have a part.

Correspondence

To the Editor and Readers of the American Friend:

Dear Friends—As far as I have observed, the articles which have appeared in print concerning the recent Five Years Meeting have, at the time of this writing, all been from persons who attended it.

I write as one of the many who would have been glad to have been present, and who shared the deep interest in, and solicitude for, the occasion, which was felt by concerned Friends generally. And I desire to say that I too have seen the vision of the enlarged horizon, and of greater things, present and future, for our denomination; and a great inspiration has come to me also.

In analyzing this inspiration to discover its specific source or sources, I find that it has its rise primarily in the action of the meeting by which it approved the Richmond Declaration and George Fox's letter as statements of our belief. This is true because of the imperative need at this time of our reaffirming as a body, the Truth as set forth in these documents; and also because this action made possible united, constructive work, afterward provided for on the several important lines.

Other sources of inspiration are, the unity of spirit and of purpose that were discovered, the awakening among our younger members, and a centralized administration for the co-ordination of our forces.

The fact that we seem to have "found ourselves" is of great import, as is also the establishment of a Publication Board. The possibility of and provision for a periodical which is the official organ of the Five Years Meeting, is significant of the time of day in American Quakerism. I sincerely hope that there will be a faithful adherence to the direction given by the meeting, "That the policy of publication for the paper and for other literature, shall be positive and constructive in its relation to the welfare and interests of the Society of Friends, and to the faith of Friends as expressed by the Five Years Meeting."

To this end let us pray, remembering especially the editor of the AMERICAN FRIEND, that he may be given spiritual insight, wisdom and courage for his responsible position and difficult task. And I wish to remind all of his earnest call to prayer made through the AMERICAN FRIEND of First month ninth; and urge every reader to re-read the editorial entitled "A Denomination Communing With God," and then give himself or herself to prayer as indicated, that there may be a great awakening of our membership, and that as individuals we shall be insulated, like the wire that transmits the electric current, separated unto God, and the work to which He has called us, "through the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Spirit."

The great blessing that attended this Five Years Meeting followed upon months of earnest prayer; and the victory of this epoch-making occasion was won before its sessions convened. And now, to realize the vision which we have seen, and to fulfil our mission, will require yet more persistent prayer and faith. But if we go forward with God-given wisdom and courage, in obedience to the heavenly vision, the omnipotent energy of the Holy Spirit will vitalize all of our activities, and God shall be glorified through the gathering into His kingdom of many that are at our own doors, and of those that are beyond the seas.

Sincerely,

Oskaloosa, Iowa.

ELLA C. COFFIN.

Our Part in the Ladder

Christians are in the world to make it easier for other people to get to heaven. The ladder that Jacob saw at Bethel, reaching from earth to heaven, is fulfilled in Christ. As suggesting our part in that ladder, Dr. Jesse Lyman Hurlbut has well said: "We should be stepping-stones to heaven, not stumbling-blocks. Christ revealed himself as the way, and we, as members of Christ, are part of that way." For we are members of the body of Christ; members of him whose life was poured out and whose life is now lived to connect heaven and earth, God and men. In this marvelous mission of Christ's he would use every member of his body, and use us all the time. Do all our actions, words, looks, and thoughts, suggest heaven to those about us? Have we realized that Christ is equal to even this miracle-use of our lives?

—S. S. Times.

People who are made of the right kind of material do not make excuses; they work. They do not whine; they keep forging ahead. They do not wait for somebody to help them; they help themselves. They do not wait for an opportunity; they make it. Those who complain of "no chance" confess their weakness—their lack of efficiency. They show that they are not equal to the occasion—that they are not greater than the obstacle which confronts them.—O. S. Marden.

Yearly Meeting House Burned

The disappointing news has reached us that Western Yearly Meeting House, at Plainfield, Indiana, burned on the evening of March 28. At the time it caught fire the oratorical contest of Central Academy was being held in the room occupied by Plainfield local meeting. While the room was full of people, all escaped without injury. About everything of value was rescued except from the room upstairs, which was fitted up for the primary department of the Sabbath school. This room was a total loss. The fire caught from a defective flue. The property was well insured, but this will not cover the loss. The daily papers report a loss of $14,000.00, with insurance of $6,000.00. The walls are still standing, and it is thought by some, can be used in rebuilding. The insurance has not yet been adjusted. The plans for rebuilding will be in the hands of the Trustees and Permanent Board.

Friends locally have arranged a temporary place of meeting in the assembly room of the Academy. Services were held there on the following Sabbath and it serves the purpose very well. With the class rooms it makes an excellent place for the Sunday-school. E. J. Carter is serving the meeting as pastor.

The house was built something like sixty years ago, although it has been remodeled in recent years. The news of its destruction will be a disappointment to many because of sacred memories and as an old landmark.

At Muncie, Indiana

The affairs of the Muncie Friends Memorial Church are ever taking an onward move.

The Easter services were very impressive through the entire day. At night the tenth annual meeting of the railroad men and their families was held, and was well attended, Daisy D. Barr, the pastor, giving a very able address, which caused much comment. An editorial from the Muncie Star commenting on her sermon was as follows: "The expression of the pastor, 'neither man nor God has respect for a lazy man,' is true and is made manifest in all His creation. Every element in nature is moving in its own sphere of activity for purification. If the air or water ceases to move, they become impure, and impurity breeds disease and inactivity. If the mental and physical forces in mankind becomes inactive, except in repose of sleep for their recuperation, then this condition breeds disease with mental and physical degeneration and final decay."

If such a movement could be made by many of our churches to get our traveling men in the business world together on such occasions, no better means could be devised for the spreading of the Gospel to the uttermost parts of the earth. We understand these men are already distributing bibles through some national society, but if not already done, such a movement would bring good results near to their homes and hearts.

During this service, as in all other services of the church, the quiet time was observed, in which everyone has the opportunity for thoughtful meditation. The inauguration of these annual meetings for railroad men, which are always held at the Friends Memorial Church at Easter time, was a happy thought of Charles E. Hiatt, a former pastor, who is now located at Marion. These railroad meetings, as well as many factory meetings, have given Mrs. Barr a great place of service in the city.

The service rendered by this worthy pastor, not only to the church but to the city's well being, is very commendable. She is constantly being called to give addresses, to all the different working classes, which are always highly appreciated.

Notes from Haverford

Silas Mcbee, editor of the new religious Constructive Quarterly, visited Haverford recently, and was given a dinner by the faculty. He explained his plan to create a great international religious journal, with the mission to bring together more closely all branches of the Christian church in the world. The occasion was a most inspiring one, and Friends everywhere will be interested in the first number of the Quarterly, which has just appeared. The number contains an article by Rufus M. Jones.

Dr. Hugh Black, professor in the Union Theological Seminary, New York, has recently spent a week at Haverford. The idea of his visit was mainly to bring about a personal discussion between the students and himself, which would lead to something of permanent religious value to the students. He carried out a set program during the week, including Fifth-day meeting, and upon each occasion he was most impressive and inspiring to all who heard him. His first introductory lecture, "Christianity and the Modern Man," was based upon the fact that men should make a universal application of Christianity, disregarding the dangers which are so liable in our modern times to engross the mind of any thinking individual. He also mentioned the modern spirit of criticism and the scientific spirit of the age, which, he said, are two all-important factors in the deepening search for truth and the firm foundation of doctrine. Last of all, he laid stress especially upon democracy as the keynote of modern Christianity and the means to the end of a common Christian brotherhood. His presence at the Y. M. C. A. drew one of the largest meetings of that body during the present year, and it was by far the most impressive, due entirely to his applicable subject, and his inspiring method of approaching it. Several classes also enjoyed him, and groups of students availed themselves of opportunities during the week to come into more personal contact with him and to gain perhaps, some benefit thereby. Indeed, his presence at the college was appreciated fully by both faculty and students, and his lecture, together with all his other addresses to the undergraduate body, were greatly enjoyed by all.

In Florida

Mrs. Belle C. Baily, of Richmond, Indiana, read an excellent paper at the Florida Sunday-school Convention on "What Friends are doing in Missionary Work." She spoke of the educational work being carried on in the different departments of the Friends Church, in the hope that the children may grow up with the missionary spirit as a part of their life.

The talk was an inspiration to young and old to do more and better work for the missionary cause. After a plea for more of the union spirit in missionary work, Mrs. Baily closed with the following story: An old farmer, hearing a discussion of the various churches as to which one was right, finally said: "I have been carrying grain to mill a good many years, and I do not always go the same road, but when I get there, the miller doesn't say, 'Which road did you come?' He says, 'Is your wheat good?'"

Florida people except at St. Petersburg, know very little about Friends, and for this reason, as well as for the able manner in which she represented the denomination, I was glad to have her on the program. One woman at the convention said: "You surely have talent in the West."

A Y. W. C. A. Worker

The White House becomes an active center of ethical and spiritual influence with the advent of the Wilson family. Miss Jessie Woodrow Wilson, the second daughter, is an indefatigable worker for the Young Women's Christian Association, and in its interests has written a very comprehensive article on its work for the Good Housekeeping magazine. This article, fully illustrated, is to appear in the forthcoming April issue.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

Baltimore Yearly Meeting

Sylvester Jones attended Friends meeting in Washington City on March 23rd, and his services were most satisfactory. He was present both morning and evening. On the evening of the 26th, Henry W. Coffin gave his lecture on "The History of the Underground Railroad," at the meeting house. Friends generally were present and some visitors. A pleasant social occasion followed.

California Yearly Meeting

The meeting in San Diego is growing nicely, and Friends are very active in mission work, both home and foreign. Friends who visit the coast are invited to visit San Diego, and attend the Friends Meeting there.

Edna H. Chilson successfully underwent a serious operation at Whittier, California, in January. Her run-down condition of health has made her recovery tedious, but recent reports are encouraging. Arthur Chilson writes: "The Lord has been very, very good, and now she is recovering rapidly, though still very weak."

Berkley Quarterly Meeting was held at San Jose February 28th to March 2nd. The attendance throughout was larger than for many years, when held at San Jose. The new parsonage was dedicated on the afternoon of the 28th, and the pastor, Emma F. Coffin, and her daughter, moved into it on March 4th. During Quarterly Meeting, the ministry of Levi Gregory, Abijah J. Weaver and Charles H. Stalker was clear and in the power of the Spirit. Charles Stalker held meetings each evening from March 16th to the 23rd, to the blessing of all who attended. We earnestly ask all Friends interested in the advance of the Master's kingdom, to pray for the meeting here at San Jose.

Canada Yearly Meeting

Arthur and Eliza Dann expect to be in Ontario four weeks, commencing April 27th, and hope to hold meetings in Toronto, Newmarket, West Lake, Norwich and Pelham.

It is announced that Clarence W. Pickett, at present completing his studies at Hartford, Connecticut, has accepted the invitation of Toronto Friends to be pastor of that meeting. He hopes to be with them not later than this coming June.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

Friends generally will regret to know that Timothy Nicholson has been confined to his home for several weeks with a swollen foot. He is thought to be improving, but is not able yet to be out. Otherwise his health is good.

In the debate between Earlham College and Albion, Michigan, at Earlham, on March 21, Earlham won the honors, taking the affirmative of the question, "Resolved, That the president should be elected for a term of six years, and be ineligible for re-election."

Professor David W. Dennis, who spent the winter in Arizona for his health, has returned with his wife to his home in Richmond. On April 6, he preached his closing sermon as pastor at South Eighth Street Meeting. Francis Anscombe, a minister from Canada, now in Earlham College, has been selected as pastor of South Eighth Street Meeting to serve until Yearly Meeting next autumn.

We have received the news of the sudden death of Isom P. Wooten, who has been serving as temporary pastor of the meeting at Seattle, Washington. On Sabbath, March 30th, he attended meeting as usual, and died suddenly on the following day of hardening of the arteries. He was known widely among Friends as a minister and as a leader in the denomination. We hope to have an obituary notice later.

Fred T. Hollowell, of Earlham College, who recently won third honors in the Indiana State Oratorical contest, won first place at Valparaiso, Indiana, on Friday evening, April 4, in the State Oratorical Peace contest, his subject being "Economic Fallacy of War." Later he will contest with winners of four other states in a group contest, preliminary to a final contest at Lake Mohonk, in which fifteen states are interested.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

Lindley A. Wells conducted a series of meetings at Bear Creek, Iowa, from February 27th to March 16th. A number took a decided stand for Christ.

The revival meetings which were held by the Friends of Des Moines, with Eli H. Perisho, pastor of the Friends Church of Indianola, as evangelist, closed March 23rd. All churches of Des Moines held meetings, commencing March 16th and closing on Easter Sunday. Dr. Perisho preached the gospel with demonstration of the Spirit and with power. The church was strengthened by the meetings.

Announcement has been made of the Christian Workers' Assembly of Iowa Yearly Meeting, to be held at Earlham, Iowa, June 16th to 20th. One day will be devoted to each of the following subjects: Bible Schools, Christian Endeavor, Missions, and Evangelism. Special attention will be given to Friends History and Doctrine, Bible Study and Pastors' Conferences. In addition to local speakers, Frank W. Dell, of Nebraska, Richard Haworth, of Indiana, Richard R. Newby, of New York, and Charles W. Sweet, of Indiana, are expected to be present.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

William R. Harris and wife, of La Harpe, Kansas, celebrated their Golden Wedding on March 15th. After an elaborate dinner, it was insisted by the children that the marriage ceremony according to the old time custom of Friends should be performed again. Some appropriate singing followed, together with the reading of two poems composed by two of the daughters. At the last came the distribution of valuable presents, consisting of gold, silver and other articles to the value of something like $40.00.

Nebraska Yearly Meeting

After four and a half years as pastors of North Loup and Pleasant Hill meetings, Ellis and Clara Wells are leaving the Nebraska field in answer to a call from the Stanton Friends, at St. Joseph, Illinois. While their "work has been owned and blessed of the Lord," and their sojourn of eleven years in the West has been pleasant, they are glad to return to their home yearly meeting.

New England Yearly Meeting

Rufus M. Jones, of Haverford, Pennsylvania, will be present at a Conference of Friends Fellowship Groups and Young People Societies in New Bedford, Massachusetts, on April 19, and will speak upon Fellowship and Ministry. Sessions will be held at Friends Meeting House, Spring Street, as follows:

Informal Conference at... 11:30

Afternoon Meeting at..... 2:30

Evening Meeting at..... 7:00

All are invited to be present at these meetings. Entertainment will be provided by New Bedford Friends, and those expecting to remain over First-day are requested to notify Sarah D. Holmes, 14 South Sixth Street, New Bedford, Massachusetts.

New York Yearly Meeting

Representatives of the Society of Friends appeared before the judiciary committee of the New York Legislature last week to advocate a bill whose purpose is to prevent the use of a religious name or organization in trade without the consent of the chief officers of the denomination. Scores of articles, it was shown, are on the market under the name "Quaker" as a trade mark, including whisky, breakfast food, laces and various articles of clothing. The protesting Friends say they have suffered long in silence, but think it is time now that they should have protection from the state against this trading upon their name. They certainly have a sound basis for their objection, since there is no doubt that to many the word "Quaker" carries with it a certain pledge of good quality—a promise unfortunately not always fulfilled. On the other hand, manufacturers using the name oppose the bill on the ground that to abandon the label would kill their trade.—Indianapolis Star.

North Carolina Yearly Meeting

Word has been received of the death of Josiah Nicholson, at his home at Belvidere, North Carolina, on March 30. For many years he has been a leader in North Carolina Yearly Meeting, and was known widely among Friends. We hope to have an obituary notice later. He was a brother of Timothy Nicholson, of Richmond.

Oregon Yearly Meeting

Arthur and Eliza Dann, of England, were much blessed in the presentation of the truth to the Friends and others of Newberg, from the 9th to the 12th of March. They came direct from Portland Quarterly Meeting, where they had given very acceptable service. While in Newberg they spoke in the regular meetings for worship on First-day, and during the next three days had service in day meetings at the meeting house, in addresses and private conferences at Pacific College, in the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A., meetings at the high school, in the Christian Endeavor meeting, and in evening evangelistic services. On their last evening Arthur Dann gave a special message on the meaning and mission of Quakerism, which attracted a large audience, largely of those who were not Friends. The Methodist Church dismissed its regular prayer meeting, and pastor and people came to hear the message. Much real good remains as the result of their work at Newberg.

Western Yearly Meeting

News has been received of the death of George T. Nicholson, in California. While residing in Chicago, he was spending the winter in California for his health. For many years he has been vice-president of the Santa Fe Railroad, living formerly at Lawrence, Kansas. He was a son of the late William Nicholson, known to Friends throughout America as a prominent member of Kansas Yearly Meeting, and later of California.

The Boy I Love

Can you tell me why I love him?
 Little face all speckled brown;
 Little hands so often grimy,
 And his hat with rim turned down.
 Can you tell me why I love him?
 When he comes from school or town,
 Smiling all the way so sweetly,
 Thanking all for favors shown.
 And upon each Sabbath morning,
 When church bells peal their chime,
 Off to Sunday-school he's going,
 And he's always there on time.
 O! I'll tell you why I love him,
 For within his little breast,
 Warmly beats his heart for others,
 While he tries to do his best.

How to Have Your Own Way

This is a secret which we would like to whisper to the boys and girls, if they will put their ears down close enough.

You have long wanted your way. You have become tired of hearing mother say, "Come right home after school," "Don't be late," "Be sure to tell the teacher." It is "Do this, and Don't do that" all the time. You are sick of it, and would like to have your own way.

Well, put your ear down while we whisper the word, "Obey."

Oh, you think I am making fun! No, I am not. I know a boy who decided to do just what his father said. He never offered excuses, never tried to get out of work, until finally, his father came to trust him perfectly. His father said: "I know that Harry will do what is right." When he went out at night, or to school, or to play, his father never said a word, for he had come to have perfect confidence in his boy.

Honestly, obedience is the road to freedom. If you want to have your way, just begin to obey, and you will find that you are having the happiest time of your life.—Apples of Old.

Two Boys

"There are two boys I know," Uncle Ben began, who started in the spring to have the finest gardens in their part of the country. They both spaded and raked and planted all sorts of things, and had a great time generally getting things going. Then I noticed that one of them seemed to have plenty of time to go swimming and fishing all summer.

The other chap was in his garden a good part of the time quarreling with the weeds and making friends with the stuff that he had planted."

Uncle Ben here stopped to shake his head reflectively.

"Seems as if things were not divided evenly between those two boys. The one who worked hard all summer had all the hard work when harvest time came, too. The other chap hadn't a stroke of work to do in his garden then—there wasn't anything there to harvest. He didn't have any of the bother the other fellow had afterward, either—planning what to do with his crop and his money. It seemed as if work and bother fairly dogged the other boy's footsteps just because he carried through what he had set out to do in the beginning. Too bad, wasn't it?"

Uncle Ben chuckled jovially to himself as he appealed to his hearers for sympathy for his hero.—Comrade.

The Book of Thanks

"I feel so vexed and out of temper with Ben," said Mark, "that I really must—"

"Do something in revenge?" inquired his cousin Cecilia.

"No!—just look over my Book of Thanks."

"What's that?" said Cecilia, as she saw him turning over the leaves of a copy-book nearly full of writing in a round, text-hand.

"Here it is," said Mark, and he read aloud: "'March 8—Ben lent me his hat.' Here again: 'January 4—When I lost my shilling Ben kindly made it up to me.'"

"Well," observed the boy, turning down the leaf, "Ben is a good boy, after all."

"What do you note down in that book?" said Cecilia, looking over his shoulder with some curiosity.

"All the kindnesses that ever are shown me. I do not forget them, as I might do if I only trusted to my memory. So I hope that I am not often ungrateful; and when I am cross or out of temper, I almost always feel good-humored again if I only look over my book."

A teacher was explaining to a little girl how the trees developed their foliage in the springtime.

"Ah, yes," said the little miss, "I understand; they keep their summer clothes in their trunks!"

Spring Magic

Little maid, with curls a-shining,
 Listen to a story, now,
 Of a sad and sober country,
 Not a bird on any bough.
 Not a flow'ret in the meadows,
 Never sang a brooklet brown,
 Cloudy skies bent low above it,
 Tiny snowflakes fluttered down.

Little maid, with gray eyes dreamy,
 Listen to a tale so true,
 How the country grew all joyous,
 Leaflets danced and skies were blue;
 Happy birds were chirping, twittering,
 Brooklets soft began to sing;
 Did a fairy work such magic?
 Yes, that fairy's name was Spring.

Being upbraided by her mother for being the lowest in her class, little Mabel exclaimed in tones of injured innocence:

"It ain't my fault. The girl who has always been foot left school."

A little girl had a kitten. She was very fond of it, and it was a great delight to her to hear it purr. One night she was restless, and her mother said:

"Cynthia, why don't you lie still and go to sleep?"

"I can't," answered the little one, "papa purrs so loud."

TRAINED NURSE

Remarks about Nourishing Food.

"A physician's wife gave me a package of Grape-Nuts one day, with the remark that she was sure I would find the food very beneficial, both for my own use and for my patients. I was particularly attracted to the food, as at that time the weather was very hot and I appreciated the fact that Grape-Nuts requires no cooking.

"The food was deliciously crisp, and most inviting to the appetite. After making use of it twice a day for three or four weeks, I discovered that it was a most wonderful invigorator. I used to suffer greatly from exhaustion, headaches and depression of spirits. My work had been very trying at times and indigestion had set in.

"Now I am always well and ready for any amount of work, have an abundance of active energy, cheerfulness and mental poise. I have proved to my entire satisfaction that this change has been brought about by Grape-Nuts food.

"The fact that it is predigested is a very desirable feature. I have had many remarkable results in feeding Grape-Nuts to my patients, and I cannot speak too highly of the food. My friends constantly comment on the change in my appearance. I have gained 9 pounds since beginning the use of this food."

"There's a reason." Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville" in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

APRIL 20.

TOPIC—Favorite Verses I. In the Psalms. Ps. XIX: 1-14.

Have you ever stopped to think how depleted would become our literature, and with what sadness millions of men and women would contemplate the prospect, if all the familiar bible texts were blotted out of existence? In every department of civilized life these texts are quoted with frequency. Lawyers pleading before the jury, politicians upon the stump, lawgivers, educators, philanthropists, no less than Bible school workers and preachers quote the old texts with a freedom that is surprising.

But nowhere are the favorite verses of scripture more highly prized than among the saints of earth, who value them as the Father's message to his children. How the texts we learned as children remain in memory, and with what solace do they cheer the heart amid the multitudinous trials and vexations of life!

Many a discouragement has been banished at the remembrance of "Let not your heart be troubled." Many a lonely heart has been cheered as the words have been repeated, "Ye are my friends." Many a fear has vanished at the Psalmist's expression of confidence, "The Lord is my Shepherd." Many a tired sin-sick soul has found a haven of refuge in John III: 16. Many a bewildered mind has been flooded with light by the assurance that, "The Lord is my light and my salvation." Many a troubled life has found deliverance because "God is our refuge and strength."

How these promises multiply when we begin to think of them! "Thy mercy is great." "We shall do valiantly." "From him cometh my salvation." "How amiable are thy tabernacles." "For a day in thy courts is better than a thousand." "Create in me a clean heart; O God." "Lord, thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations." "For evil doers shall be cut off." "Thy testimonies are very sure." "Bless the Lord, O my soul." "The angel of the Lord encampeth round about them that fear him." "I love the Lord, because he hath heard my voice and my supplications." "The fear of the Lord is clean, enduring forever." "The statutes of the Lord are right, rejoicing the heart." "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet." "The Lord shall preserve thee from all evil." "The Lord hath done great things for us."

A New Movement

The largest club of girls and women in the world has entered the field of social service. The Girls' Club of The Ladies' Home Journal has undertaken to raise among its members a fund of $1,200.00, to be used for endowing a perpetual scholarship in medicine for Chinese women at the Union Medical College for Women, located at Peking, China, with the understanding that the successive beneficiaries will devote their services to the neglected and suffering among their own sex. June 1, 1913, is the date set for the completion of the fund, and The Journal has promised to subscribe to one-half of the fund, $600.00, if the members of the club, by small individual contributions, will make up the remaining $600.00. Only members of the Girls' Club are to be allowed to contribute to the fund, and the money must be earned through personal effort.

From Whittier's "Palestine"

AND what if my feet may not tread where He stood,
Nor my ears hear the dashing of Galilee's flood.

Nor my eyes see the cross which He bowed Him to bear,
Nor my knees press Gethsemane's garden of prayer.

Yet, Loved of the Father, thy Spirit is near,
To the meek, and the lowly, and penitent here;
And the voice of thy love is the same even now
As at Bethany's tomb or on Olivet's brow.

O, the outward hath gone!—but in glory and power,
The SPIRIT surviveth the things of an hour:
Unchanged, undecaying, its Pentecost flame,
On the heart's secret altar is burning the same!

Our Gains in Circulation

We appreciate deeply the many evidences of genuine interest in the movement to increase the circulation of the AMERICAN FRIEND. From far and near this interest is being manifested, and many helpful suggestions are being made.

Already steps have been taken to secure an active canvass of a number of Friends communities, and new subscriptions continue to come in almost daily. We are longing for the time, however, when dozens and scores of new names will be added to the list, where now they are coming in by ones and twos.

The initial steps are now being taken at the AMERICAN FRIEND office which we hope will put us in communication, in the near future, with every local meeting of Friends in America. But these plans will fail, unless we have the hearty co-operation of interested Friends in every community. What is done here should not in any sense lessen the obligation of meeting suggestions made in previous issues relative to what Friends may do individually. Briefly summarized, these are as follows:

1. Interested Friends can subscribe for one or more other families, which apparently are not able to take the AMERICAN FRIEND, or which have no inclination to do so.

2. Each present subscriber can undertake to get one or more additional subscriptions from his friends and acquaintances.

3. Pastors should feel the responsibility of seeing that every Friend's family in the meetings served are earnestly solicited to subscribe.

4. Young Friends can do much by pressing the claims of the paper, and each should be a regular reader of this periodical of the Church.

5. Send for sample copies to be sent to those who are to be solicited for subscriptions.

The East Main Street congregation of Richmond, Indiana, has decided upon a most practical and comprehensive scheme for getting the AMERICAN FRIEND into every family of the meeting. At their request the name of every family not now taking the paper is to be entered upon our list for at least two months, interested Friends being responsible for the payment. At the end of the period, the meeting under the leadership of the pastor, Truman C. Kenworthy, will canvass each family and secure payment for every subscription that is possible. It is probable that a small fund will then be raised to help in any case that may be needed. In this one instance there is a strong probability of from 40 to 50 new names being entered as permanent subscribers for a year at least.

This earnest effort on the part of this pastor and congregation is commended to the attention of scores of others, well able to finance and carry through such a project.

The number of new subscriptions entered the past week is 25, while the discontinuances total 13. The record by Yearly Meetings since January 1, is as follows:

Non Omnis Moriar!

BY HENRY YOUNG OSTRANDER

My soul sings on! My spirit's life endures

Beyond the sleep and grieving of love's grave and tears;

My mind's sane thought its ego's self secures

Against the cynic sophistry that sneers,

"All human hope is vain, and Faith's false phantom lures!"

Ah, would to God! if only now we could Still more Immortal Truth and Beauty see;

But I do know—what here in us was good

Shall There live on, far better yet to be!

And though down death's dark valley all must tread—

For some it may be after years of pain,

Believe me—do not call them dead;

Remember—they will rise again!

So then, dear heart, hold fast thy Faith and Trust,

And let Love sing life's sweetest Song, not sigh;

When earth reclaims her own in "dust to dust"—

Ah, No! NOT ALL SHALL DIE!

Brooklyn, New York.

When Jesus Christ says that he has overcome the world, he means that his conquest is the pledge of ours. If he had failed, we could not have succeeded. It is because he has succeeded that we cannot fail. These are Christian promises; these are Christian delights; these are the joys of the sanctuary.—Joseph Parker.

Never to tire, never to grow old; to be patient, sympathetic, tender; to look for the budding flower and the opening heart; to hope always, like God; to love always—this is duty.—Amiel's Journal.

Happy and strong and brave shall we be—able to endure all things, and do all things—if we believe that every day, every hour, every moment, of our life is in His Hands.—Henry Van Dyke.

After the Revival—What?

When one compares the in-gathering of converts following every revival period, with the meagre annual increase in membership, not only of Friends, but practically all the denominations, a problem is presented that is at once as serious as it is important. Practically without exception, the number of converts reported apparently bears no relationship to the growth of the Church roll, so far as denominational totals are concerned. Nor is this all. Among Friends at least, the instances are comparatively few where the accessions to the Church during a given year are discernible when the Recorder foots up the totals of membership at the close of the fiscal year.

From 1910 to 1911 the number of Friends in America decreased more than 800, yet we are quite certain that there was the usual number of revivals with an average number of converts and accessions to the membership. From 1911 to 1912 the record shows an increase of 92, a number, while gratifying as compared with the previous year, yet sadly out of all proportion to the reported harvesting. Since the first of January last, about 600 accessions to the Church have been reported in the columns of the AMERICAN FRIEND, while about 1,400 have been reported in the list of converts, renewals, or others who have received a definite blessing.

In all probability, these reports are only a fraction of the total accessions and conversions in all the Yearly Meetings. What a full year's record will reveal is problematic, but the chances are that the reports of accessions to the membership made to all the Yearly Meetings this year will run into the thousands rather than hundreds.

Whether or not this increase will be apparent in the totals of membership when the rolls are finally made up for 1913, is the problem we are confronting. We are quite aware that church efficiency is not dependent, except in a limited sense, upon the number of adherents at any given time. But we are quite sure that there will be general rejoicing throughout Quakerdom, if at the end of the year, the in-gathering of members is revealed in a correspondingly increased membership roll. If this be not realized, wherein is the leakage, and where lies the solution to the problem?

Incompleteness of system in reporting membership totals has in the past accounted for a minimum of this discrepancy, but that is probably a negligible element in the problem today. The leakage is too pronounced to be accounted for by any such reason.

The problem is not easy of solution. Some have laid the responsibility for this leakage upon the methods of evangelism in vogue today. It is charged that sensationalism and high pressure procedure have superseded the saner methods of soul winning, with the result that converts do not stand the test of practical Christian living, when the enthusiasm of the revival season has waned. Probably the criticism is not without some justification. Hot-house Christians do not thrive well amid the practical realities of this work-a-day world. And it cannot be denied that there are some hot-house revivals.

But they who stop here have not solved half the problem. They forget that there are revivals and revivals, and the counterfeit is evidence that the genuine does exist. It will hardly do to say that all the evangelistic endeavors of the Church are to be discarded, because now and then an evangelist wins converts to himself rather than to Christ. The Church must probe deeper if it finds the true solution of this vital problem. It is so easy to stop with surface diagnoses. Symptoms do not always readily reveal the nature of an intricate and complicated disease.

In our opinion, the time has come when the Church must begin to study conservation, both as applied to its energies and its membership, in a way which it has not attempted hitherto. The duty of holding converts and making them a necessary part of the working organism of the Church devolves upon the Church, not upon the evangelist. And the Church cannot escape its responsibility in this direction, regardless of the peculiar methods which may have been used at the time of the in-gathering.

The Indianapolis ministers who were recently quoted by a daily paper, as criticising in unmeasured terms the work of a well-known evangelist on the score that he is sensational and his converts do not last, were unconsciously bringing a more severe indictment against the churches than against the evangelist. To what extent have our churches made provision for the safeguarding of their converts? In most instances have they not been left to their own resources almost from the day of conversion? Perhaps a prayer in their behalf has been offered, when the Monthly Meeting received them into membership; perhaps in certain instances the meeting extended the hand of formal welcome at the succeeding Sabbath service; perhaps the pastor has made a formal visitation; and then, being a part of the flock, they receive no more attention than is accorded those who have been members from their birth. They are treated as "grown ups" before they know the first principles of the Christian life.

Has the time not come when the Church should apply itself to the task of taking care of its converts by methods of conservation that will stand the severest tests? If imperfect methods have been used prior to conversion, the greater is the obligation upon the Church to teach and train the converts in ways of helpful service. Perhaps a special department that will deal with new converts as such, will be the solution of this problem.

Every revival increases the obligation of the Church under whose auspices it is held. The revival itself is the initial act of a procedure which means added care and special attention to those who are newly born into the Kingdom. It is time to cease regarding the revival as the crowning effort of the year. The days and weeks that follow are far more potent for good or for ill. If we can only learn the art of conserving and safeguarding what we gather in, the Church will take on new life, and multitudes will be blessed thereby.

United Missionary Endeavors

The tendency of the age is toward concentration; toward a definite program; toward unity and co-operation. The denominations have learned from sad experience that no one body will suffice for the evangelization of a municipality, much less of the nation or the world. Sin is many sided in its manifestations, but one in purpose and one in action when opposed.

The bane of Christendom has been its division into camps and consequent jealousies. Not only have denominations vied with each other in bitter strife, but departments of the same body of disciples have too often found themselves torn by sharp competitions. Home missions sometimes have vied with foreign missions, and been jealous at what they felt was an unequal division of the benevolences. Rivalry has prevailed where unity should have been the rule of action.

The latest effort to establish a concert of action between the two great branches of missionary endeavor, as set forth elsewhere in this issue, is not only a praiseworthy movement, but is in keeping with the modern trend of religious activity. Not only will it tend to remove competitive and distracting tendencies, but it is the hope that it will enlist the united activities of all the churches in a nation-wide movement, "to the end," as the prospectus indicates, "that the Church may discharge its full missionary responsibility both at home and abroad."

Missionary endeavor of every name is fundamentally one in kind and in spirit. Christ came to save the lost, whether in America or in China, whether in our own home community or in India. The methods of operation are essentially different. But a common understanding as to procedure will inevitably enhance the fruition of all, while the enlistment of forces that will stand unitedly behind the Church, as it moves forward toward the goal of all religious endeavor—the preaching of the Gospel to every creature—will mark a new era in world evangelization.

The War Victims' Fund

Friends have been slow in responding to the calls previously made in the columns of the AMERICAN FRIEND, to supplement the War Victims' Fund now being raised by English Friends, to aid in relieving the distress caused by the Turko-Balkan War. The need of assistance still continues and will exist for some time to come. Thus far we have received $56.00 for this purpose from American Friends. This amount will be retained for a few days until returns from this notice have had opportunity to arrive, when the whole amount will be forwarded to Isaac Sharp, treasurer of the fund in London. It needs to be said that in addition to the above amount Canadian Friends have raised more than $100.00 on their own account, which has been forwarded already.

A contemporary quotes a new coined phrase: "Better be experts on souls than soils." Yet how strong is the tendency to spend far more money and effort upon materialistic betterment than upon spiritual uplift!

In all our churches, we need to be of one accord, more than we need fine church houses, or good church suppers. The latter are not a substitute for the former.

The man who has learned the art of being happy alone, has found the secret of real communion with God.

We may not have too much preaching, but there is too little praying. More is wrought by prayer in this world than we imagine.

Some men serve God as though they wanted to patronize Him. God wants not patronage, but obedience.

The message of salvation is potent to save, but the manner of its transmission is too often faulty.

The King's Work and the World's Work

BY RODERICK SCOTT

(CONCLUDED)

III. WHEN IS THE BEST AND BIGGEST WORK?

The answer here is short; but not less searching: NOW. It is the day of God's power. "The living, the living, he shall praise thee. I must work the works of him that sent me while it is day; the night cometh when no man can work."

The word is urgency. The watchword of the Student Volunteer Movement and of the Laymen's Missionary Movement is: The Evangelization of the World in this generation. Nathan Hale laid down for his country, as he said, the only life he had. The present is the only generation we—and the people we may reach with the message—shall live in; and this life that we are living now is the only life we shall have to live. "Doors open and doors shut." There are times when nations are peculiarly susceptible to the ideals of other nations. That time is past in Japan; in China it is NOW.

The best and biggest work is making the world over in the likeness of Jesus Christ. The place of greatest need of that transformation is the so-called foreign field, the four-fifths of the world where the one-fifth of the workers is. The time is the present.

The King's work and the world's work. It is our work too. That is, can the matter be driven home to the readers of this article, for example; is there any personal application of it all?

We are of three groups: 1. Young men and women from twenty to thirty-five years of age, of such age that we can go to the foreign field, the four-fifths, within the next ten years. 2. Parents of young men and women, or of younger children. 3. Others, who can not go ourselves and have no one to send.

1. The call of the King's work for the world comes then to those of us who are included in the first group.

Besides being a call to work this is a call to personal development. We need for our highest happiness and efficiency, the growth that comes from losing ourselves in a great loyalty, from getting in front of a big conviction, as big a conviction as that making the world over in the likeness of Jesus Christ is the best and biggest thing in the world, from joining forces consciously with the great will of God for mankind, from the consistent practice of self-sacrifice. We need the growth that comes from contact with world currents and world men and world ideas, not in books merely, but in the very center of the action itself. Making the world over in the likeness of Jesus Christ is a world's task.

It is a call also to the widest influence. "The next ten years is more important in determining the spiritual evolution of the world than any other decade or year," said the World Missionary Conference at Edinburg, in 1910; "nor was there ever so good a chance for a single life to influence many lives, than in the chance in the foreign field for our young men and women," adds J. Campbell White, as in a footnote.

Are you a doctor? In the United States there are 4,000 physicians to every 2,500,000 of the population. In heathen lands there is one to the same number.

Do you want to become a trained nurse? India has 144,000,000 native women. And there are but 163 women doctors and nurses ministering to them.

Are you a teacher? And do you feel that you are not doing very much good where you are? On every faculty in the United States there are Christian teachers who can not go. Will you stay, you who can go, when for your four hundred students you may have four thousand, anxious for the truth as it is in Christ, but with none to tell them of it?

Are you a clergyman, with the average parish of the United States of 700 persons, one-fifth of whom have been converted, while the remainder have heard the Gospel, nearly all of them, again and again? You can go to the four-fifths of the world and have an average parish of 200,000 persons, one-eleven-hundredths of whom have been converted, while few of the remainder have ever even heard the name by which men alone are saved; though now hundreds of seekers have to be turned away because there are not enough workers to care for them.

If you want to make your life count for the most there in the four-fifths is the place. And now is the supreme opportunity.

2. The call of the King's work for the world comes to those of us who are included in the second group.

Is it a fair thing to ask the parents to give their children to the King's work in the foreign field?

We sing in the hymn-book, "Give of thy sons to bear the message glorious;" but we say it rarely in the pulpit or the household. And yet if the work is to be done as God has appointed it to be done, by means of human messengers carrying a message of love they can not keep to themselves, a message of life to all the world, some one's sons and daughters must go. You who will not let your children go, nor encourage them to go, and who yet believe in the cause of the King, do you think at all of the fathers and mothers of those of us who go? Of course it is difficult. We speak of self-sacrifice on the part of young men and women who leave congenial surroundings and successful businesses to prosecute the King's work in China or Persia; but theirs is as nothing compared with the sacrifice of the fathers and mothers. But yet even this does Jesus ask of us. Finally we give up our children for lesser causes; and shall not the Master who asks for the children care not only for them but also for us?

"Peace, perfect peace, our loved ones far away?

In Jesus' keeping we are safe, and they."

3. And then the call of the King's work for the world comes to those of us who are included in the third group.

We are too old to go; or we are prevented by physical disability or financial responsibility; and we have no one to send. Is there a call for us too?

Yes, and a mighty call, for we represent the greater number of the people of the churches and the nation. The Great Cause needs workers indeed and parents who shall not hold back their children, that the workers may be as many as possible; but it needs other things also:

"Give of thy sons to bear the message glorious;
Give of thy wealth to speed them on their way;
Pour out thy soul in prayer victorious."

For the adequate prosecution of the mission cause there must be an adequate home base, which means time, thought, money, on the part of those who must stay at home, just as important as going, provided the individual can not go; there must be wealth to support those who go, and the work itself in fields where the native church is not yet self-supporting. There must be prevailing prayer, which means that those of us who stay at home must learn the laws of prayer and give our time and energy to prayer, for the giving of prayer is vastly harder than the giving of money. There must be the very best Christianity at home to export. The tremendous home task with all its intricate perplexities calls imperatively to all those who are left at home; that is, those whom God means to keep at home, not those whom He wants abroad. In a certain city in the Middle West the average annual missionary contribution per church member is sixty-nine cents. Those of us who go are giving a life; our parents are sending what is dearer than life. Those of us who stay behind must give something equal to a life. It is all a work, the King's work.

"Time worketh,
Let me work, too;
Time undoeth,
Let me do.

Busy as Time my work I ply,
Till I rest in the rest of eternity.

"Sin worketh,
Let me work, too;
Sin undoeth,
Let me do.

Busy as Sin my work I ply,
Till I rest in the rest of eternity.

"Death worketh,
Let me work, too;
Death undoeth,
Let me do.

Busy as Death my work I ply,
Till I rest in the rest of eternity."

FOREIGN MISSION DEPARTMENT

A New Advance Movement

The following memoranda will bring to the attention of Friends a new movement of the utmost significance to the entire Church. It gives promise of being, in a way, the culmination of a number of converging lines of aggressive work that have been preparing to enlist the whole Church in its whole task. Hitherto the different denominations have been working for the most part independently of each other, oftentimes with antagonism rather than co-operation. The same thing has also been true of the forces within the denominations. Those who have been keenly interested in Home Missions, and those who have felt the great burden of Foreign Missions have often pulled apart rather than together. The leaders of these forces have been led to feel most powerfully that the time has come when all the forces of the Church should come into the closest possible co-operation in the entire task of meeting the spiritual needs of the whole world. The time is ripe for such a movement. The various co-operative movements of the past fifty years—the united Sunday School Movement, the Y. M. C. A., the W. C. T. U., the Young People's Movement, the united W. F. M. S., the Student Volunteers, the Conference of Foreign Mission Boards, The Home Missions Council, the Federated Council of the Churches of the United States, the Missionary Education Movement, the Laymen's Movement, have all been preparing the way for this new advance. God's Spirit is manifestly leading His Church for this very purpose.

Moreover, it is of great significance just now to the work of Friends as inaugurated at our last Five Years Meeting. There we provided for a central organization that should unify our own work. But we have now the difficult problem of perfecting this organization, and bringing the entire body to its support. In this new movement we have the whole Church (Protestant) of North America coming to our assistance just where we need it. A note from Mr. Innes asks if he can meet some of our Board members during the week beginning April 21st. It so happens that both the Executive Committees of the Five Years Meeting and the Board of Foreign Missions are called to meet in Richmond during that week. Is there not the hand of God in this coincidence? Mr. Innes is a devout Christian business man, who, having been very successful in large business interests, felt called of God to devote his life to the development of the Church work along its business side. He was one of the leading spirits in the splendid advance movement last year in the United Presbyterian Church, that has given a new inspiration to all our Church Boards. He is now authorized to present this new movement to the various denominational Boards, and his coming to us at this time is most opportune. Will not Friends everywhere pray that we may be led aright?

CHARLES E. TEBBETTS.

Letter from J. Campbell White

APRIL 4, 1913.

Mr. Charles Edwin Tebbetts, Richmond, Indiana.

DEAR MR. TEBBETTS:

Please find enclosed a statement concerning the United Missionary Campaign which has been decided upon by representatives of the Home Missions Council and Foreign Missions Conference.

This United Campaign contemplates a nation-wide canvass for Missions in March, 1914, on the part of as many denominations and churches as can be led to undertake it at that time. To prepare the churches of the whole country for that simultaneous canvass,—in addition to all denominational agitation, it is proposed to hold interdenominational missionary conferences, lasting through two days, in as many cities and towns as possible, between September 15 and February 15. It is believed that at least twenty teams of speakers can be secured for almost continuous service during most of that period. If it is possible to secure as many as thirty teams,—a much more thorough piece of work can be done.

It is expected that one-day Conferences for the organization of the work in different parts of the country will be held within the next few weeks at Boston, New York, Chicago, and Nashville at least, and perhaps at a few other points. At these organizing Conferences, it is desired to have those present who will be the speakers on the teams and others who will assist in visiting cities to make the preliminary arrangements.

Yours very sincerely,

J. CAMPBELL WHITE.

United Missionary Campaign

On the 19th of March a joint meeting was held in New York City of duly appointed representatives of the Conference of Foreign Missions Boards of North America and of the Home Missions Council of the United States, to confer concerning the desirability and feasibility of a united campaign for the introduction of adequate methods of education and finance into the churches of North America, to the end that the Church may discharge its full missionary responsibility both at home and abroad.

In the spirit of prayer the conference gave itself over to the consideration of reasons why a united campaign is desirable. After a careful consideration of such reasons the conference came to the unanimous conclusion that the time has arrived for a United Missionary Campaign under the supervision of the Conference of Foreign Missions Boards of North America and the Home Missions Council of the United States. Under authority given to the members of the conference by the two respective organizations a Central Committee was created with power to add to its number.

The Executive Committee of the Laymen's Missionary Movement was requested to take general charge of the organization and direction of the interdenominational convention and conference features of the united campaign, employing for this purpose such additional force of leaders as may be necessary in addition to the Secretarial force of the various Home and Foreign Boards.

The Missionary Education Movement was asked to formulate a plan for the educational features of the campaign in consultation with the Educational Departments of the Boards and to report to the Executive Committee at an early date. At a subsequent meeting the Central Committee organized and appointed an Executive Committee to have charge of the details of the campaign.

Mr. George Innes, General Secretary of the Committee will be primarily responsible for visiting the several Boards and securing their fullest co-operation, in order that each denomination may be certain of the best practical results of the campaign. Mr. Millar, another secretary, will be primarily responsible for the administrative work as it centers at headquarters, have general supervision of the staff and act as the representative of the United Campaign in relationships between interdenominational movements and the United Campaign Committees.

It was agreed that no assessment should be made upon the Boards for the expenses of the campaign but that the necessary funds should be secured by voluntary subscriptions. It was also agreed to use existing agencies as far as possible in the promotion of the campaign, so as to avoid the necessity of a large central budget for salaries of executive officers. The United Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions was asked to give the services of Mr. Innes and the Laymen's Missionary Movement those of Mr. Millar.

In view of the magnitude of the proposal and the far-reaching effects of such a campaign as is contemplated it was deemed important that there should be a meeting for prayer and conference, of the Home and Foreign Missionary Secretaries of North America at the earliest possible moment, and steps are being taken to call such a meeting.

CONDITION AND WELFARE OF NEGRO

Southland College

The Religious Society of Friends in our country is interested in three educational institutions for the benefit of the Negro race: Christiansburg in Virginia, under the care of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting; High Point in North Carolina, under the care of New York Yearly Meeting; and Southland College in Arkansas, under the care of Indiana Yearly Meeting. Southland is located about nine miles from Helena, so far away from Indiana Yearly Meeting that we are often asked why this institution was ever placed at such a distance from Indiana Friends.

Friends are a peace-loving, law-abiding people, opposed to war, but loyal citizens of the community wherever they dwell.

During the Civil War, Oliver P. Morton, then the Governor of Indiana, knew these people well, having for years lived within a few miles of the beautiful city of Richmond, Indiana, the headquarters of Friends in the Middle West.

Through the influence of the Governor and the law of the State, it was easy for Friends to obtain exemption from military service. There came a time, however, when the Governor saw a much needed work that these peace-loving Friends could do just as well as any other good citizens, and he called upon them for help. A telegraphic message from him called together at the railway station of Richmond, Indiana, a few prominent Friends to whom he said, "There is now a service that you can render to the government, one that you can do and should do cheerfully. Go south, and take care of the refugee women and children coming within the Union lines for safety, in the neighborhood of Helena, Arkansas." Friends promptly answered the call, and Indiana Yearly Meeting of Friends sent out her first missionary teachers into that field of labor for the uplift of the Negro, and she has ever since been steadily working at the same good cause.

At our late Yearly Meeting, the committee having this work in charge, presented its forty-ninth annual report. This report showed a capacity to house comfortably two hundred students in steam-heated dormitories; a school building capable of carrying an enrollment of four hundred, and a corps of teachers, white and colored, competent for their respective duties.

A good common school education, together with training that will best fit these young people for the duties of life, in such station as they will most likely have to fill, is the aim of the institution—not omitting a high standard of Christian character.

The girls and young women are taught almost every form of labor that falls to their lot in life—housekeeping, cooking, laundering, sewing, etc. The boys and young men are taught farming, gardening, and carpentry. All these industries are taught thoroughly by competent instructors who not only inculcate the nobility of labor, but also hold students to strict accountability in the performance of all their work.

True it is that Southland is a school in the ordinary sense, but it is something more than that; for Southland's prime aim is not scholarship, though she cultivates the mind; neither is it labor, though she trains the hand; nor is it ethics, though she inculcates morality and religion. It is all these, for Southland is a training school for life, where the entire individual is put into school on a definite program for a definite purpose.

Examples of truth, righteousness and usefulness, however, are not made in a day. The weaving of character, though the work of a lifetime, should find in the school its greatest opportunity.

But Southland does not attempt the impossible. It makes no claim that by education all of the dangers and difficulties of life are removed. And therefore there is at Southland a fine appreciation of Huxley's famous saying, "The most valuable result of education is the ability to make yourself do the things you ought to do, when it ought to be done, whether you like to do it or not." This indeed is character.

Such is the high standard that Southland sets for the measurement of her work. In the midst of the pressing needs of passing school days, Southland never loses her vision of future work days; for permanent character-making is counted the supreme interest and purpose of her existence.

In a visit to Southland three years ago last April, I saw nothing but orderly and cheerful activity; interest in the work and ambition to excel in it—a deep earnestness. All of these are plainly evident in the faces and deportment of the young learners. The instructors, in their personality and their duties are a part of the fine atmosphere which pervades this entire community. The visitor is much impressed with their proficiency, their tact, their enthusiasm, and their high ideals. I bear away with me impressions of noble men and women devoting their lives with increasing sympathy that others may be enabled to do the world's work in better fashion. Lest you may think that this statement shows partiality to this particular school, I quote part of a letter written by Rev. Robt. C. Bedford, secretary of the Board of Trustees of Tuskegee Institute, to Carolena M. Wood, chairman of the Board of the Five Years Meeting having charge of the condition and welfare of the Negro. Robt. Bedford spent twenty-eight years visiting Negro schools, principally in the south.

"I have made my visit to Southland College, and was more than pleased with what I saw there. What a long history it has had! I find that many of the students are children of graduates and others who have been there to school.

"This institution is most interesting from every point of view. The location is admirable in every respect. The minimum of temptation is certainly realized there, and the thing we so much desire—the keeping of the young people in the country and on the farm—is more largely realized there than in any other place I know of. I found about three hundred pupils present, notwithstanding the terrible roads and bad weather. About one hundred and sixty of these are boarding students. The school is greatly in need of more room. I found about ninety pupils in each of two rooms, with only one teacher to the room; and these were the lowest grades. Nearly every room was crowded. I met students in the chapel, where the room was crowded, although the very small children did not come in. In the dormitories, I found the rooms very full, and was told that three slept in nearly every bed. I visited all the class-rooms, and was very much pleased with the teachers and the work they were doing.

"Mr. and Mrs. Wolford, president and matron, impressed me very favorably, and seemed very much interested in their work. They are plain, unassuming people, and cannot help but prove a good example to the students and people in the neighborhood.

"The young women teachers from the North seem to me above the average white teachers that work in the South, and the young colored teachers, graduates of the school, I liked very much. I saw the girls at work in the kitchen, laundry, dining-room and sewing-room. The boys, after school, are employed in cleaning up the buildings, tending to the wood supply, and caring for the stock at the barn. They are very nice fellows, and make no word of complaint at their cramped quarters, and are very obedient.

"The school is located in a splendid farming section. I was impressed by the number of colored people owning land easily worth from twenty-five to thirty dollars per acre, even in its present condition. Helena is growing rapidly. Two railroads are near the school, one three miles away, and the other one and a half. This means that the country is going to develop. The people are going to have money; they can pay more to the school. The school must meet this new order of things. It will soon celebrate its semi-centennial. I believe this is a most opportune time in which to inject new life into it, and thereby greatly enlarge its influence. I think the college part will take care of itself. I believe you will find the community and the present teaching force ready to co-operate most heartily in any plan that may be for the good of the school. You have every reason to be proud of it! What a debt of gratitude the whole country owes to its faithful Friends! I am sure you will find Tuskegee willing, and personally, I shall always be glad to render any assistance in my power."

"Wynne, Arkansas, March, 1910."

Since Mr. Bedford's visit an addition has been made to Central Hall, for use of dining-room, and over this addition is the sewing-room and nursery. Also, a two-story annex to the chapel, and school building 34 x 44, has been built, to accommodate the increase in the number of pupils.

Thirty additional rooms to the girls' dormitory necessitated an addition to the steam-heating plant. Remodeling the boys' dormitory and building an addition, were made possible by gift. The new carpenter shop was a gift of the president and matron, Mr. and Mrs. Harry C. Wolford; and the committee of the Five Years Meeting, having charge of the condition and welfare of the Negro has undertaken to raise sufficient funds for equipment of the carpenter shop.

The question is repeatedly asked by northern visitors to the school, "What becomes of the persons who have received training at Southland?" As far as can be ascertained, the great majority of them are found to be sober and industrious, working steadily at some useful occupation.

They are saving their money, and some of them have bought homes. One graduate, now a reputable physician of Helena, has but recently built a twenty-room apartment house in Helena.

A large number are actively connected with the churches, as teachers in Sunday-schools, and in the improvement of their community.

As the fruits of Southland become known, the conviction deepens that Southland College as well as Christiansburg and High Point, stands for the sanest and most potent solution of the problem of education as applied to the Negro in the South. Although Southland is better equipped now than ever before, there is urgent need of additional work shops; and here is a golden opportunity for any benevolent-minded individual, who cares for cordial appreciation, and for quick, sure, and large dividends on his investment.

EDWARD BELLIS,

Chairman and Corresponding Secretary of the Missionary Board on Southland.

THE BOARD ON EDUCATION

Our Resources

There are many reasons which need to be brought afresh to our minds respecting our work of education in the American yearly meetings, lest, in the enthusiasm in other phases of activities, we forget our true condition on so fundamental a question.

It is not altogether unlikely that many of our members will fail to see and believe that our condition in this respect is a suffering one at all. We have the public schools, they say, and the high schools and agricultural colleges; and the main thing, anyhow, is to get a vocational training in order that we may make money, live well, and provide a competence for our children.

This materializing of the motives of life, coupled with the fact that thorough and extensive education requires much time and money, and is based upon the wisdom of sacrificing momentary pleasure and present gain for the sake of great future rewards both in intellectual expansion and independence, and also in far greater material prosperity, finds easy acceptance with the multitude. We are looking too much for present results and too little for power to achieve great ends.

When we bear in mind that each generation of young people must begin at the bottom, and be led through the entire course that the children of the previous generation had to traverse, we may get some idea of the enormous task before us in the way of teaching the generations of children as they come upon the threshold of life. We may as well once for all, clearly understand that we are engaged in a work of tremendous magnitude and of vital importance to the church. The cost is very great, but not too great for the sake of the children. Money expended in the education of young people will bring great returns year after year; and the provision of permanent funds in the way of endowment and equipment of schools is proof of great wisdom and patriotism.

We shall make a mistake if we rely upon state schools and colleges to educate our children. We need all the state can do and will do, and much more besides. Imagine two conditions,—one a dependence upon the state for the education of our membership, thus cutting out the distinctive religious atmosphere, and warm personal interest and sympathy to be found in all our schools and colleges; the direct appeals of those who preach the Gospel and walk side by side with the young people at the most impressionable age of their lives,—and try to picture the result.

The second condition surrounds our young people with all the state can do and then bestows all the special care of our own schools, of home and church and personal concern and interest.

The needs in North Carolina Yearly Meeting are growing greater all the time, and the possibilities correspondingly greater. Therefore, the interest in education should be aroused to many times its present ardor. We should carry on an educational campaign,—house to house visitation, and place before our young people the possibilities of life in the Friends Church today, and in the world. All our meetings need the fresh blood of young lives,—young men and young women whose minds have been made keen and strong by careful and extensive study under the best possible surroundings. The gain in this way to our meetings will be far beyond our power to state in words. This training must be done quickly. The young precious lives soon become less susceptible of the greatest achievement, if left too long without the light and life of our best schools. Here,—from the young life,—is the source from which all the forces for the work of the church must come. Our ministers twenty years hence must be made out of the young people whom we are now trying to train. So will it be with missionaries, leaders in the transaction of business, publication of our literature, our teachers in the schools and colleges—our physicians and statesmen and advocates of every good cause must come from those boys and girls for whom we make provision in our schools and colleges.

It is our business to make that provision adequate to all these great needs. If we really want our church in America to accomplish larger things, we will begin now to lay the foundations in our schools and colleges. Prolonged and successful religious activity is impossible without intellectual power. L. L. HOBBS.

Pacific College

In Newberg, Oregon, the center of the rapidly growing Friends' work in the great Pacific Northwest, is located Pacific College, which must have a large influence in moulding Quakerism in this vast empire in the future. It is over 1,200 miles from Pacific to Whittier, the nearest Friends college to the south; over 1,500 miles east to Nebraska Central, the nearest in that direction. All of Oregon, Washington and Idaho, parts of four other states and all of western Canada constitute the proper field of Pacific College. And on account of the distance to other Friends colleges and the additional expense of attending them, the Friends young people must get their education in Pacific College or they will not be educated under Friends influences.

Newberg is an ideal place for a college. It is a town of 3,000 inhabitants, in the heart of the rich and populous Willamette Valley. It is a town of churches, the Friends Church being the largest and most influential. Its moral and spiritual tone are exceptionally high. It is and always has been free from the saloon, the sale of liquor being forever forbidden by city charter, and also kept out of this part of the state by vote of the people.

More than two-thirds of the students of Pacific are Friends. Many, both in the school and out, have become members of Friends, directly through the influence of the college. The enrollment is 25 per cent. larger this year than two years ago, though the tuition has been increased 25 per cent. The religious life of the college is warm and earnest, and many of the students are not only preparing for lives of service, but are living those lives right now, speaking and singing in out-of-the-way places among the mountains, carrying on the work of the Master in the school, the church and the town, and preparing for larger service in the ministry, the mission field, Association work and other forms of Christian activity.

By sacrifice that is nothing less than heroic, the Friends of Oregon Yearly Meeting have maintained the college, with some help from Friends in the east that has been greatly appreciated. By sacrifice that many would think impossible they have erected a new $30,000 building within the past three years. They have met the deficit in running expenses from year to year, and hundreds of young men and young women are doing service in the world that would have been impossible but for what Pacific College has done for them.

But now, to maintain the place that has been won, to hold her influence in the educational and Christian circles of the Northwest, and to carry on the work which it is so manifest God has committed into her hand, the college must have financial aid. An endowment of $100,000 is imperatively needed at once, and Friends in Oregon are adding to the tremendous sacrifice that was required to erect the new building by giving with a liberality with which many another school has never been blessed toward this endowment fund. But they cannot raise it all. Help must come from Friends in more favored sections.

Pacific College is simply asking now for the help that other Friends colleges have received in time past. With the splendid opportunities for service here, and with the certainty of realizing such possibilities if the financial help is provided, surely there are those who have recognized their stewardship upon whose hearts the Father will lay the needs of Pacific College. There is perhaps no Friends college in America where a given sum invested in endowment will do more in the Christian education of Friends young people. Does God want you to help?

The striving to love our fellowmen is itself that striving to know God which Christ has told us is eternal life. Be your religion what it may, your learning, your charity, your church-going what you please; if you have not the spirit of love, you have still to learn Christ's alphabet.—Henry Melville Gwatkin.

Isom P. Wooten

The passing of our brother and co-worker, Isom P. Wooten, from works to reward was unusual, and we might say, beautiful, calling home a faithful servant of our Lord. He was at meeting on Sabbath, March 30th, and the next afternoon passed on to eternal rest. In a letter written by him March 12th, he speaks of his physical condition, and seemed to realize that it was very serious, but his intense solicitude for Seattle Meeting, that the work there might be properly taken care of, was uppermost in his thoughts.

He writes: "I may spring a surprise on thee this morning, but trust it may not in the least put any burden on thee and the Board of Indiana Yearly Meeting. I will say that for something over a month I have been feeling there was coming on me a difficulty, possibly in a little hardening of the arteries, which is making it difficult for me to walk even a few blocks without cutting off my breathing. This may be only symptoms following a cold. If I can stand the work until September or October, we would much rather do so, for I assure thee we are enjoying the work. In case I should break down, we would want to go to our home without delay. We had present last Sabbath over seventy at morning service; sixty-two at Sabbath-school. I taught my Sabbath-school class of twelve or thirteen and preached a sermon with usual vigor, and there was, as commonly, manifested appreciation from the people. We are having as many as thirty at the Christian Endeavor meeting. I am having many calls for conference on church doctrines, etc., and am kept quite busy, hardly having time to do the amount of studying I ought, to keep myself up and fresh in the teaching and ministry. The Church is beautifully taking each one their part of responsibility."

In nearly every letter he would speak of the great pleasure and joy he and his wife were getting out of their work in Seattle, and that he could not keep back the wish for the vigor of younger years that they might continue on in the church work there. He was very hopeful for the future of Seattle Meeting, and wrote encouragingly about it in all of his letters.

E. A. Stuart, of Seattle, writes on April 3rd: "It seems he had not been well for some time, and had decided he would have to give up his work, so he telephoned me last week that he would appreciate it if I would attend the meeting Sunday, which I did, and heard him preach. Thought he looked poorly, but seemed cheerful and much interested in his work, and stated to me that he was very sorry that he had to give up, that the work was very interesting, and he thought the possibilities great to build up a good large meeting here in Seattle. I was glad that I attended the meeting. It seems sad that he was taken away so suddenly. No doubt the work he did here was very beneficial towards helping to build up the Church."

The wise counsel and conscientious work of Isom Wooten and his wife in Seattle Meeting will be lasting, and felt in time to come. * * *

Re-Building Spiceland Academy

SPICELAND, April 6.—The keynote in the campaign to raise $15,000 to re-build Spiceland Academy was sounded in a sermon this morning in the Friends Church, delivered by President Robert L. Kelly, of Earlham College.

At the opening of his discourse, President Kelly stated that he would talk in a plain, outspoken manner of the material advantages to this community, in continuing the academy. He said that from a standpoint of dollars and cents he is thoroughly convinced that it is a sound proposition for the community as a whole. The reasons he assigned for this were: The large endowment; the income from foreign tuition, and the income from the state in building up an industrial training department.

Following this came an appeal for the preservation of secondary schools. He asserted that there is a great place for them in our educational progress, and as an example referred to Fairmount academy. It is situated in a county having twelve commissioned high schools of the highest class; one of these being in the town of Fairmount. In spite of this competition Fairmount academy has a student body of one hundred and seventy-five, and is doing more efficient work every day.

Dwelling for a time on the community advantages to be derived from having an academy in our midst, and upon the successful men who have gone out from it in the past, he predicted both a financial loss, and a loss in the general tone of the town and community, should the academy be laid down.

President Kelly challenged the people of the community to conserve their highest well-being by retaining the school, and to co-operate in making a successful campaign to bring about this result. In closing he said he was confident, from what he knew of the community and its citizens, that Spiceland academy will be preserved, and that it will continue to send successful men and women out in the world to do its work.

After the close of President Kelly's address, S. E. Test, representing the committee which has the campaign in charge, reported that five thousand dollars has already been subscribed by ten enthusiastic men, and that the committee will begin tomorrow taking subscriptions for the other ten thousand dollars.—*New Castle (Ind.) An Appeal for Aid

To all whom this may concern, among Friends and others in Kansas and other Yearly Meetings:

This is to inform all addressed that on April 25, 1912, a cyclone passed through the Friends settlement of Farmridge neighborhood, Kansas, destroying the meeting house and four dwellings not far away, while others were much injured. Barns and other buildings of Friends were destroyed. One old lady was killed and two children died from injuries received, while others were hurt.

Having had two poor crops previously, Friends decided to use Central school house for a meeting place. As the crop again in 1912 was poor, it was agreed that no building could be undertaken last autumn, as had been intended. During the latter part of December, however, and the first few days of the present year, the pastor, Frank K. Smith, together with his wife and other workers, held a series of meetings, at which several were saved and sanctified. As a result, it was thought best to try for a meeting house. The women members of the building committee started out and canvassed the neighborhood and surrounding country, including Elk River Quarterly Meeting, and have raised $440.00.

The building has begun, and the foundation is nearly completed by donations of work by members and others. It will take at least $250.00 additional and probably more to complete the structure. Hence it is thought right to ask all that can assist to send at an early date what the Holy Spirit suggests. The local Friends would be glad to have each meeting take the matter up and send in what can be secured, to any of the following, all of whom are members of the building committees: Effie Hadley, clerk of Farmridge Monthly Meeting, R. F. D., No. 1, Elk City, Kansas; Lucretia Kenworthy, same address, who is treasurer of the monthly meeting; Simon H. Hadley, Chairman of Committee, Lafontaine, Kansas; or John W. Koonce, Treasurer of Committee, Lafontaine, Kansas.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

California Yearly Meeting

On the evening of the 2nd instant, Pasadena Monthly Meeting assembled in annual session to hear the reports of standing committees and auxiliary organizations, such as Bible School, Christian Endeavor Society, Women's Foreign Missionary Society and Japanese Missions. The reports showed a great amount of work done in various lines. The meeting has 428 members, of whom 302 are voters. The reports were preceded by a supper and social in which the whole congregation participated.

Richard R. Newby began a series of meetings at Pasadena, California, on the 19th ultimo, closing on the 30th. While few outside of the regular congregation were influenced, the meetings were felt to be a distinct inspiration and uplift. The teaching given in the afternoon sessions on the place and power of the Holy Spirit was recognized and welcomed as the true Friends' doctrine of holiness. From Pasadena, Richard Newby and wife returned to their home at Union Springs, New York.

Canada Yearly Meeting

The past winter at Swarthmore, Saskatchewan, Canada, has been an ideal one, with very little snow and no storms. Farmers are preparing for seeding. Aaron McKinney has moved into his new home near Swarthmore and is taking charge of the Friends' services there. Ernest Howard has moved into the Happy Land neighborhood, where the Friends hold services, and is keeping up the work there. It is a settlement four miles from Swarthmore.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

A very successful ten days' meeting was held at Summitville, Indiana, by Marie Cassell, pastor of the meeting, assisted by Bertha E. Day, an evangelist from Ohio. The services closed on February 18. Eighteen were converted and a number reclaimed. Eleven have requested membership with Friends.

Since Richard Simms and family have located there, the meeting and Bible School at Chester, Indiana, have taken on new life and activity. The school is under the superintendency of Florence Simms and she has proved very efficient in that capacity. An able company, together with a teachers' training class, furnishes an interesting Bible study, which is greatly appreciated. Richard Simms serves the meeting as pastor and is very capable in the ministry. His discourses are strong and spiritual, which tends toward the growth and edification of believers in Christ Jesus.

Bertha E. Day, an evangelist of Rockford, Ohio, and Marie Cassell, of Fairmount, Indiana, held a very successful series of meetings at Waynesville, Ohio, resulting in twenty-nine conversions and renewals. The Church was greatly strengthened and built up. Men attended these meetings and were blessed, that had not been at a church service for a number of years.

A ten days' series of meetings was recently held at Greensboro, Indiana, by Oliver Beeson and the pastor, Joseph Young. We believe that their faithful teaching was made a blessing to the Church and community. Several were converted, renewed and sanctified. Five were added to the Church. On the afternoon of March 30, George C. Levering, pastor of the Friends Church at Spiceland, gave an address on David Livingstone, which was very much appreciated and created renewed interest in the cause of missions.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

President David M. Edwards delivered an address on "The Dual Program of Life," at the graduating exercises of the Sunday-school Union, at Marshalltown, Iowa, Wednesday evening, April 2nd.

Willard H. Farr, a graduate of Penn College, class 1911, who holds a scholarship in the State University of Iowa for the current year, has been awarded a fellowship in the Department of Physics in the same institution for the year 1913-1914.

At the April session of Oskaloosa Monthly Meeting, Clarence E. Pickett and Lily Dale Peckham presented a request for the privilege of marriage according to Friends' ceremony. The request was granted and the appointment was made for June 25th, and will occur at the home of Lily Peckham's parents on North Market Street, Oskaloosa, Iowa.

Absalom Rosenberger spoke at Friends Meeting, held in Penn College chapel, Oskaloosa, Iowa, Sabbath morning, April 5th, on the Jewish Feasts as observed in Palestine at the present time. At the evening meeting Florabel P. Rosenberger spoke on "Holy Week" in Jerusalem. Oskaloosa Friends feel greatly favored in having these excellent people with them again. During the past four years Absalom Rosenberger has served as superintendent of Friends' Ramallah Mission, situated near Jerusalem, Palestine. Oskaloosa Friends are hoping that he and Mrs. Rosenberger may decide to make Oskaloosa their permanent home.

Oskaloosa Monthly Meeting held a social in Penn College chapel the evening of April 4th. A number of persons were received into membership during the past winter, and this occasion was designed to foster acquaintance and good fellowship, especially with our new members. A short program was rendered, the first number consisting of a piano solo by Eva Marshall. Following this Mrs. Absalom Rosenberger gave a most interesting talk on "Shopping in Jerusalem." Absalom Rosenberger next spoke in his usual happy way, of "Jerusalem, her People and Industries." A piano solo by Jeannette Hadley closed the program, which was followed by the serving of light refreshments and a social hour.

Lindley A. Wells, of Portland, Oregon, who has been doing evangelistic work in the limits of Iowa Yearly Meeting since the Five Years Meeting, closed his season's campaign at Grinnell, Iowa, on April 6. He came to us at the opportune time. On March 16, the Sunday before the meetings began, the mortgage, which had been upon the meeting house was burned. The meetings lasted seventeen days, with three services each Sabbath. Forty-five persons bowed at the altar and were either converted, reclaimed or definitely received the baptism of the Holy Spirit. The Gospel was preached in all its fullness. Holiness was sought from the pastoral standpoint and the power of God was presented as being able to cleanse from all sin. We are glad to have had in our midst an evangelist whom we consider safe and sound.

New England Yearly Meeting

Friends in Manchester, New Hampshire, observed the second anniversary of their meeting in the Union Chapel, South Manchester, by holding special services on the 6th instant, being favored with well attended gatherings morning and evening. Several visiting Friends were present, adding much to the helpfulness of the occasion. Alvano C. Goddard, of New Bedford, Massachusetts, delivered stirring messages at both services; also Thomas Wood, of Dorchester, Massachusetts, superintendent of New England Yearly Meeting's Evangelistic Committee, and Alice C. Winslow, formerly pastor of Manchester Meeting, and who is now stationed at Henniker, New Hampshire, the Divine presence and power of the Holy Spirit being felt in rich measure. The Gospel was also presented in song by two talented soloists and a quartet of local singers, much to the appreciation and edification of all present. The interior of the place of meeting has, during the past few months, been repainted and a supply of new seats and other needed furnishings installed. For the greater part of the past year, R. Ernest Lamb, formerly of Richhill, Ireland, who came to Manchester from Nebraska Central College, has been in charge of the work as pastor.

Ohio Yearly Meeting

A notable event took place Wednesday, March 19th, at the home of George C. and Hattie Moore, near Ypsilanti, Michigan, in celebration of the fiftieth anniversary of their marriage, and the twenty-fifth anniversary of the marriage of their son, Howard Moore, to Mary Lord. Both parties have lived nearly all their lives in that locality and are prominent members of the Friends Church, Howard and Mary Moore both being ministers, and he superintendent of Adrian Quarterly Meeting Evangelistic and Pastoral Board. Guests to the number of one hundred and forty assembled and caught the spirit of the occasion. The house was artistically draped with gold and white crepe paper and flowers in abundance. A bountiful dinner was served. The young people who catered to the guests were also costumed in the jubilee colors. After this an entertaining program was much enjoyed by the company. This consisted of recitations, songs, and papers prepared for the occasion. Many beautiful gifts were showered on both parties. Both brides and grooms responded in a touching manner to the speeches made at the presentation of the gifts.

North Carolina Yearly Meeting

New Garden Monthly Meeting in March received several new members, and more are expected later.

Julia S. White, librarian of Guilford College, has sailed for England, where she expects to attend London and Dublin Yearly Meetings.

Tilman Hobson, the California evangelist, spent over a week at Guilford College and New Garden Meetings, where conversions were reported. He then went to Chatham County to find the homesteads and meeting of his ancestors. He was to go from there to Warrenton to hold a union meeting.

At High Point, North Carolina, a series of revival meetings has been held, throughout the first three weeks of March, under the efficient care of Lewis McFarland, the pastor. The church members stood by loyally, and faithfully attended the meetings, helping by prayer, testimony and personal work. The choir too, aided very effectively by their helpful and inspiring singing. Indeed the spirit of co-operation has been very marked. The attendance was good, and several times extra chairs were needed. The Gospel was preached with no uncertain sound, the love of God made very real, and those away from Christ were clearly shown what a great mistake they were making. We have felt a real religious awakening, rousing us to fresh activity, and nearly two score have definitely given themselves to Christ. The success of these meetings seems to be the fruit of months of prayer and preparation on the part of the pastor and many concerned members.

Marion Quarterly Meeting, Indiana

Nearly all of the local meetings of Marion Quarterly Meeting have held revival services during the winter with good results at every place. Some of the meetings have been greatly revived.

The Second Friends Church in Marion, under the pastoral care of Dewitt Foster, is quite prosperous. A series of meetings was held early in the winter, and quite a number were converted and renewed. A goodly number were added to the membership, especially heads of families. The attendance is increasingly good, the meeting house being well filled at both services on Sabbath, and there is a large spiritual prayer meeting each week. The Christian Endeavor Society has been revived and is now well attended, and doing much good. The Sabbath-school is in a prosperous condition.

The First Friends Church at Marion has recently held a series of meetings conducted by the pastor, Charles E. Hiatt. The meetings were greatly interfered with by the flood, which made so many homeless in Marion. At present they have closed the meetings, intending to begin again in a short time. The meeting is prosperous and well united in the work.

Mary McVicker has charge of Maple Run and Sycamore Meetings in Marion quarter. She held a very successful series of meetings at Maple Run, at which time many were converted and renewed and there were several additions to the church membership. A good meeting was also held at Sycamore, conducted by the pastor.

Isaac Hollingsworth, of Lynn, held a two weeks' meeting at Deer Creek. Much good was accomplished and the church strengthened.

Aaron Napier, pastor at Amboy, held a two weeks' meeting at West Branch, with excellent results.

Clifford Pearson is pastor at Barbers Mills and Pleasant View in Wells County. He has held successful meetings at both places and a good spiritual life prevails. They hold their pastor in good esteem and stand by him financially, as well as with their prayers.

Keystone Meeting is under the care of Edward Tinney, who is doing splendid work. Milo is in a very prosperous condition. They have had no series of meetings this winter, but they are alive spiritually. Great unity and harmony prevails among them.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

APRIL 27

TOPIC—Mission Work at Home and Abroad. IV. Bible Work. Acts XVII: 1-12.

The Bible is the necessary adjunct of all missionary endeavor. It is the well spring of life to the thirsty soul. It is the lamp with which to guide the footsteps of needy humanity.

The Bible has been translated into about five hundred languages and dialects, and it is estimated that a copy of the scriptures could be furnished to seven out of every ten persons in the whole world, in some language they can understand.

"One of the hard tasks facing the missionary who wishes to give a people the Bible in their own language is that of finding in a heathen tongue fitting words to express Christian ideas. Often there are either no words, or very unworthy ones, for God, sin, repentance, forgiveness, holiness, heaven, spirit."—Christian Endeavor World.

Could the story be written of the handicaps that have been overcome in the many translations of the Bible, a story of heroism and persistence would be portrayed that would be captivating and inspiring. The sacrifice of these saints of God is worthy of emulation by all who seek to make a better world here and now.

Let some member speak of the Bible in China, another in India, another in Abyssinia, another in Africa, and so on with other countries. This will make an interesting and profitable exercise for the Christian Endeavor meeting.

At Van Wert, Ohio

The first quarter of the new year was an epoch in the history of Friends Circuit of Van Wert, Ohio. Practically all of the three months was devoted to evangelistic work.

The first series of meetings was held at Antioch Chapel. Though the influence of the meeting seemingly failed in reaching non-members, yet the church was more firmly established and became better qualified for active service in the Lord. The power of God was especially demonstrated in the righting of some misunderstandings and in the salvation of one man, who for some time had thought that there was no salvation for him, owing to an inherited appetite for liquor. There were others who bowed at the altar seeking more knowledge of their Savior. On the Sabbath following the series of meetings and in the absence of a minister, four people bowed at the altar and consecrated their lives to the Lord.

The second meeting was held at Mt. Pleasant. An unusual manifestation of God's power was in evidence throughout the meetings. Upwards of forty people were definitely blessed while kneeling at an altar of prayer. Many of them were, or had been, members of the church. The converts were practically all adults.

The third meeting was held at Prodigal Home. This meeting, like the Antioch meeting, was not apparently, quite so far reaching. However, many declared that they never attended meetings that did them so much good. Several of the members, who were discouraged because of the removal of a few and because of the death of some prominent Friends, were encouraged and purposed to stay by the work, let come what will or may. Four renewals and one convert are other visible results of this meeting.

Nora Jackson, of Winchester, Indiana, ably assisted the pastor in the first two meetings. The help given by the local workers was excellent and especially that rendered by Grace Bell, who gave practically all her time to the work. The spirit of unity among the three churches is most commendable. Never before has the circuit been so near one church. Previous to the revival the circuit had a membership of 132; now it has 154 members.

Each of the meetings are looking forward to the time when they will have more commodious places of worship. Antioch will complete its much needed repairs in a short time. Mt. Pleasant has funds raised for necessary work on their church building. Prodigal home is anticipating doing some much needed work on their building. The completion of the entire work will demand approximately $3,000.00.

On Sabbath, April 6, an offering was given for the sufferers in the flooded districts of our state. We are very grateful to our heavenly Father for the many blessings granted us and unto Him be all the praise.

Parvin W. Bond, pastor of the circuit, is now entering upon the last half of his fourth year's labor with us.

FRIENDS HELP

St. Paul Park Incident

"After drinking coffee for breakfast I always felt languid and dull, having no ambition to get to my morning duties. Then in about an hour or so a weak, nervous derangement of the heart and stomach would come over me with such force I would frequently have to lie down."

Tea is just as harmful, because it contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee.

"At other times I had severe headaches; stomach finally became affected and digestion so impaired that I had serious chronic dyspepsia and constipation. A lady, for many years State President of the W. C. T. U., told me she had been greatly benefited by quitting coffee and using Postum; she was troubled for years with asthma. She said it was no cross to quit coffee when she found she could have as delicious an article as Postum.

"Another lady, who had been troubled with chronic dyspepsia for years, found immediate relief on ceasing coffee and using Postum. Still another friend told me that Postum was a Godsend, her heart trouble having been relieved after leaving off coffee and taking on Postum.

"So many such cases came to my notice that I concluded coffee was the cause of my trouble and I quit and took up Postum. I am more than pleased to say that my days of trouble have disappeared. I am well and happy."

I used to make a fuss and cry
On rainy days, but now, oh my!
I never think of being sad,
I know the flowers are so glad.

The trees and grass, too; so when rain
Patters against the window-pane,
I shut my eyes, and try to see
How every flower and bush and tree

Will look when sunbeams on them shine
The next day, when the weather's fine;
It is a game I like to play
Because it chases gloom away.

Evening on the Hill-Top

By LIDA E. CURTIS

Oh the glory of the heavens!
Oh the beauty of the night!
My heart is filled with rapture
And my soul thrills with delight,
As I gaze upon the star-world,
Set in majesty above,
And my thoughts turn to the Maker
And his boundless wealth of love.

Far below I see the shining
Of a myriad tiny eyes,
And they vie in twinkling brightness,
With the glory of the skies.
And again I think with wonder
Of our Father and His love;
Skies above and earth below me
O'er and o'er His goodness prove.

He who set each bit of brightness
In the heavens far and fair;
Who surrounds each home below me
With a guard of loving care;
Who, to save His erring people,
Sacrificed His Son, so mild;
Need I fear, though far I wander,
That He will forget His child?

United Missionary Campaign

Last week, AMERICAN FRIEND readers were made acquainted with the outline of a movement to secure concert of action between the home and foreign mission departments of the various denominations.

The following features of the campaign have now been approved:

1. The campaign is in the interests of all the missionary work of the church and aims at the enlistment of the entire membership of the church.

2. A nation-wide, simultaneous canvass for home and foreign missions in March, 1914, on the part of as many churches and denominations as can be led to undertake it at that time.

3. To prepare the churches of the whole country for such a canvass, Missionary Conventions or Conferences will be held throughout the United States, at as many as possible of the cities and towns of 5,000 population or over. There are about 1,250 such centers. As these Conventions and Conferences will need to be held between September 15 and February 15, it will require twenty or more teams of speakers, holding Conferences in as many cities or towns simultaneously, to cover the territory. At the request of the United Campaign Committee, the Laymen's Missionary Movement has consented to undertake the organization and general direction of these Conventions and Conferences. The leaders in the campaign will be divided into teams of four to six men each, each team cultivating a designated area. The Conventions and Conferences will begin with an evening session and continue through the following day.

4. Widespread deputation work by volunteer speakers, with the aim of bringing the inspiration and message of this United Campaign to every community and every church.

5. The setting aside of the second Sunday of February as Missionary Day, for a nation-wide exchange of pulpits and for special missionary features in all departments of church life.

6. A special department of the campaign to be in behalf of the colored churches of America.

7. Special Conferences for Pastors, where they may study together the missionary operations of the whole church and the unique relation of the pastor to the world-wide extension of the Kingdom of Christ.

8. The widest possible use of carefully selected and specially prepared missionary literature.

9. A still larger and more general assistance of the public press in securing religious and missionary news and in interpreting the spirit of Christianity as the spirit of individual and universal service and helpfulness.

10. This United Campaign is not for this year only, but is to be "a comprehensive and sustained effort, with such developments as may prove necessary, to lead the whole church out into the discharge of its total missionary duty, in this crisis hour of national and world history."

11. The campaign aims not only at securing larger missionary contributions, but at the development of the latent spiritual resources of the church. Prayer, personal Bible study, personal service and stewardship will all be emphasized in their relation to Christian efficiency.

Summer Schools of Missions

The seventh session of the Minnesota Summer School of Missions will be held from June 11 to June 17, in the Olivet Congregational Church of Merriam Park, St. Paul, Minnesota. The program, which has just been printed, shows many attractive features. Mrs. D. B. Wells, of Chicago, will give the lectures on the foreign mission text book, "The King's Business," which treats of increased efficiency for woman's missionary societies. Mrs. Wells will also conduct the Bible study, giving a series of addresses on the subject, "Spiritual Growth."

The home mission text book, "The New America," will be presented by Miss Miriam L. Woodberry, of New York City. As Miss Woodberry has long done effective work with the immigrants, it is felt that she is especially well fitted to present this subject. A period in charge of Miss Grace Denny, of St. Paul, will be devoted to telling stories calculated to arouse the interest of children in missions. The customary instruction in methods will be given and a number of missionaries will speak. Any Friends, who may be in the neighborhood of the Twin Cities, will find these meetings well worth attending.

Good Roads

A gold medal to the school boy or girl between the ages of 10 and 15 who writes the best composition, not to exceed 800 words, on the repair and maintenance of earth roads, is to be awarded by Logan Waller Page, Director, Office of Public Roads, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. All compositions must be submitted to Mr. Page before May 15, 1913, and the medal will be awarded as soon thereafter as the compositions can be graded. The composition may be based on knowledge gained from books or other sources, but no quotations should be made.

Any child between the ages mentioned, attending a country school, may compete. Only one side of the paper must be written on; each page should be numbered; the name, age, and address of the writer, and the name and location of the school which he or she is attending must be plainly written at the top of the first page. The announcement of the competition has been sent to the superintendents of schools in the rural districts. No further information can be obtained from the Office of Public Roads.

If you are halted by any weariness, lift up your eyes to vaster and finer things, consecrate yourself to the high calling of God and once more you shall stand erect and your burdens will roll from your shoulders as did Christian's when he stood before the Cross and the sepulcher.—Gaius Glenn Atkins.

Getting a Vision of Jesus Christ

"We would see Jesus."—John 12: 21.

Christ is the central figure of all history. All records, both religious and secular, attest this fact, and the former no more emphatically than the latter. His resurrection, his death, his ministry, his miracles, his life, his boyhood, his birth, the prophecies concerning him, all have been the subjects of investigation through the centuries, and all alike have been the marvel of the ages.

Jesus the man, as well as Jesus the Son of God has been the theme of poets, philosophers, statesmen, writers, critics, no less than the myriads of Churchmen who have sought to follow in the path which His footsteps have marked for the toiling saints of earth. Even skepticism has paid tribute unconsciously and unintentionally to this commanding figure of the centuries, by its frantic attempts to discredit the authenticity of His claims upon human fealty and devotion. All systems of philosophy and all rules for human conduct stand or fall when measured by the standards of Jesus of Nazareth.

The utterance of the Greeks who made known their wishes to Philip typifies the deepest desires of needy and perplexed humanity. "We would see Jesus," possibly out of curiosity, possibly to satisfy the Greek tendency to study philosophies, possibly to supply a need of which they were not as yet fully conscious, possibly to acquaint themselves more fully with the teachings of One they had come to recognize as Lord and Master. The centuries of the Christian Era have echoed the same desire as the highest aspirations which may come to the soul of man.

There are those who do not see beyond Christ as a figure of history. They worship Him as men worship a hero who has wrought valiantly and won position in the world through meritorious deeds. Others study Him with critical mind with varying admiration, dependent upon their conceptions of His moral leadership. Some see in Him no divinity beyond that of the ordinary man, and follow Him as they follow any teacher who proves his ability to lead. Still others see Him as a great preacher, whose utterances command a foremost place in literature and in philosophy, and whose moral standards are admitted to be the divine standards.

None of these see Jesus as he really is, as a living Presence in the world, operating in human lives for their cleansing to prepare them for the in-dwelling of Jehovah. They see Jesus the man only, and not his ability to save to the uttermost all who "come unto God by him." Their vision does not extend to Gethsemane, where Christ saw the deepest needs of sinful humanity and turned not back from the death that awaited him. They have not felt the joyous heart throb that betokens his living touch, nor have they heard his comforting assurance, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." They have not been with him in distress, or in direst necessity, or at the gateway of death and received his glad message, "Let not your heart be troubled." They have not been raised to "walk in newness of life" with him, nor do they know the happiness of an in-dwelling Savior.

Christ will reveal himself by the power of the Spirit to every earnest seeking heart, but none the less ought he to be revealed in the life of every Christian disciple. Every consecrated life should be a mirror to reflect the love of Christ to a needy world. Too often Christ is presented as a theoretical Savior; too seldom is he accepted in his fulness as leader, comforter, companion and Redeemer.

Men have tried to demonstrate what Jesus would do were he on earth in the flesh today. A far more practical query is "What will he have us do in the sphere of our influence that others seeing our good works may be led to glorify our Father which is in Heaven?" O that the world might be made to know the vital and abiding joy of a real vision of Jesus Christ! It is the foundation of all genuine Christian experience. It is the essence of heart relationship with Jehovah. It is fundamental to a successful propagation of Christ's gospel.

The church—the followers of our Lord—should be able to show Jesus Christ to the world, yea more, it should be able to make the world hungry to see and know the Savior of men. The church is troubled because it lacks efficiency in winning the world to Christ, when its difficulty lies in a failure to portray Jesus to the multitudes as a living, present Savior, who can meet every vital need of the human soul. He is just as able and just as willing now to minister to human necessities as he was in the days when the multitudes thronged his pathway, and besought his beneficent healing for their maladies. But the materialism of the age has beclouded the vision, and men behold the Christ as through a darkened glass. They hold to religion theoretically, but allow the cares of business, and the selfishness of gain, and the desires of worldly ambition, and the clamor for place in society to obscure the glory of Christ's holy presence as a living force to better human life.

What an impetus would be given to world evangelization, if only the masses could be made to see Jesus as their personal friend, not only able but anxious to minister to their deepest soul necessities!

The darkness of heathendom vanishes when the presence of Christ is revealed. The light of His truth will obliterate the squalor and wretchedness of the slums of our cities, when once it has a chance to exercise its power. A real vision of the Christ will revolutionize trade and commerce, and restore the equity of judicial administration; it will cleanse society of its shams and its dross; drive the money changers from the temple of government; establish justice between capital and labor, and purify the highways of life for the upward march of the children of men.

But it will do more. It will cleanse human life of its sin, and harmonize its purposes with the divine purposes. It will lift man out of his selfishness and beget in the soul a holy ambition to please God. It will replace hatred with love, substitute gladness for sorrowing, and satisfy the longings of every life that is hungry to know the truth.

To see Jesus is to broaden one's hopes and aspirations, while enlarging the perceptions of duty and obligations as children of an all-wise Father. Seeing Him will enoble conduct, strengthen faith, sweeten life and establish character. He who lives so as to reveal Jesus Christ to the perceptions of his fellows will receive a disciple's reward.

Growing in the Christian Life

While the buds are bursting under the impelling power of the warmth of spring, and all nature is taking on its verdure of green, it is a good time for man to study the mechanism of his development in the things of the spirit.

Too many Christian lives are governed by impulse. Their feelings are the standards by which experience is gauged, and when their emotions are no longer stirred, the religious life ebbs and all but dies. Their status depends upon environment as does the plant life. They are fair weather Christians, creatures of circumstance, dependent upon outward rather than inward energy and inspiration.

Healthy Christian growth does not depend upon environment. Its tap root is in unchangeable soil, eternally enriched for the propagation of the religious life. The successful Christian triumphs over circumstances, rather than is dominated by them.

An essential characteristic of the Christian life is growth. Conversion is the initial step; it is the planting, the grafting into the vine, the germinating of the seed already sown. The plant that fails to grow bears no fruit and is a useless encumberer of the ground. So with the Christian who would thrive perpetually upon the first joyous impulses of the new-born life, and who realizes no enlargement of soul, no broadening of vision, no development in the things of God.

"First the blade, then the ear, after that the full corn in the ear." That is the law of nature. No less is it the law of the spiritual kingdom. O the pity of it, that so many have failed to learn this fundamental lesson! Many a life has been sickly and dwarfed, and has finally died because it tried to thrive upon past blessings, and has had no vital connection with the perpetual source of life and power. Many a meeting is barely existing because it has not applied the law of growth to its operations and relies upon tradition or some past experience for its only inspiration.

Happy is he who has learned that the Christian life is continuous, and that each day brings new refreshing and new fruition.

Increasing the Circulation

We omit the usual story this week on "Our Gains in Circulation" in order to give space to other matters. We trust there will be no diminution of effort anywhere to add to the circulation of the AMERICAN FRIEND. We commend a re-reading of the article on the second page of last week's issue, especially the paragraph setting forth the action of the East Main Street Meeting at Richmond. It is all worthy of the most careful study.

As the result of worldly ambition, men strive to win, and will make any sacrifice in that direction. If Christian lives were characterized by the same energy to attain religious ends, what wonders might not be accomplished in the way of world evangelization!

It is essential to get men converted, but conversion is only the starting point. It is just as important that men live right as that they start right, and the Church should help them to realize this ideal.

The lessons of experience are the most valuable lessons of life. What a man knows as a real fact of life is worth more than all the speculations of the philosophers.

Consider Christ Jesus Heb. 3: 1

HIS TEMPTATION

One of the most pathetic and touching scenes in the life of our Savior was His forty days' temptation in the Wilderness. Its sublime pathos and intensity are exceeded only by the events of the last few hours, culminating in the agony in Gethsemane and the tragedy of the Cross.

A correct understanding of this subject seems to require a brief consideration of one legitimately and necessarily connected therewith; I allude to the existence of a personal being variously termed the devil, Satan, and names of kindred import.

Upon the admission that there is such a being depends not only a satisfactory explanation of our Savior's temptation, but also the solution of the problem of moral evil in the world, and a consistent interpretation of many portions of both the Old and New Testaments.

As with regard to the Divine Being, so with respect to Satan, the sacred writers, instead of arguing the point, with the utmost naturalness speak of his existence as an admitted fact. They ascribe to him the attributes of personality, such as intelligence, speech, memory, action and will.

Moral evil, with all its awful ravages, is in the world and has been from the dawn of history. Every generation has had its myriads of human kind that have exhibited the most diabolical qualities. As to the nature of this enemy of God and man, he has from the beginning of his fall, sought the overthrow of the Kingdom of God on earth, and by a nature self-acquired by voluntary sinning, he has sought and is still seeking, the ruin of our race. But while he unquestionably has great power he is neither omnipotent nor omnipresent. His power is limited, a thought in which the children of God take great comfort. "Greater is He that is in you than he that is in the world." His nature is cunning and malignant. He is described by such terms and metaphors as a "roaring lion," a "serpent," a "liar," etc.

Such was the being who, for forty consecutive days, assaulted the Lord Jesus. Artful beyond all our powers to conceive, and as malevolent as artful, he exerted all his hellish force against the "Man of sorrows." Of such a conflict earth was never before the arena. Compared with this the clashing steel of the ancient gladiators, or the surging battalions of a Xerxes or a Hannibal, an Alexander or a Napoleon, seem but a display of veriest weakness and almost destitute of valor. Here on one side is the immaculate Son of God, on the other is the prince of legions of powerful spirits; one who had once despoiled Eden, who dared to confront the Archangel, and who now charges upon Him whose strength he is yet to learn is more than a match for his, and whose wisdom exceeds even devilish cunning.

Turn his shafts whatever way he will, they rebound against the invulnerable panoply of the Captain of our Salvation and return upon the head of Satan himself.

Let us picture the scene. It was in the wilderness—a wild, uninhabited region, with no roof to shelter Him, and no couch on which to repose, alone, surrounded by wild beasts—here, day after day and night after night He endured a great fight of afflictions in meeting the assaults of the prince of the powers of darkness. With a nature so pure, with perceptions so acute, with an abhorrence of sin so intense, as those possessed by the Son of God, how loathsome must the presence of this embodiment of all evil have been! How obnoxious his most plausible suggestions! How afflicting to such a nature his buffetings. We can well understand the force of the words, "He Himself hath suffered, being tempted." Heb. 2: 18.

While only three forms of Christ's temptation are mentioned by the evangelists, we are not to suppose these are the only ones presented by the enemy. We are told that "He was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin." Nor did those forty days make an end of His being tempted. The account says that "the devil left Him for a season," implying a renewal of his attacks.

James says (Chap. 1: 14), "Every man is tempted when he is drawn away of his own lust and enticed." Those who disbelieve in the personality of Satan, use this text in support of their position. Temptation is defined by Webster as "enticement to evil." And Adam Clarke in commenting on this text in James says: "When giving way to the evil propensity of his own heart, he does that to which he is solicited by the enemy of his soul." James does not say that there is no other way of being tempted. Indeed, his language implies that there is an enticing agent without that influences the lusts within.

To deny the personality of Satan necessitates the alternative of one of two explanations. First, either that Christ and the apostles were the victims of ignorance and prevalent superstition, and believed in an unreal demonology, which cannot be harmonized with the Scripture doctrine of His Deity, and the inspiration of the apostles; or secondly, the other explanation which maintains that the language employed where Satan is mentioned is figurative, and that our evil propensities are personified under that name. This like the other is incompatible with a belief in the immaculate nature of our Savior, of whom it is said, "He was holy, harmless, undefiled, and separate from sinners"; and who said of Himself, "The prince of this world hath nothing in me." To apply James' definition of temptation to our Savior, and allow that He was possessed of inward lusts, affects the doctrine of the Atonement. It does not harmonize with the inspired record, "He offered Himself without spot to God."

Temptation has three stages—the perceptions, the desires, and the will. If it stop with the first, it does not involve sin; it may even affect the desires, momentarily and in an involuntary way, without incurring it, but when the will yields, the result is sin.

Now the perceptions may be addressed through any one of the five senses, or through the imagination or the memory. One may see or hear, or the imagination present, or the memory recall, some object toward which the evil one may draw the mind, in an unlawful way. Here now is the point of danger. If the eye is allowed to continue to see or the ear to hear, that evil against which we have power to close them, or if we allow the mind through the power of the memory, or the imagination to revel amid sinful scenes, the desires are at once kindled, and soon the will is in danger of being overpowered, and sin brought forth in act.

In the case of our Savior, His affections were all holy, His desires pure, and while He could not but perceive the temptations presented to Him by Satan, they met with no response. Though the innocent sensibilities of His soul were stirred, still the temptation found no root in the desires, the will was firm and, though greatly annoyed, He was totally unharmed. Temptation did not pass its first stage.

Some assuring portions of Holy Scripture will form an appropriate conclusion to this subject: "We have not an High Priest who can not be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." "For in that He Himself suffered, being tempted, He is able to succor them that are tempted." "There hath no temptation taken you but such as is common to man, but God is faithful who will not suffer you to be tempted above that ye are able; but will with the temptation make a way of escape that ye may be able to bear it." "Wherefore He is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by Him, seeing He ever liveth to make intercession for them." "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world."

In Regard to the Society of Friends

BY SARAH BALDERSTON

The more I know about Friends, the more thoroughly I am impressed with the potential strength of the Society. As a religious sect without forms of creed and ritual, it has an excellent opportunity for free growth and development. Membership in our Society implies the keeping of high moral standards. Our primary belief in the guidance of the "Light within" is the starting point for fullest spiritual experience.

When George Fox came forth with this "Message of the Inner Light," he broke loose from traditional moorings, hence was called a heretic. His followers with a share of his vision passed on his teaching faithfully. Yet, as often in forward movements, there came a retrogression involving something of a return to the moorings from which our first leader had launched, until Friends found themselves entangled by doctrines. While still holding to the Inward Light, they let disputes on matters of theology cause internal divisions, after which the parts lived on still clinging to the principle at the heart of our Faith, but casting the truth in differing molds until the primary facts were obscured. So now, several "bodies bearing the name of Friends" outwardly reveal different ways of expressing the same religious aspiration.

But with this understanding of conditions in the Society of Friends comes a question as to the difficulties causing its comparative standstill. The present attitude of its branches toward each other and toward the rest of the Christian Church is not ideal. I am almost led to compare the relation of our Society to the world with those of the Hebrew people toward the surrounding nations at the time of the Christian Era. However, the cases are not exactly parallel. A writer has said in explanation of the size and exclusive state of the nation, Israel, that the vessel which should keep pure the religion of Jehovah had to be small. We cannot say a like thing of our Society when we consider it only a part of the great multitude who have a knowledge of God. Certainly none of us wishes to claim the characteristic of the Pharisee who prayed, "Father, I thank thee that I am not as other men are," for our separate Society, separate branch or even for any one of us. For the worthy Christian prays rather, "God be merciful to me a sinner," whenever he becomes conscious that he has let a personal difficulty or device make him blind to his opportunity of helping human need.

Because this attitude of self-sacrifice is at the heart of the Christian faith, we should recognize in it the key by which to unlock the problem of our ill-adjustment. Surely unity is the thing we must need, in order that we may respond to the call of our fellowmen for a more living Christianity. Some are asking, "What have we to give; the message of the Inward Light is no longer distinctly the possession of Friends?" Shall we say that the containing vessel has been broken, part of the substance remaining with the pieces and part spread abroad? Shall we not rather endeavor to re-assemble the parts and, bringing each section into contact, hope to cement them in a true fellowship? Then God may again use the Society of Friends as a chosen vessel.

To some a mended cup may suggest a leaking one. Perhaps the vessel for the Spirit of God had best be a sieve. As we let the Gift of His Presence pour out from our lives, they are refilled by a greater flood from the Source. So may the vessel, our Society, become full by the complete pouring forth of its contents.

A Phase of the Quaker Message.

BY ARTHUR GARRATT DORLAND

Some of us may have heard the question raised as to whether Quakerism in America has still a definite message or a particular mission to perform. Whatever our answer to that question may have been, I wish to deal with one particular phase of the Quaker message which, I do not say we no longer emphasize, but which I do say, owing to certain existing conditions today, there is a danger that we as Friends do not emphasize strongly enough. I refer to the testimony of Friends in regard to war. Public men, the press, the pulpits of various denominations and many others hitherto uninterested in this great question, have joined to denounce the terrible consequences of war and to extol the desirability and reasonableness of peace. This is the condition that may account for the danger to which I referred above. The phenomenal advance of the Peace Movement may have tended to make us feel less responsible for the advocacy of principles that we may have come to believe even now pretty generally accepted, in theory at least, by the majority of thinking persons today. But a careful examination of the popular attitude towards the question of war leads us to believe at present that we have still a special mission to perform in this matter and that the testimony of Friends in regard to war is by no means generally accepted, even in theory by the vast majority of those who have more lately espoused this great cause.

First, let me say, that I do not wish to belittle the valuable support of these latest advocates of Peace, or to depreciate the tremendous impetus that this popularizing of the Peace Movement has lent to the cause. It is one of the most hopeful signs of the times. But I do wish to show that our responsibility as Friends in regard to this question is not lessened because of the rapidly forming public sentiment against war; but on the contrary, that our responsibility is increased in order to direct this forming sentiment along the highest and best lines, especially along the lines which have always been advocated by Friends.

For, while these recent and valuable advocates of Peace condemn war because of its disastrous results to a nation, morally, physically and economically; they still believe that certain wars are often necessary and unavoidable and therefore, in such cases, right. War is wrong, they say, because of the evils that follow. Nevertheless, they would, under certain circumstances, make a virtue out of necessity by saying that as many wars are absolutely necessary and unavoidable and may be waged for just causes, that under those conditions war is perfectly justifiable as a means to an end. The means they condemn as wrong because of the loss and suffering it entails; but if a certain end apparently good in itself and attainable in no other way can be obtained by war, it may be right. In other words, the end justifies the means. It is astonishing how many people really accept this insidious doctrine, not only in its application to war but also to other important problems of human life.

But this is a shallow view of the question. The trouble is that many of these well-meaning advocates of Peace have as yet only a partial understanding of the truth in regard to the wrongfulness of war. For, while they maintain that peaceable methods are best, and deplore the evil consequences of war, it is rather the evil consequences of war they deprecate and not war itself. They will not admit, nor do they generally believe (as Friends have always maintained and believed) that peaceable methods are the only right methods, and that war is always and under all circumstances wrong, not primarily because of its evil consequences, but because it is in itself wrong and immoral. In brief, it is the moral aspect of the question that they too often overlook, since they appeal to self interest and to reason, and not to the inherent immorality of war itself for its condemnation.

The fact that so many of the latest advocates of peace today believe that war is under certain circumstances justifiable and right, even while they deplore its evil results, shows that they need to be further educated to take a higher view of the question and to realize the inherent immorality of war itself, which is the view that Friends have always maintained towards the question. The selfishness, greed and violence from which wars spring, and the injustice, the mutual mistrust, the unchristian acts in which wars result—in a word—the inherent immorality of war itself, this is still I believe, and always has been, the peculiar testimony of Quakerism against war. Our testimony as a religious body is based, not upon a mere appeal to political economy, to reason, or to self interest, important as these are, but upon great, eternal, moral principles of right and wrong.

Therefore, while public men, the press and the pulpits of different denominations have come to espouse the cause at once so precious and so peculiarly a part of the Quaker message; as a religious body we have not been one whit relieved of our responsibility, nay of our high privileges to emphasize the great moral principles for which we have always stood; until all men everywhere shall come to see with us that peaceable methods are the only right and just methods, and that war is always and under all circumstances wrong.

Recollections of Childhood Training in Peace Principles

BY MARY DOAN HOLE

I. The Question

Did you ever begin to relate an incident and find that practically all the details had fled, there remaining chiefly the meaning it had for you? I have been asked to tell the incidents of a visit to Fort Meyer. The time was the early spring. The loveliness of the day was indicated by the gorgeous bulbs set in the rolling green of Arlington. At the end of the car ride I was tempted to go, not to Fort Meyer but to Arlington, up to the pergola, then over to the old flower garden and finally to the dignified porch of the Lee mansion, there to feed upon the wonderful view of which nobody ever tires. However, the fact of this trip being on very special invitation and to a more "exclusive" affair than I had previously attended there, made me relinquish the visit to the calm retreat of soldiers in the "low green tent that never outward swings," for the animated exhibition of skill among the most robust and agile of living soldiers. This is all I remember distinctly until I sat in the great armory with the program nearing the end of the riding feats. Then it was, however, I learned the meaning of that visit to Fort Meyer which is precisely what I plan to set down here.

Yes, there had been marching, much of it, out on the grass, but I had been little moved by it. I now sat in the huge building in the midst of admiring Washington. Young men in flawless gloves toyed with their canes, girls sat blushing and smilingly near with chaperons properly unobservant; besides these many of the real celebrities of government were present on that day. The music, the cheering, the flutter of conversation between events, all joined to do honor to the god of war. And there I sat, a Quaker girl, with the ideals of peace as unmistakably inherited as the color of my hair or my sur-name. It was not so strange that I was there as that I had been, until that moment, lost in admiration for the moving pageant before me. The horses and men, the dextrous riding and graceful pose had thus far been of interest because of themselves, and not because of the message the event had to proclaim.

The drilling of Scotch soldiers at Edinburgh Castle had been to me an interesting picture of plaided men amidst picturesque surroundings, and then it was dismissed from mind as a passing form both in dress and profession; the English red coat had seemed useful as a gay spot on the gray landscape, but a figure doomed to leave the earth with the movement of modern reform, and so he was dismissed from my mind; the travel-stained Italian companies marching along dusty highways I had watched as only a part of history still visible in that historic land; A French squad, evidently not on dress parade, had seemed a moving illustration of the truth expressed by President Jordan's "Blood of the Nations," and passed out of my thoughts; the United States cadets at the university had been a periodic display which I admired regretfully day after day, and then dismissed with the conviction that none of them would ever know real warfare; so it had been with the marching on this particular day at Fort Meyer, it had been dismissed with only a passing thought.

But with the riding exhibition it was very different. As I recall it now, my absolute abandon to enthusiasm over the skillful riding must have been due in part to the fact that I had never seen a circus, but that reason never occurred to me then. It is good to see success in an undertaking, perfection of feat! These selected men in easy costumes with the color which the exercise had brought to their faces and the brightness of glance the excitement of the hour had called forth, together with the precision and grace of movement had engaged all my admiration. But in the midst of it I came to myself. Why these fine horses at the disposal of these fortunate young Americans? Indeed, why these perfectly prepared directors? How did this institution across from Arlington cemetery come to be at all, especially why so prosperous that it had become a thriving little village in itself? Why had this splendid representation of the society folk of Washington come out that afternoon? What is the purpose of this gathering and who supports homes and horses and men? What is the recompense of all this to the world?

II. The Answer

As I sat there asking myself such questions, I recalled the return of the soldiers from the Transvaal at the close of the South African war. How worn and depleted in ranks as the khaki-colored lines of men marched through the streets of a quaint English town where I happened to be. The bells were ringing joyfully for the return of the few, but they might as fittingly have tolled for the many who had not come back. That was a picture of war which I remembered without any of the enthusiasm this afternoon's performance was engendering. It was a picture which did not allure. Why should this one at Fort Meyer, this moving picture I was attentively following? The fine horses, the gracefully trained men, the great institution, the splendid gathering of society folk,—all were there because it is one of the policies of our government to educate men so that they will be skilled in ways of killing other men. That is the answer. As I sat there I remembered both my grandmothers in their Quaker caps. Their serene faces and their calm mien seemed to assure us of that day when "nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither should they learn war any more." (Isaiah 2: 4; Micah 4: 3.) I had never heard a tirade against war in my childhood home, never heard Carlyle's line, "War is the business of devils," though his lines in praise of work were of frequent mention. At family devotion I had felt that the thirty-eighth and forty-third verses of the fifth chapter of Matthew applied to groups of people as well as to individuals. "Ye have heard that it was said, an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth; but I say unto you, resist not him that is evil; but whosoever smiteth thee on thy right cheek turn to him the other also." * * * "Ye have heard it was said, thou shalt love thy neighbor and hate thine enemy; but I say unto you, love your enemies."

Dymond's Essay on War used to lie on the library table, and whatever it may have signified to the older members of the family, it was to me a material token of the seriousness of the scourge of war. Another material token was a certificate of life membership in the National Peace Association which my Aunt received and unwrapped when I was present.

As I sat there I remembered that the teacher of United States History in the Friends' Academy took as much time to emphasize the seventy years of peace in Pennsylvania while it was under the laws of brotherly love as she did to reiterate the facts of any battle in the Civil War! She helped us to see that that "Holy Experiment in government was a successful one."

As I sat there that afternoon Ruskin's "Dream—Parable of War and Wealth," came to my mind. That was a remarkable children's party where the little guests were set free to amuse themselves in the rooms and gardens. They were very happy for awhile, you remember, but those in the garden finally separated themselves into parties, each declaring that it would have a piece of the garden for its own, and later joined in a violent quarrel concerning which piece each should have. Is it not fine irony where the boys "took up the affairs, as boys should practically," and fought in the flower beds, out of spite trampling down one another's bits of garden? The girls cried, you remember, until all, boys and girls alike, were so weary that they lay down in the ruins and waited until evening, when they were to depart. As fairy-like as the palace was, the children who had stayed in the house, soon became tired. It struck two or three of the more practical ones, you remember, that they would like some of the brass headed nails that studded the chairs, and so they set to work to pull them out. Presently, the children who were engaged in games, listening to music or reading in the library, came from over the house and soon all were spraining their fingers in pulling out brass headed nails. With all they could procure they were not satisfied. At last the really practical and sensible ones, according to the story, declared that nothing was of any real consequence that afternoon, except to get plenty of brass-headed nails. The boys began to fight for nails as the others had fought for bits of garden, although they knew they would not be allowed to carry away so much as one brass knob. "What a false dream this of children," says Ruskin. "The child is father of the man and wiser. Children never do such foolish things. Only men do." The recollection of this superb story took deep hold on me that afternoon at Fort Meyer as the dextrous riding continued, and I sat there, present, yet far away in my thoughts.

No, I cannot tell you the details of that visit to Fort Meyer; they have fled, but I have, I trust, suggested that it had a meaning for me. The fort and its living soldiers had brought reflections more serious than I should have engaged in that day if I had made a visit to Arlington with its nameless but honored graves. Those nameless graves tell us of men who left families and friends and business and pleasure, and who died at the bidding of their country. How long will our beloved, our Christian land, continue to give its sons such bidding?

The Commission Plan in a Friends Meeting

BY HARRY R. HOLE

A recommendation of one of the commissions reporting to the Five Years Meeting referred to "the secretarial system." A delegate arose to ask what "the secretarial system" is, and rather than take the time necessary to discuss the subject, the recommendation was withdrawn. The inquiry was entirely in place, and the withdrawal altogether appropriate, because the "system" referred to has thus far existed almost wholly in the minds of a few individuals, and at best is decidedly in an embryonic state. It may mean anything or nothing, according to its treatment at the hands of Friends. One possible local development is presented herewith.

A Friends' meeting strategically located in a populous New England city, which gives its pastor ample liberty and expects results in return, has recently adopted an experimental plan for systematizing its work and correlating its varied activities, present and probable. Similar plans have been proven satisfactory in government, business, and elsewhere, commending the underlying principles as susceptible of application to the church. Under the Quaker idea of church government, however, ruling power is displaced by the opportunity to display an intelligence that will rule by virtue of its own weight alone, and will have no greater influence than is justified by the use of it. There is no revolution, no interference with established order, but merely the bringing into one body of the things now too often considered as separate forces.

All the work of the meeting is divided into five departments, namely, Religious Activity, Religious Education, Finance, Missions, and Social Service. Each department is placed under the leadership of a secretary, and the direction of such bodies as are concerned particularly with its interests. The five secretaries are constituted an Executive Board of the congregation, with authority and responsibility for seeing that all the directions of the meeting are carried out; to serve as a committee on publicity, to advise and assist in all departments, each head having similar authority and responsibility in his or her own department.

The pastor of the meeting, by virtue of his appointment, is also Pastoral Secretary, or secretary of the department of religious activity. From the fact that all other interests exist only as contributory to the spiritual interests, the pastoral secretary is also constituted chairman of the executive board, with advisory supervision over all departments. Specifically, his charge is the meeting and its pastoral care, the Christian Endeavor Society, and the evangelistic activities in the local meeting: his body in authority is the pastoral committee.

The superintendent of the Bible School, by virtue of his election to that office, is also Educational Secretary, with the Bible School as his chief authority, and its interests, along with moral education, musical development, and so forth, as his leading interests.

The secretaries of the other three departments are appointed by the meeting in such manner as it may determine. In this case, both by accident and design, the Financial Secretary is a man who is closely connected with financial interests in the meeting as well as similar interests outside, and the remaining two, heading the departments respectively of Missions and Social Service, are finely qualified women. This divides the constituency of the executive board almost evenly between the sexes, which is desirable, while it recognizes the large part taken by our women in foreign work, and introduces the traits of the housewife into the realm where they are particularly needed—the service of the community: in social service the women may well direct, and the men obey.

The department of Finance includes the Finance Committee, the Trustees, the real estate and funds of the meeting, with the treasurers and money matters of all kinds in any way connected with the institution. Missions include foreign work, church extension at home, and every kind of activity in behalf of the spread of the gospel outside of the local field. Social service includes all benevolence, reform, social and betterment efforts local and other, which are not directly religious, but which originate in Christian principle and open the way for the salvation of souls.

Incidentally the plan provides for an Executive Office to be established in the meeting house, and for the systematizing of the calendar so that particular week nights shall be set apart for particular kinds of gatherings.

This much of the plan was reported by the committee that prepared it without evoking great enthusiasm. One remark was that it could do no harm and might do some good. But when the chairman read the last recommendation, namely, that the sum of $100 be appropriated to pay for a definite amount of paid service (in addition to that voluntarily given) by the secretary of social service, with the view of giving her an opportunity to create her own department, and with the thought of eventually employing that worker for full time on full support, this was hailed as the best thing suggested, and as putting life into the whole plan. It is a delight to work with a company of people who face the present task in this spirit.

And here lies the criterion of the whole matter. On paper only, this plan is little better than any other plan. But with live men and women in it and behind it, there is here the definite recognition of what too often exists in a crippled state for lack of recognition. There is in it the provision, not unharmonious with Friendly standards, for the things that other denominations are beginning to feel keenly the need of. The paid pastoral secretary who knows how to get others to do religious work, and the paid secretary of social service who will, like the best pastor, work and teach others to work, have here the machinery with which to expand to the full limit of their field and their capacity, and this same opportunity is shared by the remaining members of the local board.

Correspondence

To the American Friend:

DEAR FRIENDS—We had three days of rough sea on our voyage of eight days on the Mauretania, but we were not seasick. We enjoyed every hour of the journey. We were in the company of missionaries—two of whom were returning to China and two to Africa—who told us much of their fields of labor.

One meeting for worship was held on Sunday morning and a missionary address was given in the evening with two good literary programs during the week. These together with music from 10 to 11 a. m. and again from 4 to 5 p. m. every day, with three good meals and one tea helped to pass the time rapidly. The Cunard Daily, made possible by wireless, helped to make the voyage more than pleasant.

When we arrived in Liverpool a Friend, Charles Warner, met us and took us to his splendid Christian home for a week, where we met many Friends, as we were at Friends meetings of different kinds and places every night during the week. Now we are in London visiting meetings and schools of various kinds. We go to Scotland next week to attend their general meeting, and return to the north of England according to arrangements made by the committee for the American Friends and their concerns.

From there Lillian Hayes goes on to Woodbrooke School, and I will be in special meetings until Dublin Yearly Meeting. From there I will return to London Yearly Meeting, after which the plan is for more series of meetings unless we return to America, which is not decided. Please remember us in prayer that we may keep in the will of the Lord. His presence and leading has been very marked since we left home. I hope to be the better prepared for work in America as a result of this trip through the east. Friends here receive us with more than a welcome, and I hope to make good. I would like very much to be back home in time to attend North Carolina, Western and Indiana Yearly Meetings, if the Lord wills.

LEANAH HOBSON.

London, England, March 27.

Between the great things we cannot do and the small things we will not do, the danger is that we shall do nothing.—Monod.

A Word to Pastors

BY S. ADELBERT WOOD

As I visit meetings I am constantly reminded of a conversation I had thirty or more years ago with one of our first pastors. She in speaking of her congregation which she had gathered said, "They all receive their food from me as a babe receives its food from its mother and I do not know how to get them to a place where they will go direct to the Lord for themselves."

"Spiritual new-born babes" are a very desirable adjunct to the church although they stand in need of the "sincere milk of the Word" which is the proper food for babes and must be received from another as the babe receives its food from its mother, and this food must be supplied if the child is to live. But when we read that they who "use milk are unskillful in the word of righteousness" we can not fail to be impressed with the importance of babes passing from childhood to young manhood.

John describes a young man as one who has "overcome the evil one." David will serve us as a good example of a young man when he overcame Goliath of Gath "in the name of Israel's God." David received directly from the Lord the "strong meat" in the strength of which he was enabled to do an exploit so that ever after he walked with the tread of a conqueror. The overcomers of the evil one have in the strength of God overcome as none can who do not get to the Lord for themselves. We sing the praise of these overcomers and choose from among them our warriors and kings and they become the fathers who "know him who is from the beginning."

The question I wish to raise is this: Is our pastoral care such that we are producing "young men" and "fathers"? Or must it be said that although by reason of time many of our household should be teachers, they are still where they need to be taught?

The need of the church is men and women who are led by the Spirit independent of the directing of the pastor while in perfect harmony with him and true wisdom. It is evident to me as I visit among the churches, that much of the pastoral care is not of a nature to produce independent workers, and that Christian activities are being more and more confined to the directing of the pastor. This means that the body of believers do not come under the direct guidance of the head of the church. They occupy the relation to the pastor that Israel chose when they said to Moses, "Go thou near and hear all that Jehovah our God shall say: and speak unto us all that Jehovah our God shall speak unto thee; and we will hear it and do it." Deut. 5: 27.

That it was far better for Israel to have a pastor who was in direct communication with their God than to be left without either Moses or God to lead them is evident, but if Israel could have continued to hear the voice of Jehovah their God they would not have repeatedly rejected Him, as they would have continually beheld His glory and lived in constant communion with Him.

Origin of Babylon Script

We take the following from the Philadelphia Public Ledger of recent date, concerning the work of Dr. George A. Barton, of Bryn Mawr College, one of our leading Eastern Friends:

"Philadelphia and its immediate vicinity have been in the past the chief centre of research in Assyriology in this country. To the long list of publications emanating from this quarter another of a monumental character must now be added. By his investigations in Babylonian paleography Professor George A. Barton, of Bryn Mawr College, has become the foremost authority on that subject. His work, "The Origin and Development of Babylonian Writing," is far in advance of anything that has been attempted in this important investigation, and he has thrown much light upon the original pictures from which the cuneiform writing has been developed.

"For a number of years Professor Barton has been the leading authority on prehistoric decipherment. Such archaic script as the Hoffman tablet in the General Theological Seminary, New York City, the Blau monuments of the British Museum, and one in the University Museum, were studied by him. From these inscriptions and a few others he has compiled a considerable list of real pictographs. In addition, he has given a list of the signs and has traced their development through all periods of Babylonian and Assyrian history. The most important feature of the present work is the establishment of a scientific method of investigation. This involved the proof of the unscientific character of former methods, and the practical demonstration of the hypothesis that Babylonian writing, like the primitive writing of the Egyptian, Hittite, Cretan, Chinese and other ancient peoples, originated in pictographs. It was from the pictographic ideographs that the syllabic and alphabetic values were developed.

"The author has identified the original picture of nearly two-score signs, hitherto not recognized. He shows how the Sumerians combined different pictographs in order to express complex ideas; for example, a bowl under the mouth denoting "to eat." He holds that of the 719 signs he has listed, 288 different pictographs have now been identified with considerable probability, while 209 are probably compound signs.

"Professor Barton believes that, owing to the nature of the writing materials employed in the Mesopotamian Valley, it was difficult to make accurate pictures, and in consequence conventional forms derived from pictures supplanted the originals at an early date. The conventionalization of the signs went on through the centuries as long as the cuneiform writing was in use. Seven different periods of development are distinguished, covering more than 3,000 years.

"The work contains the most comprehensive tables of numerals, weights and measures of different periods ever brought together; in short, it is the most complete collection of signs of all periods listed in their relative chronological sequence. The work will be of great value to all Assyriologists."

Current Items of Interest to Friends

Baltimore Yearly Meeting

Friends of Alonzo E. Cloud will be glad to know that he has largely recovered from the shock following the loss of an eye from an explosion last year. He has sold his farm and is rendering good service in the Lower Virginia meetings.

Annie D. Stabler, of Washington City, is spending the month of April in the meeting and families of Lower Virginia, particularly at Black Creek. The building of the new meeting house at Sedley has opened new doors and added new responsibilities in this neighborhood.

L. Oscar Moon, field secretary of the Yearly Meeting Committee on Evangelization and Church Extension, who has been in England since the first of the year studying conditions and methods of work there, has returned to his home in Baltimore. Being delayed by head winds, he was unable to attend any of the sessions of the Quarterly meeting on March 29 and 30, as he had hoped. He arrived, however, on Sabbath afternoon in time to attend part of the meeting of the Evangelistic Committee. He enjoyed good health while abroad.

At Baltimore Quarterly Meeting, held at Baltimore, March 29 and 30, the chief interest was the development of an adequate ministry. A number of Friends spoke in the meeting on ministry and oversight, the prominent idea being that the Church must give fuller proof of its conviction of its own importance, and of the necessity of bringing the Christian message to the world. At the Quarterly Meeting in the afternoon, Esther G. Frame spoke on the "Riches of Christ." Though lacking the physical strength of earlier years, there was apparent no diminution of a desire for souls or of an appreciation of the power of God unto salvation. A conference was held in the evening of the 29th, addressed by Rufus M. Jones, of Haverford, Pennsylvania, the subject being the ministry. Purposeful preparation of young men and women for the service of the Church in spiritual and social lines was set forth as not only important, but necessary, and the responsibility was placed on the whole Church to see that this was brought about. The general desire was expressed that the address be printed for wider use. Rufus M. Jones also preached very acceptably on Sabbath morning.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

Members of the First Friends' Church at Marion, Indiana, have been busy collecting funds and giving aid to the many families of the city who were made homeless and destitute by the recent flood. Seventy-five dollars in cash was subscribed by Friends and much bedding, clothing, fuel, etc., was donated.

Revival services were recently conducted at Fountain City, Indiana. Milo Hinkle, of Farmland, was in charge, assisted by the pastor, Fred E. Smith. An extensive epidemic of the measles in the neighborhood, together with other sickness and some deaths, seemed to make it inexpedient to continue the services longer than one week.

The recent flood disaster at Hamilton, Ohio, seems to have been more extensive than is generally known. Among other losses the Y. W. C. A. suffered heavily. Evelyn White, a member of Indiana Yearly Meeting, whose home is near Knightstown, Indiana, is general secretary of the association in Hamilton. An appeal has been sent out to the churches and Christian societies far and near in an effort to rehabilitate the Young Women's Christian Association of that city. Evelyn White has asked that this appeal be extended to Friends in the hope that many will respond. Any contributions can be sent to her direct at Hamilton, Ohio, in care of the Y. W. C. A.

New England Yearly Meeting

Salem Monthly Meeting (Massachusetts) has been making special effort to increase the attendance and interest for several months past. In February, at Lynn, luncheon was served before the meeting, which is held in the evening, and Samuel L. Haworth, of Fall River, gave a helpful and inspiring address. In March, the meeting held at East Lynn was devoted particularly to the observance of the Livingstone centenary, while the April meeting at Salem was the most largely attended of all. A special trolley car from Lynn carried Friends from the two meetings there, numbering over forty. Lunch was served in the meeting house, and a practical address by Wilbur K. Thomas, of Boston, emphasized the importance of the spirit of Christ as exemplified in individual character.

Dover Monthly Meeting was held week before last at Dover, New Hampshire, a goodly number of Friends gathering for the occasion. In the meeting for worship, Charles Peaslee spoke profitably on praising the Lord at all times, after which Emma H. Hodges delivered a message on precious faith, precious promises, and the precious blood. The business meeting was made interesting by the application of five persons for membership from the Meaderboro Meeting and by the verbal report of the pastor of that meeting. From the time the present pastor and his family arrived, the spiritual temperature has been rising. At various times altar services have been called for, the responses to which have been encouraging. At one of these, the Holy Spirit fell manifestly upon a young man, the son of a Unitarian family, since which time he has been active among the young people in Christian effort for their salvation. Others among the young people are likely to make application for membership. A young men's Bible class is being formed, also a "Willing Workers' League," which contemplates holding home meetings. A "Women's Foreign Missionary Society" will soon be organized and will hold meetings twice a week for needlework by the women, after one of which the husbands and friends will be invited to supper and the enjoyment of a social occasion. The Meeting was cordial in recommending the liberation of Samuel H. Hodges and wife for service in the approaching New York Yearly Meeting.

North Carolina Yearly Meeting

While visiting in England, the home address of Leanah Hobson, formerly pastor at Mt. Airy, North Carolina, is Donnington, Harlesden, N. W., London, England.

Philadelphia Yearly Meeting

Dr. Lucy L. W. Wilson lectured at Friends' Select School on Fifth-day morning, Fourth month 17, 1913, at 9:00 A. M. Her subject was "Dr. David Livingstone and his work in Africa."

Western Yearly Meeting

Robert L. Kelly, president of Earlham College, was at Bloomingdale, and spoke on "The Abundant Life" in the meeting for worship, Sabbath morning, April 13, and in the evening his theme was "Unspotted from the World." On Monday he conferred with the trustees of Bloomingdale Academy and the County Superintendent of Education, concerning the future of the academy and plans were made for continuing the high grade of work in this institution.

The Inter-Academic Contest in declamation and oratory will be held at Bloomingdale, Indiana, May 2. There will also be an interesting Athletic day program. The competing academies are Fairmount, Plainfield, Vermilion Grove and Bloomingdale.

Carl Miller, of Vermilion Grove, Illinois, closed a two weeks' meeting at Mosier Chapel, March 3. The Gospel was preached in its fulness and in the demonstration of the spirit and with power. Repentance and heart purity were held up as the gospel standard. There were six conversions and six renewals with a deepening of the spiritual interests of the church.

Ministers and Workers Conference of Indiana Yearly Meeting

A new day of opportunity and larger activity is upon us. The call of God is clear; new light is bringing new and larger responsibilities; new visions are driving us afresh to the source of power. Ever since Pentecost, the value of united prayer and conference has been amply shown. Whenever God will lead his people forward he lays the burden on a band of men and women whose hearts he has touched, and through these leaders he arouses his church. The past is gone forever and the future is as yet unborn, but the present with all its joys, its responsibilities and its golden opportunities is ours and the tide of life is surging to the flood.

A strong program is being prepared for the Ministers' and Workers' Conference of Indiana Yearly Meeting to be held at Farmland, May 28-30 next. The first session, Wednesday afternoon, May 28, will be devoted to the Bible School. Wednesday evening will be devoted to Missions. Thursday the three services will consider respectively "The Sermon," "Methods" and "Rural Problems," while the closing session, Friday morning, will take up "Men and the Church."

But what we want especially to say at this time is come, come, come. Plan to come. Come and add your vision, your prayer, your personality to the gathering. Come and get in touch with the life currents which are now coursing through the body of Christ. Come and carry back to your work the practical suggestions, the inspiration and the steady purpose of others. And not only come, but see that your pastor comes.

GEORGE C. LEVERING,

President of the Conference.

Spiceland, Indiana.

Whittier College Notes

Whittier College in competition with the colleges of California, Arizona and New Mexico, was the winner in an inter-state oratorical contest recently held in Los Angeles. Harold Storey, of the Freshman Class, was the representative of Whittier College on the occasion, and the subject which he handled with such signal ability was "The New Revolution."

President Newlin, of Whittier College, was in attendance at the late Student Conference of the Pacific Coast Y. M. C. A., held at Pacific Grove, California, and gave an address at one of its sessions on "The Challenge of Opportunity in the Service of Teaching." The Whittier College Y. M. C. A. was represented at the conference by Morris Gifford, Frank Wright, Harold Haworth and Walter Cammack.

President Newlin, in the course of his journey in attending the conference, preached to the Friends' congregation at Lindsay, March 29th, and also addressed an afternoon mass meeting of the men of several churches of that place.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

MAY 4.

TOPIC—The Ideal Christian. V. His Prayers. Matt. 6: 5-13. (Consecration Meeting.)

Prayer is not only an essential but an indispensable element in the Christian life. Prayer is not only a petition, but it is communion. Not only are our wants to be made known unto God, but we need the blessings that come from the confidential touch of spirit with Spirit.

A workman can no more perform his labors without tools or equipment than can the Christian live without prayer. Not only do we need to pray as needy suppliants for the Father's favor, but prayer betokens a right relationship with Jehovah. The life that is nourished by an atmosphere of heavenly communion will know the joys of the Lord in their fulness.

Many prayers remain unanswered because they are prayers in form or in name and not in reality. Petitions for the gratification of selfish desire are not those which command the Divine favor. Petitions that are aimless or uttered by force of habit merely, are not within the category of prevailing prayer.

Christ's condemnation was upon the prayers of the hypocrite and the heathen, who delight in vain repetitions. His approval was upon the sincere, earnest prayer of one, who unseen, poured out his soul to the Father. The attitude of mind is vital in securing access to God.

"Pray without ceasing." It should be the rule of the Christian's life. Readiness to accept all blessings, all favors, all benefits, all good as the gift of the Father, is the sign of constant discipleship. Pray with importunity, with earnestness, with faith, with reverence.

Have each member discuss briefly a particular kind of prayer, as public prayer, family prayer, prayer for the unsaved, prayer for those we love, prayer for guidance, prayer for strength, etc. Finally, have all the members participate in a service of sentence prayers directed to some special end, closing with a dedicatory prayer which will impress a renewal of consecration to the work of the Lord.

Decisions of the United States Supreme Court have all been printed in one obscure shop for seventy-five years, and never once has previous knowledge of a decision leaked out.

Edward C. Young

Edward C. Young, whose death was noted recently in the obituary column of the AMERICAN FRIEND, and who attained the ripe age of eighty-four years, was of Quaker parentage, having been born in Baltimore, Maryland. For forty years he lived at North Lewisburg, Ohio, and for the first ten years of that period was engaged in the practice of medicine in that community.

He finally abandoned this profession to enter upon the work of the ministry, in which capacity he travelled in England, Scotland, Ireland, and throughout most of the yearly meetings in the United States. He felt that his life work was with the church. He was known widely among older Friends throughout America.

He was a capable man and strong preacher, holding steadfastly to Friends' doctrines and principles.

He died suddenly at the home of his nephew, Fred H. Young, at Indianapolis, with whom he was then living, his wife having preceded him to the better land some years ago. After rising from the breakfast table, he retired to his room for reading and study. Soon afterwards he called to his relatives, telling them composedly that he thought he was dying, and in a short time passed away.

Burial was held at his old home at North Lewisburg, the funeral services being conducted in the Friends' meeting house there by his old friends, Robert Douglas and Henry Johnson. * * *

New Books Received

Robert Barclay, by Christabel Cadbury. Publishers, Headley Bros., Bishopsgate, London, E. C., England. Price, 2 shillings, net.

The book is written in an interesting style and the author has given not only a clear and straightforward account of the life and writings of this prominent early Quaker, but also much interesting information concerning the history of Friends at that time. It would be valuable for the young Friends' Round Tables, which are studying the history of Quakerism.

John Greenleaf Whittier, by Georgina King Lewis. Publishers, Headley Bros., Bishopsgate, London, E. C., England. Price, 3 shillings 6 pence, net.

The English author has written a remarkably sympathetic account of the life and works of our Quaker poet. Especial emphasis is laid on his work in the anti-slavery movement; and while his gentle, lovable character is portrayed, it is the strength and nobility of the man which stays with us as we close the book. It is a valuable contribution to the already abundant literature that relates to the life and work of Whittier.

In the Vanguard, by Katrina Trask. Publishers, The MacMillan Company, New York City, N. Y. Price, $1.25.

The idea of this little drama is the moral wrong of war as opposed to the general conception of its glory, and is typified in the case of a young soldier who suddenly comes to a realization of this truth. The play is somewhat weak in action, but presents the idea of universal brotherhood in a forcible manner.

The Peace Maker, by W. Winslow Hall, M.D. Publisher, A. C. Fitfield, 13 Clifford Inn, London, E. C., England. Price, 1 shilling, net.

This is another peace drama, but of a different type. The play is allegorical, having as characters, "Uncle Sam," "Fritz," "Madame Britt," etc., and the idea emphasized is the fallacy of armed peace. After all have come under the wonderful influence of "The Peace-maker," distrust vanishes and the spirit of brotherhood prevails. It is written in a very clever and entertaining style.

DR. TALKS ON FOOD
Pres. of Board of Health.

"What shall I eat?" is the daily inquiry the physician is met with. I do not hesitate to say that in my judgment a large percentage of disease is caused by poorly selected and improperly prepared food. My personal experience with the fully-cooked food, known as Grape-Nuts, enables me to speak freely of its merits. "From overwork, I suffered several years with malnutrition, palpitation of the heart, and loss of sleep. Last summer I was led to experiment personally with the new food, which I used in conjunction with good rich cow's milk. In a short time after I commenced its use, the disagreeable symptoms disappeared, my heart's action became steady and normal, the functions of the stomach were properly carried out and I again slept as soundly and as well as in my youth.

"I look upon Grape-Nuts as a perfect food, and no one can gainsay but that it has a most prominent place in a rational scientific system of feeding. Any one who uses this food will soon be convinced of the soundness of the principle upon which it is manufactured and may thereby know the facts as to its true worth." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. "There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

COLLINS—Harriette Dalton Collins was born in Readfield, Maine, September 1, 1830, and died at the home of her daughter, at Montrose, Colorado. She united with Friends in 1866 and was recorded a minister in 1868. She began her career as an educator at the age of fourteen, teaching at many places in New England, and for six years at Georgetown Seminary in Kentucky, returning north at the outbreak of the Civil War. For six years she was connected with Oak Grove Seminary. Beside her educational work, she was active in the church, was a teacher of a Bible class, and a leader in the W. C. T. U., and missionary work.

COMFORT—Anna Irene Comfort, daughter of Charles M. and Elizabeth E. Comfort, was born in Adrian, Michigan, July 29, 1891, and died April 4, 1913, being 21 years and about 8 months of age. The deceased was a former student of Raisin Valley Seminary, and received her diploma from Adrian High School with the class of 1909. Later she spent two years at the Michigan State Normal College, from which institution she graduated with honors in 1912. At the time of her death she was teaching at Vandalia, Michigan. She was a birth-right member of Friends and in early childhood yielded her life to Christ, and was actively engaged in Sabbath-school and Young Women's Christian Association work. The benediction of her life is a rich memory. Funeral services were held at the Raisin Valley Friends' Church, with the pastor, M. M. Coffin, in charge.

For some ten years she had been an earnest, devout Christian, and a leading member of Madrugá Monthly Meeting ever since that meeting was founded in 1904. Three of her sons live in Madrugá, one in Mexico, and one son and a daughter live in Havana. Her dying testimony was of joy and peaceful assurance.

SWIFT—Mary Abbie Swift, a highly esteemed member of the Friends Meeting at West Falmouth, Massachusetts, died on Easter morning, March 23, at the home of her brother in Worcester, Massachusetts. Very sudden was the call, but "O think—to step on shore, and that shore Heaven; to feel invigorated and know it Immortality." Funeral services were held at her former home at West Falmouth, when touching tributes to the sweetness of her exemplary Christian life were given by Elam Henderson and Dr. James F. Cooper.

TABER—Lola Martha Taber, daughter of Ervin G. and Margaret C. Taber, was born in Matehuala, Mexico, April 12, 1889, and died January 8, 1913, at Whittier, California, aged 23 years 8 months and 26 days. In her youth she gave herself definitely to her Savior, and by His leadings in later years was called to missionary work in Mexico. Her beautiful life closed seemingly with her life-work undone, but it was not lived in vain, as she was always true to her Master and brought sunshine and blessing to all around her. "She belonged to God; hers is the victory in being promoted to higher and eternal service before the Lamb."

FEAR NOT

BY HAKARU SATO

*S*PARROW on the greenwood bough,
Fear not thou!
Sportsmen 'mid the autumn splendor
Roam the fields, but Thy Defender,
God, will let no feather fall
Unbeknown, for He knows all.
Hop and sing then on thy bough!
Little sparrow, fear not thou!

Guardian of the orange plot,
Fear not thou!
Tho' thy precious fruitage seeking
Thief or robber come a-sneaking,
God is guarding day and night,
Naught can pass beyond His sight.
Peaceful, then, watch o'er thy plot.
Orange keeper, fear thou not!

Men of God's great family,
Fear not ye.
What tho' pain and grief affright you,
Fiery darts of evil smite you?
In the Father's love deep hidden?
Falls one hair of yours unbidden?
Hearts, then, brave and peaceful be,
Men and brothers, fear not ye!

Increasing the Circulation

New subscriptions continue to reach the AMERICAN FRIEND office slowly. Since the last tabulation two weeks ago, 22 new names have been added to the list; but how slowly they come!

We feel that the time is at hand when the burden of responsibility relative to this periodical, should begin to grip the church as a whole, as it has not yet done. No less is the obligation upon our subscribers to continue their present subscriptions than it is upon others to join our ranks.

What the paper needs is a sustaining patronage that will enable it to be what our denominational needs demand. But there is much of indifference. Thousands apparently hardly know that there is such a periodical, and Friends almost daily continue to send correspondence and even remittances to the old office at Philadelphia.

Then, too, there are other thousands, waiting, waiting, somewhat suspicious, but holding back for fear that some article may not suit their particular fancy. We wonder if all of them apply this same policy to secular papers and magazines. If not, then why should our own denominational periodical be made to suffer by a treatment different from that accorded to others, the success of which is of no personal concern?

Friends need to come to feel that the AMERICAN FRIEND is their paper. No longer does it belong to a company of individuals. It is the property of the whole church, its success depending upon the degree of patronage and support accorded it.

The management appreciates deeply the interest already manifested. The problem is to get our non-subscribing families to know just how much our readers are appreciating the paper. This will have to be accomplished by those who read the paper, making all others feel that they cannot afford to do without it.

In previous issues, we have set forth concretely what may be done in the way of increasing our subscription lists. We have just learned that in an important meeting in Indiana, a campaign has begun, in which the various Sabbath School classes are to compete in an attempt to send in the largest list of new names.

Can we not have those 4000 new names by July 1? That means a little more than 3,400 names within two months. We can get them if pastors, young people, interested Friends and concerned meetings will get real busy at the task.

Marvelous Changes in China

The daily dispatches under date of April 17, carry the gratifying but remarkable information that the Chinese government has called upon all the Christian churches in that country to spend April 27 in prayer, that the new regime may be guided aright in the administration of the affairs of the new Republic. No better evidence has been given to show the vital changes which have taken place in the erstwhile Celestial Kingdom.

CORRESPONDENCE

Letter From England

SUNDERLAND, ENGLAND.

Dear Readers of the American Friend:

I came here from Edinburgh, Scotland, on Saturday, the 12th. The work is planned by a committee that has charge of American Friends and their concerns. Lillian Hayes, who was helpful in the work, is now in Woodbrooke School. I have arranged for another companion, who is helpful. We have visited Friends and meetings in Liverpool, London, Paris, France, and in Glasgow, Kilmanack and Edinburgh in Scotland. We will be here for some days, then will go to Darlington Quarterly Meeting and thence to Leeds Quarter. On the 29th I go to Dublin Yearly Meeting and will stay one week visiting meetings, and will then return to London Yearly Meeting.

At the close of Yearly Meeting I will begin a series of meetings at Bunhill Fields Friends Meeting, where George Fox is laid to rest. Pray for me that I may make good. The opportunity is great. The Lord is making the way very plain, and through the dear Friends, very easy. I have met with more than a welcome, for which I am very thankful to the dear Lord, who called me to this service. I hope to be better prepared for work in the home land as the result of this visit.

I hope to arrive in America in July to attend North Carolina, Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings, and take pastoral work some place as way opens.

LEANAH HOBSON.

An Appeal for Help

To Readers of the American Friend:

Vale Monthly Meeting, South Dakota, held April 18, decided to send out a general appeal for help to complete our church building, which was begun two years ago, but on account of crop failures, due to the non-completion of the irrigation project, has not yet been finished.

We have fifty members and many more ready to come in, when we are better organized. Spiritually this is decidedly the strongest church in all this region. Other denominations are eager to advance funds for our building and take over the field, but this would leave many, who can hardly join another denomination, without a church home. Every church in the Black Hills has had more or less help from mission funds.

Must this work pass from Friends? Will any who are interested respond quickly with what help they can give. We have faith that we can hold the work. Contributions should be sent to the clerk, Stephen Cartland Berry, Vale, South Dakota.

Signed,

Getting Rid of the Handicaps

"Let us lay aside every weight."—Heb. 12: 1.

Life is frequently pictured as a race, in which the runners receive rewards according to their deserts. The characterization is most apt. Whether regarded in the abstract or in the concrete, life is a course, a progression, a competition, wherein merit depends upon the manner of the running, no less than upon its purposes.

In the Olympic games, in the Marathons of today, only the athletes entered the lists, whether for their own physical development or to compete for the offered prize. In the race of life, all must run; no one is exempt; and upon the running depends our destiny. No less does the analogy hold good in the Christian life. "So run, that ye may obtain." On the race course many may strive, "but one receiveth the prize." In the Christian race, all receive awards in proportion to their manner of living.

The handicaps of life are elements that present a vital problem in this discussion. The Apostolic admonition to "lay aside every weight" was most opportune. It points the way to the solution of every problem wherein is involved the success of the Christian life. Multitudes are progressing with halting step, because of some impediment, some defect in experience, some unholy connection that has not been broken, some lack in complete consecration, some natural habit or tendency that has not been overcome or abandoned, some lack of faith, some disposition to carelessness, some physical ailment due to excesses, some age-worn tradition over-long observed, some besetting temptation, some tendency to controversy or fault finding, some narrowness of vision, some weight that clogs the step and hinders the normal development in the things of the spirit.

Sin is not only blighting to spiritual growth, but it arrests human progress at every point. No young man can climb the steep to what men call the highest success, with sin spotting his activities at every step. No young woman can attain social distinction or achieve culture that is ennobling, with sins, gross or otherwise, marking her pathway. The broken law of nature no less than the broken law of God, mars human character, scars the soul, and brands life with an unholy impress. Sin is a weight which no human life can afford to carry through life. Whether it be in the form of the proverbial "wild oats," or the characteristic "besetting sin," or the smaller disobediences that mark infractions of the divine law, it is destructive of that which is best in human experience, and is a handicap to every holy aspiration and endeavor.

It is not the so-called grosser sins alone which hinder man's progress toward God. The delinquencies of life that vitiate Christian character and dwarf spiritual growth are not all in the category of what the world calls vicious and vulgar, although they may be just as deadly in their final operation. Any tendency, any habit, any neglect of duty, any act, thought or purpose that affects the religious life and renders it incapable of the highest service for God and humanity, is a weight to be condemned and cast aside as unworthy and without merit. It is often the little transgressions that hinder progress, quite as much as the greater delinquencies. They are burdens to be cast aside with the same determination that is applied to the more pronounced violations of the statutes which govern human conduct.

O the pity of it that so much of humanity is halting, content to live upon the lower planes of experience, all for the lack of casting aside the hinderances that drag heavily at every step! Many a Friends' meeting is in a rut, held there by reason of custom, or tradition, or personal relationship, or social standing or blood kinship, and has not the courage to throw it off with the assurance of entering upon a larger life of happiness and service.

There is nothing that can be compared with the experience of the man or woman who is free in Christ Jesus, who dares to do the right as it is presented, who dares to follow the truth wherever it may lead. Freedom does not mean laxity, nor does it mean unbridled license. Either is a burden that is foreign to the nature of genuine freedom. The man who runs in the Marathon, while free from impediments, must observe the rules of the race. Such a requirement is not a limitation that hinders, but a guarantee of equity that is helpful. The race is not always to the swift, but always to the patient and the persevering who have cut all restraining cords.

"I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beateth the air; but I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection." This is a rule of conduct, which presages victory. It is a passport into the full enjoyment of the richest blessings of Jehovah.

Winning Our Youth

We heard the statement recently made that of ten boys allowed to go out of the Sabbath School without Christ, only two are won to Christ and the Church afterward.

It presents a problem that is both serious and fundamental. It recalls the proverbial Catholic declaration that if they are given the first seven years of a boy's life, they care not who has him in charge afterwards. Early character is abiding. The boy is father to the man. Yet all too often the Church pursues a policy that is altogether foreign to the general rule. Apparently proceeding upon the theory that if youth is not saved, there is hope in later life, children are allowed to go out of the Bible school, unacquainted with a personal Christ.

It would be interesting to know in how many schools of our own denomination, it is the rule in the classes to make a determined attempt to bring the pupils to Christ. Some of them make this effort, systematically, persistently, with a loving solicitude that brings results. Too many we fear are careless, teaching the lesson in a general, impersonal sort of way that makes little impress upon young minds that have not yet learned to think seriously. Too little is made of the Bible School as an evangelistic force, that personalizes Jesus Christ as a factor to be felt in every pupil's life. If it be true that only one boy in five is saved in after life who goes out of the Sabbath School without a consciousness of Christ, how great the responsibility of the Bible School and the Church in dealing with our youth!

The future church will be what the boys and girls of today make it, and their action then will depend largely upon their training now. It is our conviction that generally speaking youth can be converted better through the agency of the Sabbath School than by the influence of the Church direct, judging them by the average methods in vogue today. In the former, special attention is given the children; they are the object of solicitude. Bible School life centers about them. In the latter all too often no methods exist that are suited to interest or develop the children. In this respect there should be some radical changes, and both the Church and the Sabbath School should harmonize in activities that will grip the children while their minds are impressionable.

The Impress of Administration Custom

Christianity in the United States is greatly favored by reason of the religious atmosphere which apparently pervades the White House circles at Washington. General custom is regulated by administration custom more than we are wont to admit sometimes. A society administration stimulates social life not only at the Capital but throughout the land. A bibulous administration, wherein wine flows freely at all state functions, finds its counterpart in the freer use of intoxicants in public and domestic circles.

It can hardly be doubted that the religious flavor which already is apparent in certain administration quarters will ultimately have a wholesome influence upon the popular respect shown religious institutions. Upon this showing the country as well as the church is to be congratulated. Church going, Sabbath observance, total abstinence, Bible study, all should find stimulus from customs apparently established by the President and certain influential portions of his Cabinet.

While piety may not be marked, yet the recognition of the obligations of Christian service and the observance of religious rites by men high in authority, are bound to make their impress for good upon our national, social, industrial and, it is to be hoped, our political life.

Men are continually stumbling over other people's faults. They fail to do what they ought because somebody else has failed. They refuse to obey the call of duty and justify their course because of the wrong doing of others. Yet how few there are who are willing to admit their slavery to the mishaps of their fellows. Every man must stand or fall by his own life and by his own acts. No man can plead the sins of another in justification of his own sin.

Many a man goes wrong because he concludes it his business and concerns no one else. But God cares, and Jesus is disappointed and the Holy Spirit is grieved, when men deliberately choose evil. And that is all so worth while, that it should make anyone hesitate before he deliberately chooses to follow the path of evil.

In speaking of the mission of the Church, The Continent says editorially: "It is none of it fit to be called Church work if it has an ultimate object any less than making everybody within the radius of Church influence warmly acquainted with Jesus Christ." That is the essence of all Christian activity that is worth while.

Saying prayers is not praying. Acting righteously is not necessarily being righteous. It is what men are that counts, not what they seem to be.

An American Institution in Europe and How it has Grown

BY FRANCIS E. CLARK

In the early days of the movement the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor was the subject of many a gibe because of its "American" parentage. It was spoken of as "this Yankee notion," the "queer American way of doing things," etc., and it was frequently said that, though such an organization might for a time suit the Americans, who are always infatuated with some new thing in their religious life, it would never answer for the older and staid churches of Europe.

I remember that at the first meeting of ministers in Great Britain which I ever addressed on the subject of the Christian Endeavor movement, one pastor objected to the strenuous religious features of the pledge and the prayer meeting, and said that his young people could serve God just as well on the lawn tennis courts or the cricket grounds as in a prayer meeting; whereupon an American missionary from Turkey, who happened to be present, came to the rescue and declared that from his observation what the churches needed was "less lawn tennis and more prayer meeting." But this was fully twenty-five years ago, and in Great Britain today the Christian Endeavor Society is accepted in thousands of churches as one of their chief auxiliaries, and even in the Church of England itself there is a strong contingent devoted to the movement, organized as "the Church of England Christian Endeavor Union."

In one of my earlier meetings in Germany, some twenty years ago, I had the privilege of addressing the theological students and some of the professors of the University of Halle. The surroundings seemed scarcely ecclesiastical to an American eye, for the table around which we gathered was liberally decorated with beer steins, while the air was blue with tobacco smoke. Perhaps this atmosphere was scarcely favorable to the subject discussed; at least, my explanations of the working of the Society fell upon the ear of many a doubting Thomas, and some of the students declared boldly that they had no use for a prayer meeting in their churches, and that they did not believe in public prayer on the part of young people.

But that was twenty years ago, and now there are hundreds of vigorous Christian Endeavor societies in Germany, the strong Protestant centers in the north and east of course having the largest number. In no societies in the world have I heard more earnest prayers or more valiant testimonies than by the young men and women of the Christian Endeavor (Entschieden Christenthum) of Germany. It is true that there is a very considerable section of the German church which will have nothing to do with the movement, and which probably never will adopt it, the section that is served by rationalistic pastors, who do not believe in conversion or in the kind of lay activities which the Endeavor Society promotes.

But there is another very large section of the German church which is distinctly evangelical, and more evangelistic in its tendencies than most of our American churches. To such churches and pastors the Society strongly appeals, and is growing in strength year by year. A general secretary and four travelling secretaries are maintained by the German Endeavorers, and they have been particularly active in missionary lines. If I am not mistaken, nearly a dozen missionaries have been sent out to Micronesia within the last few years from among the Endeavorers of Germany, and are largely supported by them, of course always with the consent and advice of their churches, who encourage the societies in this missionary zeal.

An interesting fact in this connection is that these missionaries work under the auspices of the American Board, and are of great assistance, inasmuch as the German government, which owns most of these islands, demands that the German language should be used in the mission schools. As a result of the advent of these German Endeavor missionaries, supplementing the work of the American missionaries, who have long had Christian Endeavor societies in the islands, there is no part of the world where the Society flourishes more vigorously than in the little islands which, like fly specks, dot the map of the Pacific Ocean. In some of them nearly half the inhabitants are members of the Christian Endeavor Society.

In the Scandinavian countries the soil is particularly suited to the Christian Endeavor seed. Though the inhabitants, like the German Protestants, for the most part adhere staunchly to the teachings of Luther, they find in his theology nothing opposed to the spirit of Christian Endeavor, and large numbers of churches, especially in Norway and Finland, have adopted with much enthusiasm this, one of the youngest children of the church family. The last European convention of Christian Endeavor was held in Christiania, the capital of Norway, and was attended by more than a thousand delegates from all parts of Europe, who received cordial attentions, not only from the municipality of Christiania, but from King Haakon and Queen Maud in a special reception accorded to them. On my last visit to Scandinavia, the fourth which I have made within the last fifteen years, I found the largest churches and the historic cathedrals, like those in Trondhjem, Bergen, Abo and Helsingfors, open to our meetings, and often filled with audiences that crowded them to the doors.

Hungary, too, is becoming a center of Christian Endeavor of no small importance. Of the sixteen millions of people in Hungary, it will be a surprise to many to know that four millions profess the Protestant faith, most of them staunch Calvinists or Lutherans. The pastor of the leading Calvinist church in the city of Budapest is the leader of the Hungarian Endeavorers, and a beautiful and well-equipped hospital in the same city is a large beneficiary of their prayers and gifts.

Spain is the home of one of the most active and enthusiastic groups of societies in Europe, and the Spanish Conventions of Christian Endeavor are noted far and wide for their intelligent zeal and fervor. In one of the early conventions which I attended in Zaragoza, the Endeavorers did not dare at first to sing, lest they arouse the ire of their Catholic neighbors, and the priests tried to stir up, through the daily papers, a hostile demonstration. But they did not succeed, and only a few stones were thrown at the convention-goers as they passed through the narrow streets. Now, under a more liberal administration, there is no thought of opposition, and the conventions are large and inspiring.

In France there are about a hundred Christian Endeavor societies; in Italy about a score; while the Russian domains harbor twenty or thirty societies, mostly in the Baltic states and in Russian Poland, among the Lutherans of these provinces of the empire.

Bulgaria and Macedonia have a few societies in connection with our American mission schools and churches, and recently an earnest Christian teacher from Agram, the capital of Croatia, has made a Christian Endeavor pilgrimage through Servia, Dalmatia, Bosnia, Herzegovina, penetrating even as far as the heart of Montenegro, and found much encouragement for his mission in these lands. It would be expected that free republican Switzerland would have a part in this movement, which emanated from a sister republic, and such is the case, Geneva being the headquarters of the European Christian Endeavor Union, and a Genevan pastor its energetic, hard-working secretary.

Thus has this American idea in the good providence of God found its way into every corner of Europe. Many parts of this continent I have visited within the last few months, and have never before seen so much reason to thank God and take courage for the future.

A Letter from Ramallah

Dear Friends in the Homeland:

On February tenth Mr. and Mrs. Rosenberger were at Jaffa to embark, as we arrived to take the work they were leaving. We were glad to have a short opportunity for conversation with them before their departure. That evening we received a royal welcome from the Mission workers and the children of the Training Homes. We were glad indeed to reach the place that seems like home to us, and to end our travels for a time.

Ramallah has grown much in four years and especially along the carriage road where the people are building very nice homes, and leaving land about them for the culture of gardens and beauty spots for years to come. The narrow streets of the older parts of the town seem to be cleaner than of yore and the street lamps are quite an innovation. The government has erected a nice town house next to our B. T. H. property, and is now building near it a good four room school house for the Moslem boys of this vicinity. Prominent among the improvements in the character of the modern buildings is the frequency of the good sized windows, where God's fresh air and sunshine may sweeten the atmosphere of the homes.

The neat little meeting house within its walled yard and its side-walk in front is on the carriage road about half way between the G. T. H. and the future B. T. H. It is in pleasing contrast to the place where we worshipped for so many years. During the school year our meeting averages about two hundred, and old and young are appreciative listeners. Bible School for the Training Home meets there on First-day afternoons and also mid-week meetings. We hope to use the house more as a social center later on, and by music and pictures endeavor to brighten and broaden the lives of the poor villagers. Friends in Philadelphia gave us a post-card projector, which will help us nicely in this work as well as in our school.

Our Training Homes are prospering under inspiring leadership. Helen G. Crosman of Saco, Maine, came with us to assist Alice Jones for a year. She is making herself very useful, not alone among the girls, but is assisting with the English in the B. T. H. It is a fine opportunity that is hers for a time to live and work among the people of the land of Christ's nativity, and we hope that other young Friends may feel inclined in the future to give the Mission a year of service. This year there are fifty-two girls in the G. T. H. and a happy family they are. Out of school hours one can often hear them singing on the play grounds while at their games. We rejoice in their pleasant surroundings and comfortable, airy, school and living rooms. In a dark and dingy house that has served as a dwelling, our forty-two boys are housed where but thirty should be accommodated. In this place it is difficult to teach them how they ought to live and we feel concerned for their health. Now that the permit for building has come, we are anxious to get our building operations under way. The location is much higher than the G. T. H. grounds, and is a twelve acre lot from which one may see the domes and minarets of Jerusalem, ten miles away. We shall be happy if we can have enough of the building completed with the money already on hand, so that a year from this fall when our present lease expires, the boys and teachers can move into more wholesome surroundings.

On February fifteenth our boys played soccer (football) with the team of Saint George's School from Jerusalem. We were proud to have our boys keep them from scoring, for they are the strongest school team in the city. We gave the team a little reception in the evening to show them our appreciation. School spirit is good among the boys and Khalil Totah is making a fine leader. He has some good plans for the future of the school, and we feel that it is largely up to the friends of the school in America to enable us to carry them out.

One of Mr. Totah's plans was to start a library fund among the "old boys." He sent out a circular letter to all whose addresses he could obtain, and already he has received twenty francs from a former Nazareth student, twenty-five from a Ramallah boy who has gone to America, and others have signified their intention of helping. We have few good Arabic reading books for either school, and as the boys are ravenous readers, we feel that they should be made acquainted with the best literature of their mother tongue.

The day schools have improved much in four years. Mrs. Rosenberger's wide experience as a supervisor has enabled her to bring up the tone of the teaching and we have been pleased with what we have seen. We have visited all except the most distant, and hope to get over there in a few days and bring the teacher back to our regular monthly teachers' meeting. The Boston school is doing especially well, perhaps because of its fine opportunity in the very heart of the village. Last month the average attendance was eighty-three and the Bible School was quite as large.

Altogether the activities of the Mission are flourishing and inspiring. Much has been accomplished in the Ramallah homes that puts them into the front rank among the villages of the country. Much, however, remains to be done and we feel favored in being given the opportunity to have a part in the work, and we congratulate you all upon the devotion you are showing and the successful investment you have made in favor of this dear but needy land. We know not what disposition may be made of this part of Turkey in the final settlement of the Balkan War, but a greater opportunity and larger responsibility may fall to Christian people for the evangelization of Moslem lands.

There are many useful things that came with the Mission trunks, and we wish to express our gratitude, not only to the contributors but also to the Box Committee of the W. F. M. S. that has given so many years of faithful service.

With hearty thanks to all who have contributed to the happiness and efficiency of our Ramallah Mission and its interests, and with affectionate greetings to all, we remain,

Sincerely your friends,

A. EDWARD AND MARION E. KELSEY.

Leprosy a Type of Sin

BY WILLIAM C. ALLEN

"And there came a leper beseeching him."

I was recently reading in the Oriental Review the account of a young American of good family, but whose name is jealously guarded, who a few years ago, at the age of seventeen, ran away from home, and stowed away on an American army transport bound for the Philippines. When the transport called at Hongkong, he allowed a Chinese to tattoo his arm. Soon thereafter the premonitory symptoms of leprosy were manifested. He was taken to a native hospital, and subsequently was discovered by a lady missionary, who had him removed to her private hospital for such unfortunates. Although now kindly cared for he will never be able to leave his present quarters. His disease is the direct result of inoculation from the needles of the Chinese tattooer.

The sad narrative brought vividly to mind my observations when holding religious meetings among some lepers in the West Indies a few years ago. The memory of that experience always reminds me that leprosy is a type of sin. The victim may once have been a good man and perfectly healthy, but when inoculated he is doomed.

We do not wonder that the Bible suggests leprosy as symbolic of sin. In the first place, how often do evil companionships introduce the virus of sin into a once pure personality. Like the tattooer's needle, in this instance, what is once undertaken as yielding novelty or pleasure will eventually prove to have introduced the seeds of death.

I have seen lepers sightless, with their members twisted out of human shape or with their fingers gone, and full of suffering and despair. Even so does sin deal with the spiritual man.

Sin destroys the spiritual vision. Those who yield to what they feel is wrong, after a time lose sight of the better things. They become blind to the beauties of the purer life they once saw and knew. Their sense of proportion becomes distorted. They finally cease to look at the bright and beautiful objects that alone yield real happiness, and instead fix their gaze and hopes on the tawdry things and pleasures that inevitably perish with the using. As Paul said, "The god of this world has blinded their eyes." They no longer see the things that are worth while.

Sin rots away the spiritual members, or faculties, of men. Not only does it often impair the body, but it actually destroys the power to act and to accomplish noble deeds with the mental processes. It robs men of their nimbleness and ability to do. The man who places himself at the mercy of sin often has a more stupid mind and feebler body than he otherwise would have. His enjoyments have taken from him his spiritual and higher life,—which is the sweetest part of all,—just as the filthy leprosy takes the hands and feet of its unhappy victims, and leaves them helpless. His efficiency is demolished. How often does the physician or minister or social reformer see these poor wrecks, made so by the ruthless ravages of shameless or shame-faced sin.

Lepers have told me that they sometimes do not suffer much. In some cases they are benumbed. But the disease in all its hideousness is there. The distortion, the misery, the horribleness is there. Their lives are spoiled; their hopes are gone. Even so may sin benumb its votaries so that they themselves are hardly aware of their condition,—so exceedingly deceitful is sin,—they have a nameless terror within themselves and are a source of sorrow to the pure in heart who see them.

What is the cure for the spiritual leper? Is there no help for him? There is. Thousands,—rather millions,—have tested the power of a supreme Helper. His assistance is an absolute verity, and not an idle dream. As the leper nineteen hundred years ago went to Jesus crying, "Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean," even so may the wrecked, or despairing, or tainted life go to Him today, and ask Him to purify the unholy thoughts and to grant a beautiful spiritual vision to the once blinded eyes. And the same gracious answer, the same magic truth, comes to these suffering applicants today. They hear the same tender response, "I will heal thee—be thou clean."

Activities of the Church

Meetings of the Executive Committees

Last week there was a practical demonstration of the fact that Richmond, Indiana, has become the headquarters for Friends activities in America, as was planned by the last Five Years Meeting.

On Monday afternoon the Central Committee of the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting was in session. All five members were present, viz.: Allen D. Hole, Chairman; Willard O. Trueblood, Secretary; Rufus M. Jones, Miles White, Jr., and Ellison R. Purdy.

The Executive Committee was in session morning, afternoon and evening on Tuesday. Those present were Allen D. Hole, Chairman of the Peace Association; Willard O. Trueblood, Chairman of the Young People's Board; Harry R. Keates, Chairman of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board; Rufus M. Jones, Chairman of the Social Service Board; Miles White, Jr., Chairman of the Finance Board; Carolena M. Wood, Chairman of the Board on Condition and Welfare of the Negro; George H. Moore, Chairman of the Foreign Missionary Board; Richard Haworth, Chairman of the Bible School Board; Robert L. Kelly, Chairman of the Board on Education; S. E. Nicholson, Chairman of the Board on Temperance and Legislation; Ellison R. Purdy, representing Wilmington Yearly Meeting; Charles O. Whitely, Oregon Yearly Meeting; Albert S. Rogers, Canada Yearly Meeting; and John M. Newlin, Kansas Yearly Meeting. Only four members were absent.

On Wednesday and Thursday, the Executive Committee of the Foreign Mission Board held two all-day sessions. On Tuesday and Wednesday, the Executive Committee of the Young People's Board was in session. On Wednesday the Executive Committee of the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board held two sessions; while the Executive Committee of the Peace Association was in session on Wednesday afternoon.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE

We hope to give a fuller account of the very important meeting of the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting later, when the Secretary's minutes are available. It will be remembered that this Committee was created to act for the Five Years Meeting in all matters, when this body is not in session.

Discussion centered largely about the new office of the General Secretary of the denomination, its duties, the scope of its mission, the qualifications for the office, and the personnel of the one to fill the position. The whole question has been the subject of considerable investigation by correspondence during the past six months, and has been fully considered. The Committee felt the responsibility of its action and did not move hastily.

After full consideration the position was offered to Roscoe Coffin, of Minneapolis, Minnesota, who is now the Assistant Secretary of the Minnesota State Y. M. C. A., he having been in Y. M. C. A. work for the past eight years. It can only be said now that he has the matter under serious consideration, and will indicate his decision probably within a few weeks. We withhold further statement about him and his work, pending his acceptance of the position. Suffice it to say that the Committee is very hopeful of a favorable response.

Numerous other matters were considered at length and will be reported later. At the final evening session Mr. George Innes, of Philadelphia, who is one of the secretaries of the United Missionary Campaign movement, was given a hearing, and a Committee was named to confer with the proper Boards concerning the inauguration of this movement among Friends, according to some acceptable plan.

OTHER COMMITTEES

Many important subjects were before the Executive Committees of the Boards in session, which will report in their own way such matters as are of general interest to the membership.

Evangelistic and Church Extension Board

The spirit of true Quakerism was exemplified in its founder, George Fox, who was raised up and called of God to emphasize the spirituality of religion and the absolute necessity of individual regeneration and baptism with the Holy Ghost. Formal, ceremonial and theoretical religion was denounced and all classes were urged to believe the gospel in its simplicity and power. This preaching was wonderfully owned of God; it was scriptural as to its authority and dynamic in character, leading multitudes to an experimental knowledge of the truth. "And the Lord added to the Church daily such as should be saved." Its aggressive missionary character and zeal earned for it the declaration that it was "primitive Christianity revived," a statement which the Church of today may well covet.

It is true that many conditions have changed in the past two hundred and fifty years, but the principles of truth are unchangeable and unchanging. In these days when so much is being made of social and ethical conditions and all kinds of remedies are being propounded, we as a denomination cannot afford to lose sight of the true Quaker Message, which goes to the root of the matter and seeks to "make the tree good," believing that the true remedy for the evil effects which abound is to deal with the cause, leading men to see that their only hope of salvation is to be found by repentance towards God and faith in our Lord Jesus Christ, whose atoning blood alone can cleanse from all sin and make men new creatures. To the devout student and loyal member of the Church, there is no question as to whether there is any need of such a message today, and if this be so, then the fields are white to harvest and the Master's commission rings out "Go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature" and every other proposed method must and will fail.

With fifty millions of our population unevangelized, what are we doing about it now, and what are we going to do in the near future? If we are still to be regarded as exponents of "primitive Christianity revived" we must surely have a clearer vision and a deeper consecration to our task, lest our candlestick be taken out of its place. The grave moral and social questions of the day, the continued influx of foreign elements into our population, which menace and threaten our national future must be met by super-human methods and power and as a church we claim to possess it. Shall we exemplify it? Both workers and funds are needed to enable us to enter upon this task, whilst large measures of adaptation must be brought into operation and the work pushed assiduously.

Our Board has appealed for help through these columns and does so again at this time. The entire sum received by the treasurer of the Five Years Meeting for the use of the Board during the past six months is barely one hundred and fifty dollars. At this rate we should as a church subscribe fifteen hundred dollars in five years for national church extension work. Meanwhile there will be a number of small meetings laid down from various causes, not the least of which may be attributed to the steady drift of population from one place to another and many of those who thus change find no church of our denomination in their new environment. For awhile these may be retained on the records of the meeting where they last resided, but they will practically be lost to us unless we can undertake to plant churches as speedily as possible where we have none.

Sometime ago in conversation with a business man of more than average ability in one of our large cities, he mournfully said, "I see no hopeful future for our Church under existing conditions. I suppose we shall just try to hold on in our meeting and do the best we can, but as a church our condition is very sad; there seems to be a lack of men, means and interest." I replied, by suggesting that a decline in any business demanded and must receive earnest consideration and adaptation of such methods as would turn the threatened failure into success, and he at once assented.

Our Board is thoroughly imbued with the idea that we have a great work to do and that difficulties must be met in a business-like way. At the Executive Meeting held April 23, we decided that at present we can possibly accomplish the best results by seeking to stimulate the work in the various Yearly Meetings, by a definite plan of campaign, which will seek the hearty interest, co-operation and support of every member. As this article is being hurried for the next issue of the AMERICAN FRIEND, further details are reserved for the present.

Meanwhile as the needs of the work are most urgent, may I ask that pastors who have not yet taken up subscriptions since the Five Years Meeting will kindly do so at once.

I feel that the chairman of the Board of Missions of the Five Years Meeting will pardon the personal reference, but with his own particular branch of work before him, he brought our pressing need before his Quarterly Meeting a short time ago and with such success that $112.00 was subscribed, and half of it paid on the spot, and it is now being distributed among needy meetings. As a committee, we are thankful to him and the Friends who so kindly helped us. Are there not others who will "go and do likewise," and send the result to Francis A. Wright, Jr., 520 American Bank Building, Kansas City, Missouri?

For the Committee.

Oskaloosa, Iowa.

H. R. KEATES, Chairman.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S BOARD

Outline of the Plans of the Board of Young Friends' Activities of the Five Years Meeting

The first meeting of the Executive Committee of the Board of Young Friends' activities was held at Richmond, Indiana, April 22-23, 1913.

Since the appointment of the Board an endeavor has been made to ascertain the feeling of our Young Friends as to what is most needed from such a central committee, and after careful and prayerful discussion of the expressions and suggestions made to it, the Board of Young Friends' activities desires to make the following announcement as an outline of the scope of its work.

First of all, the Board desires to make it clear to all Friends young and old, that its primary purpose is to aid in developing to the fullest extent the spiritual life of each individual in the footsteps of Jesus Christ, under the leadership of the voice of God.

Second: That it desires to promote life and power and service as ends to which organizations are only means.

Third: That it desires to foster, encourage, enthuse, aid, stimulate and develop, in short to love and to cherish all existing organizations of Young Friends which make for life and power and service, and to establish and promote similar organizations where none exist.

It welcomes the opportunity afforded it to co-operate with Christian Endeavor, Bible Schools, the Quaker Study Classes or Round Tables, and other organizations, the Winona and other conference committees, and would remind Friends that no matter what the name or method of the organization, and no matter how different the details of the problems of our surroundings, there is probably this problem in common, that none of our organizations reaches in a vital way every one that it is possible to reach, and that no stone, or book or person must be left unturned if we are to attain our end.

The Board feels that it cannot attempt to point out the particular activity which any group of Young Friends should undertake, but it is supremely confident that an awakened spirit in its devotion to Truth and willingness to follow the Light, which is in Christ, will be quick to find the opportunity for service. Let us ask ourselves questions like these:

What are the conditions in your prisons and alms houses or County Institutions?

Are there any near you in need of food or fellowship?

Are there any children in the street who need a Sunday-school, or any slaves to superstition or oppression in your community?

In short, are there any hungry, or thirsty, or naked, or sick, or imprisoned, either physically, mentally or spiritually, who are not fed or clothed or visited?

Do you mind what "they" will think more than what the still small voice of God suggests that you and He will think?

To any who feel or have felt impatient that they have not been visited by the Young Friends' Secretary and started upon some uniform activity, the Board would send this message:

First: The best we are capable of in our various groups is our Friendly duty, and must not be impeded by waiting on uniformity of organization or method.

Second: The spirit of co-operation which we must cultivate bids us refrain from appealing for the support of a Secretary at a time when such an appeal must of necessity seem to conflict or compete with the appeal of the Executive Board for the General Secretary.

To all the larger gatherings of Young Friends during this summer it is hoped that a representative of this Board will bring a greeting and receive suggestions for helpful co-operation. Loyalty to the Society of Friends and friendliness to other denominations will, we trust, mark our attitude.

To the work intrusted to it by the Five Years Meeting the members of the Board on Young Friends' activities have come in great humility of spirit, and as we have conferred together by letter and in our meetings a vision of the greater work to which the Young Friends of our beloved Society are called has seemed to open before us. Into the members of the body of the Friends Church we have seemed to see flowing the vital currents of the young lives which have felt the inspiring touch of the Master's hand, and into a fellowship of work and life and power—yes—and suffering with Him, we would come as expressions of God's purposes, that as we abandon ourselves to a manifestation of His love, our whole Society may in spirit and in Truth be able to worship Him in the beauty of holiness.

Richmond, April 23, 1913.

Young People's Executive Committee

A good response to the call of the Church was manifest in a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Board of Young Friends' activities, appointed at the recent Five Years Meeting. With the exception of Lillian Hayes, who is in England, all members were in attendance at the meeting held at Richmond, Indiana, April 22 and 23.

Various phases of the many-sided Young Friends' problem were considered. The work of Field Secretary is to be done at present by special appointment, although plans were made to have a secretary at work as soon as practicable.

Definite action was taken in regard to plans for Summer Conferences; a rally of Friends at the International C. E. Convention in July, at Los Angeles, California; and the general scope of the work of our Board, to appearing as above.

We face the multiform situation in confidence that Friends in each community will rise in response to their peculiar local needs, and through large vision and hard service, be welded into a unit of fellowship.

The C. E. Convention at Los Angeles

A Friends rally will be held at the C. E. Convention at Los Angeles, California, on July 10. The Board of Young Friends' activities urges all Friends who expect or even hope to attend the convention to send their names to Ashton Otis, Whittier, California, who is making arrangements for this rally as the representative of our Board.

Robert E. Pretlow, formerly of Brooklyn, New York, now of Seattle, Washington, and Mary E. White of Friends' Mission in Jamaica, are to be present. The exact date of the rally and a complete program will be announced later. No Friend should miss this opportunity to give and receive help.

Fame is what you have taken,
Character's what you give;
When to this truth you awaken,
Then you begin to live.

—Bayard Taylor.

Would you throw away a diamond because it pricked you? One good friend is not to be weighed against the jewels of all the earth. If there is coolness or unkindness between us, let us come face to face and have it out. Quick, before love grows cold!—Robert Smith.

At Archdale, North Carolina

The Friends' Church and community of Archdale, North Carolina, have recently received a great awakening and uplift in the religious life. On December 11th, Ada Elliott Lee, a minister of the Gospel, formerly of North Carolina Yearly Meeting, but recently of Marion, Indiana, came to us at the request of the Yearly Meeting Committee and the local church, and began a series of meetings.

The first meeting on the evening of the 11th, demonstrated the fact that the great Head of the Church had sent the worker and indicted the message. As the meetings progressed, the community was stirred and conviction settled upon the unsaved, which resulted in the salvation of more than thirty souls, and the renewal of spiritual life in as many more. The majority of the number brought to Christ were men from sixty-five years old down to young men in their teens. The awakening and renewal of the church in the spirit and service of the Master is quite as great a blessing to the community as the salvation of souls. After twelve days the meetings necessarily closed, a case of la grippe having fallen to the lot of the evangelist.

While there was much rejoicing in the great blessing received by the community, we felt that the work was only begun, and a deep interest was manifested by the church in taking care of the results of the evangelistic effort. By common consent a mass meeting was called on Sabbath afternoon, December 22nd, at which an animated discussion took place concerning the pastoral work of the community. By unanimous consent an invitation was extended to Ada E. Lee to remain in Archdale for the service of the Master. A committee was appointed to solicit funds sufficient for the support of the work and make any other necessary arrangements for it. This having been done, the invitation was freely accepted by one whose heart is, we believe, full of interest in the work and love for it.

The development of various lines of work has been pushed forward. The Christian Endeavor has gathered about fifty persons, who are present in the meetings and manifest much interest. The young people have been gathered into class organizations for Bible School work, and the "Women's Helping Hand" is doing fine work in the improvement of the church building. The Sabbath morning meetings are increasing in attendance and interest, while the evening meetings gather the masses of the people, the house being filled with eager listeners to the practical and instructive sermons delivered by the pastor.

The Monthly Meeting has recently begun the discussion of some topic of practical present-day importance to the church. On April 12th, the subject considered was "The Possibilities of the Rural Churches," the speaker being Earl J. Harold, of Greensboro.

Eleven new members have been received by request, and about twenty members have been received since the present pastor took charge. On the 13th, the members received at the Monthly Meeting the day previous, were welcomed into the church by a handshake and other appropriate services.

We feel that both pastor and congregation are to be congratulated on the work now being done in our midst. Ada E. Lee has received a very warm welcome back to her native land and home church where she first named the name of Christ in the congregations of the people, and her development in the ministry, as demonstrated in her service, is greatly appreciated in this southland.

A Japanese Celebration

The Japanese Mission and night school conducted by Pasadena Meeting at Pasadena, California, celebrated its fifth anniversary on the evening of April 6th, with appropriate exercises. There were interesting addresses and papers by seven young men, who have received religious and English instruction in the mission, and they expressed gratitude to teachers and Friends for kindness shown them. The dental practice of Dr. John W. Dorland has increased so greatly that he has been obliged to withdraw from the superintendency of the Mission. The former superintendent, Mary A. White, after a rest of a year and a half, has resumed the work.

The following program was carried out at the celebration:

Chairman.....Bunji Kida

Current Items of Interest to Friends

California Yearly Meeting

Dr. Sylvester Newlin and wife, of Pasadena, have just spent a week at Bell, assisting the pastor, Susan E. Allen, in a series of meetings. Good interest was shown from the first, and the visible results included a number of conversions and renewals. On the 20th instant, Dr. Newlin attended the meeting at Holtville, in the Imperial Valley, while George N. Hartley preached very acceptably to Pasadena Friends morning and evening.

The home of Henry F. King and wife in Pasadena, was the scene of a delightful "Richmond Reunion" recently, the following guests being invited to participate: Joseph John Mills, wife and daughter; Naomi Harrison Jay; Anna Harrison; Susan Harrison Johnson and husband; A. C. Johnson; William V. Coffin and wife; Fred F. and Anna Butler, and W. J. and Emma Austin.

The sessions of San Diego Quarterly Meeting held at Ramona, California, were exceedingly interesting. The visiting ministers were Laura P. Townsend, Evangelistic Superintendent, and John Stribling, pastor at Bethel. Raybright Lewis, Field Secretary for the Yearly Meeting Christian Endeavor, was also present. About fifteen members of San Diego Monthly Meeting were present. The whole meeting was full of interest, the church being well filled at all the public services. Forceful and convincing sermons were preached by John Stribling, Laura P. Townsend, Benjamin Albertson, and Inez Bowers, the last named being probably the youngest recorded minister in the Friends' Church at the present time, and whose recording, along with that of Alma Albertson, was completed at this Quarterly Meeting. A Christian Endeavor Rally was held in the afternoon under the leadership of Raybright Lewis, at which several young people evidenced their desire to undertake active service in the Master's vineyard.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

Richard Haworth, pastor of the Friends' Church, Fairmount, Indiana, recently returned from Buffalo, New York, where he attended an important committee meeting.

At the morning service at the Friends' Memorial Church in Muncie, Indiana, on Sabbath, the 20th instant, seventy-four new members were given a public welcome. Some had been received by certificate and some by letter, but the larger part by request, as a result of the series of meetings held in February, by Daisy D. Barr.

During the last six months the Second Friends' Church at Marion, Indiana, has had an addition in membership of thirty or more persons, most of whom are adults. At the last business meeting a building committee was appointed to proceed with the building of a parsonage. Eleven hundred dollars in cash has been pledged, and a small house and lot donated by Eli Cogshall, the proceeds of which will be applied on the new building.

The committee on Young People's activities at Fairmount, Indiana, recently held an adjourned evening session of the monthly meeting, at which a special program was rendered by the young people. The address by William C. Braithwaite, as given at the Five Years Meeting, was discussed from five different standpoints, by as many different young people. These discussions were brief, but showed breadth, insight and intelligent grasp of the subjects as set forth in the address. A double quartette furnished special music. The program as thus completed proved very helpful, as well as interesting and entertaining. Arrangements are being made for an address to be given in the near future by Professor Elbert Russell, of Earlham College, on some phase of Young People's activities, under the general direction of the Secondary Division of the Bible School in the Fairmount meeting, and another program for the monthly meeting consisting of reminiscences of Friends' work in Fairmount Quarterly Meeting.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

William and Elizabeth Hill returned to Minneapolis recently from a three months' visit among friends and relatives in southern California, and at Tacoma, Washington.

James Renfrew, former pastor of the Farmington, New York, Meeting, has accepted a call from the Friends of Muscatine, Iowa, to serve as pastor in that place. A public installation service conducted by the Yearly Meeting Evangelistic Superintendent, Harry R. Keates, was held on Sabbath evening, April 13.

The Minneapolis Meeting was much favoured by the presence of Dean Stephen M. Hadley, of Penn College, at monthly meeting, April 10, and at Sabbath services following. At monthly meeting he gave a most comprehensive and encouraging survey of the condition of the Friends' Church in America, which he has had special opportunity to study in his long services as clerk of Iowa Yearly Meeting. This was the last of a series of meetings of the Quakerism Study Class, and was indeed a fitting conclusion to the year's work. A delightful supper was served at the church. On Sabbath morning he spoke on "The Growth of the Church," emphasizing especially our new and broader opportunities, and what constitutes permanent growth.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

Charles Lescault, of Haviland, Kansas, began a series of revival meetings at North Branch, Kansas, February 15th. He conducted meetings twice a day for eight days, when he was called home on account of the serious illness of his wife. The meetings were blessed in the salvation of souls, and the reclamation of backsliders. Quite a number made definite profession of saving faith, and many testified to definite blessings received through the meetings.

The new Friends' meeting house at Glendale, Kansas, about seven miles southwest of Mullinsville, Kansas, was dedicated on Easter Sunday. The dedicatory services were in charge of Charles Lescault, pastor of Haviland Friends' Church. Although the day was stormy, and we had one of the worst dust storms of the season, the house was crowded to its fullest capacity. Charles Lescault preached the dedication sermon from Ephesians 2: 19-22. About $550.00 was needed to dedicate the building free from indebtedness, and this was pledged in a few minutes, after which the building was impressively dedicated to the service of God. After the morning service, a splendid basket dinner was served by the ladies of the Glendale Meeting. At 3:00 P. M., the people again assembled for worship. Charles Lescault again brought a message, preaching from Galatians 6: 9. The blessing of the Lord rested as a seal to the dedication, and six persons were converted in the afternoon service. Friends have an open door and are pushing in to occupy the field. Plans are now being made for the building of a parsonage and the location of a pastor on the field.

Western Yearly Meeting

Lester Haworth, of Buffalo, New York, recently addressed a large audience at the Friends' Church at Danville, Indiana, on Y. M. C. A. work, which was greatly appreciated by all present.

Edward Woodard, evangelistic superintendent of the Yearly Meeting, attended the Sabbath evening meeting recently at Carmel, Indiana, and preached a strong sermon on the subject, "The Twentieth Century Christian."

The Friends of Danville, Hadly and Amo, Indiana, are planning for a big home-coming at Old Mill Creek Church, the 6th and 7th of September next, to which the public is cordially invited. The regular Quarterly Meeting occurs at the same time.

A three weeks' meeting was held at Danville, Indiana, during the month of January, conducted by James Armstrong, of California. The meetings were very successful in every way, resulting in about twenty conversions and a great up-building of the church.

Chicago Monthly Meeting received a new member at its April meeting. The attendance at the Christian Endeavor has increased nearly fifty per cent. since the first of the year. The interest in the Quakerism Study continues strong. The last meeting was devoted to a brief study of the Barclays of Ury, and a digest of the propositions in Robert Barclay's "Apology."

Easter at Banes, Cuba

Aside from the regular Spanish work at Banes, Cuba, there is an English-speaking congregation composed of the blacks who come over from Jamaica to work on the sugar plantation, of which Banes is the headquarters.

There are several hundred of these Jamaicans, and while all do not attend the church, yet the majority at one time or another come in contact with the missionaries. It may be on their wedding day or the day when their toils are over, or it may be when in need of counsel, or when they want their little ones presented in the house of God, that they come to us.

Easter is celebrated with a special service for them every year, and as Livingstone's life and work is so closely related with them as a race, we felt that the concert program combining the celebration of Easter, March 23, and the Livingstone Centenary, March 19, was most fitting to use on that day. The programs were accordingly secured and turned over to the Jamaicans themselves. Almost without assistance from the missionaries they prepared the entire program, with the exception of a few numbers.

On Easter Sunday at 4:00 P. M., the church was crowded, about two hundred people being present. The program was rendered in an interesting manner, peculiar to people of their race. We might almost have imagined we were among the very people with whom Livingstone labored, but for their dress and surroundings. The only white faces in that large audience were those of the missionaries, and a few officials and their families of the United Fruit Company.

We had announced that the offering would be given to the F. A. I. M., and were not surprised that it amounted to $18.45, for we know the generosity of these simple-hearted people,—these men who cut the cane and dig the ditches,—these women who wash, iron and scrub for ten dollars a month.

Their lives are not always all that might be desired, but they are very faithful in attending services in the church, and a more orderly, more attentive, more respectful and more worshipful congregation would be hard to find. They are surrounded with many temptations, but we believe that God, who looks at the heart, understands it all, and deals with them accordingly.

The sermon in Spanish in the evening was along the same lines, the "Resurrected Life," as manifested in the life and work of Livingstone.

A quiet company of Cubans listened to the Easter message and we trust were helped by it. The offering of the Spanish congregation, $4.17, along with that of the Jamaicans, will be sent to the F. A. I. M., with the prayer that it may bring the Message of Light to some darkened hearts in Africa.

C. C. HAWORTH.

At El Modeno, California

There has been considerable activity in all departments of our Monthly Meeting, especially within the past six months. The Sabbath services are well attended, both morning and evening. Our pastor, Harley M. Moore, is an interesting speaker, and delivers sermons full of spiritual food for all, whether young or old in the Christian service. He is a true pastor in every sense of the word.

The Sabbath-school has been steadily growing in all departments, as shown by comparison with the records of the past year.

At the suggestion of our pastor a men's committee was organized for the purpose of creating more interest among the men of our community in Sabbath-school and church work. As a direct result of this committee, a Men's Class was established in the Sabbath-school, in which the attendance for the past four months has averaged more than double that of the attendance of the men in a mixed class during the year previous. Also, once each month the committee arranges for a special men's meeting, and secures a noted business man to address the meeting. The speakers thus far, have been judges or lawyers, who are especially active in Sabbath-school and other lines of Christian service. At one meeting we were favored by having Judge Curtis D. Wilbur, of the Juvenile Court of Los Angeles, address us. These meetings are exceptionally well attended, and the interest is growing with each meeting.

Some Home Missionary work is being done among the Japanese and Spanish of the community. Some of the families of our Monthly Meeting are giving lessons in English regularly, to some of the Japanese boys who are very anxious to master the language.

The Monthly Meeting has sold some of its surplus ground, and is building a new parsonage, which will be up-to-date in every respect. * * *

Earlham College News

The movement for the Earlham home-coming at Commencement week in June is well under way, and a large assemblage of ex-students of the institution is expected. Not the least important of the events of the week will be a large number of class reunions, already being arranged for. The home-coming will mark an epoch in the life of Earlham.

The inter-state peace contest was held at Goshen, Indiana, Friday evening, April 25. Fred Hollowell, who won the state peace oratorical contest for Earlham on April 5, met representatives of Ohio, Pennsylvania, Michigan and Wisconsin. The winner at Goshen goes to Lake Mohonk, where the national contest will be held.

At the state prohibition oratorical contest held at Valparaiso, Indiana, on April 15, Malcolm Campbell, of Earlham, won second place, DePauw University winning first by one-half of one per cent.

The Indiana High School Athletic Association Meet will be held on Reid Field at Earlham, on May 17. At least two hundred athletes, representing over sixty high schools in Indiana, are expected to compete for honors, Earlham serving as host for the occasion.

Ex-President Taft has entered upon his duties as Kent Professor of Law at Yale.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

MAY 11.

TOPIC—Love not the world.—I. John 2: 15-25.

Affection for Jehovah and His Son is the supreme privilege of man. It is not always easy for men and women to understand the truth of this statement. Surrounded by a natural world that has so much of beauty that is enticing; so much of pleasure that is tempting; so much of inspiration and loveliness, it is not always an easy task to set one's affections upon things spiritual.

But to love God supremely is to add to one's rightful and lawful appreciation of the things of earth. God wants a whole heart, an undivided affection. In fact, the nature of the relationship between man and the Creator will admit of nothing less. "If any man love the world," selfishly, supremely, with no thought of the higher aspirations that ennoble the soul, "the love of the Father is not in him." When God's love is enthroned in the heart, the enjoyments of earth become sanctified, and they are appreciated, not for their own sake or as ministering to worldly gratification, but as being the creation of a beneficent Father.

Nature was created to be the servant of man, not a thing to be adored and worshipped. It is to be utilized as ministering to man's necessities, but is not a thing to be revered. Man, who loves God, finds his rightful relationship in having dominion over the material things about him.

The world in the scriptural sense is a synonym for that which is sensual and sinful upon which natural affections are lavished; the pleasures and allurements that lead men away from God; that which is wicked and unregenerated that turn men away from reverencing their Creator. It is against all this that Christians are warned. He who loves these more than Christ "is not of the Father, but is of the world."

"A man said to D. L. Moody, 'Now that I am converted, have I got to give up the world?' Mr. Moody answered, 'No, you haven't got to give up the world; if you give a good ringing testimony for the Son of God, the world will give you up pretty quick; they won't want you around.'"—Christian Endeavor World.

President Wilson read his message on the tariff to Congress in person, thus breaking a precedent existing since the days when John Adams was president.

A Personal Statement

Editor of The American Friend:

In the AMERICAN FRIEND of Fourth Month 17th, is a little notice of the meeting at Chester, Indiana, in which the writer says some very kind things about myself and wife. In one respect, however, the article is quite incorrect. I am not the pastor of the meeting. We are mostly at the meeting, and are glad when we can be of service to our friends, but during a part of each month the ministry is otherwise provided for.

We feel it a privilege occasionally to have the opportunity of visiting other meetings and getting in touch with the religious life of Friends of today. Personally, I am much in sympathy with those who desire great freedom in the exercise of all gifts, and a careful and restricted exercise of pastoral functions by any one individual.

Thy friend,

RICHARD SIMMS.

GRADED HELPS

In regard to the graded helps, I would say that four of the large denominational publishing houses have formed a syndicate in which the smaller bodies have also entered, for the purpose of publishing graded lessons. The Methodist Book Concern was chosen as the house for getting out these supplies. This was done because of the limited demand and large expense necessary to publish these helps. The publishers demand an edition of five thousand copies of each publication to secure the privilege of an imprint edition. The Friends, being one of the smaller bodies, cannot use enough copies to get an imprint edition, but must send them out with the imprint of the M. E. Book Concern. All helps for the graded system, no matter where secured, except from the Baptist and Christian Publishing Houses, will be the same. I ask Friends to order through me as it will cost no more than through any other house.

The Commission on a Central Publishing House, and Friends Literature, recommended that the Friends Sabbath Schools should use the new graded system of Lesson Helps, and the Lesson Helps published by us at Plainfield, Ind. This was done after a very exhaustive study of the condition and needs of the Friends Church, and was very gratifying to me.

the word "Old?" Three. How many in the word "Testament?" Nine. Put three and nine together and you have 39, the number of books in the Old Testa-

"Testament" three and nine letters. Now multiply 3 by 9 and you have 27, the number of books in the New Testament.Of course by adding 39 and 27 you have 66, the number of books in the

O MOTHER OF MINE

J. Y. B. WOOD

I LOVE the wrinkles in your dear face,
The silver threads in your hair;
Ineffable beauty there I can trace,
A beauty beyond compare.
Pure love shines forth from your dear blue eyes,
A love that is strong, divine,
Of kindness, goodness—all that is sweet—
O mother of mine; dear mother of mine.
You nursed me through all my tender years;
When a child you cared for me;
You shared my hopes, my joys, my fears,
Your counsels were good, I see.
And when my footsteps were prone to err,
Your heart's sun failed to shine,
Tho' you loved me better than e'er before—
O mother of mine; dear mother of mine.
And now, that your eyes are dim with age,
And shadows, dark, cloud your brow,
That love still grows, the blest God knows,
For the one who's away from you now.
And the prayers you've prayed to keep him right,
Have been heard by ears divine,
And your crown will be bright with jewels rare—
O mother of mine; dear mother of mine.

Increasing the Circulation

Seventeen new subscriptions have been added to the AMERICAN FRIEND list during the past week. We are grateful to those who are making the canvass, but in hundreds of meetings no effort as yet is being made in this direction.

There are probably not fewer than 100 meetings, which are well able to follow the lead of East Main Street Friends Meeting at Richmond, Indiana, which is putting itself back of a special effort to get the paper into the hands of every family belonging to the meeting. We commend the plan to the earnest consideration of others.

Then, too, there are so many Friends' families in poor circumstances. If each subscriber would only send in the subscription for some other worthy Friend, who is not able to pay the subscription price, it would mean joy in many of our denominational households.

It will be encouraging to know that Dr. Henry T. Hodgkin, of London, from whose pen we have an article in this issue, will be heard from occasionally throughout the year. Numerous other leaders in the church, East and West, are promising articles, which will aid materially to the development of the AMERICAN FRIEND. The time to subscribe and get the benefit of all these is now.

BIBLE SCHOOL BOARD

The watchword of the church today is evangelism. The religious forces of the country are turning away from critical Bible study to research for soul winning. The growing church today is the evangelistic church, but there is a new evangelism coming rapidly to the front. "The revival is a great wrecking crew rescuing all who can be reached, but the Sunday School is a great light house guiding the children past the rocks and thus avoiding the cause of wrecks."

The Bible is looked upon as the revelation of God's will and the Bible School as the chief center of Bible study for the community.

The churches are placing more emphasis on the Bible School as an evangelistic force or agency. There the children, young people and older members of the community gather and study the Book of Books. Week after week the study goes on until the time for the evangelistic services arrives. The church then operates for a time at gathering a harvest of souls, and if the teaching force of the School has done its work well and is active in the special services, the richest part of the harvest will be gathered from the Bible School.

The importance of such work is being shown in the greater stress being laid on teacher training and good Biblical instruction. No other field of church activity yields such large and immediate results. It is a feeder for every other department of the church.

The live Sunday School teaches the latest temperance items and drills its pupils in the broadest and best of temperance principles. Missions receive a lively impetus in the Sunday School while peace principles are held up as an integral part of the work of the Prince of Peace. Something of the evangelistic power of the Bible School is shown in the fact that 89 per cent. of all additions to the church last year came through the Bible School. No one is equipped for first-class church service until he is a good Bible student and lives its teachings.

The last Five Years Meeting saw this trend of affairs and wisely created a Board to have in charge that line of activity. This Board is gathering information for every department of Bible School activity.

The Executive Committee is anxious to get in touch with every Bible School in the Five Years Meeting and asks that local workers please send to Wilbur K. Thomas, 12 Hazelwood St., Roxbury, Boston, Mass., the name of your Superintendent. This is needed: first, because in that way only can the greatest efficiency and uniformity be attained; second, by ordering supplies through our secretary a financial favor is conferred without any extra expenditure of time or money. The secretary is prepared to furnish all Sunday School supplies except such as are published by the Publishing Association of Friends.

In order to carry out the work inaugurated for the present year it will require about $1,000, less than half of which is thus far available. The need is pressing; the importance cannot be overestimated. Will Friends permit the cause to suffer for lack of finances?

If sufficient funds can be procured for this year's work the Board anticipates beginning the publication in the near future of a Friends Quarterly, edited and published under the direct supervision of the Board. Such an ideal has long been in the minds of many Friends and will be attainable when sufficient funds are available to partly support editorial writers. Present indications point to financial independence in the near future.

On behalf of the Bible School Board of the Five Years Meeting. RICHARD HAWORTH, President.

Seeking to Evangelize France

A convention of unusual interest will be held in Pittsfield, Massachusetts, on the 14th and 15th of this month. It is the annual gathering of those interested in the work of the McAll Mission, which has for its purpose the evangelization of France. The Christian world sees with alarm the rapid passing of that gifted nation into atheism and materialism. To evangelize France is to release the power of Christ at the intellectual headquarters of the world. * * *

He keepeth watch, thou needst not wake;
He taketh care, why shouldst thou fear?
Should eyes be wet or sad hearts break
While His voice bids us be of cheer?
The gloom that folds the world about
Is but the cloud of our own doubt.
Mercy above it shineth bright,
Our faithless fear blots out the light.

Happy Are They Who Endure

"Behold, we count them happy which endure."—James 5: 11.

God's promises of blessing are for those who continue faithful. There is no haphazard pathway in His kingdom. His favor is not vouchsafed to those who merely "run well for a season." They do not know the real happiness of the Lord, who must continually be revived to keep them in the Christian pathway. "He that endureth to the end shall be saved."

The Christian life is a warfare. Whether it be afflictions against which Job had to contend, or the deceitfulness of Jacob, or temptations which marked the pathway of David, or the persecutions of the prophets, or the impulsiveness of Peter, or the thorn in Paul's flesh, or the martyrdom of the saints, or the materialism of modern life, he who would live Godly and receive the crowning at the end, must resist them all continuously and effectively. Too often we are inclined to excuse and condone the shortcomings of our fellows, even though they be the manifest result of negligence or wilful disobedience.

Merit is measured by overcoming. If there be persecutions, they must be endured, or the persecutors won by the power of Christian love. If there be afflictions, they must be suffered in patience, even as the Son suffered the ignominy of the cross. If there be temptations, they must be resisted to the end. If there be sinful tendencies, they must be faced and overcome. If there be any wrong that touches the life from within or without, that clogs the free flow of God's grace and dwarfs spiritual development, it must be throttled and eradicated. He, who is overcome by circumstances, must suffer the consequences thereof. Even the frailties of mind and body must be brought into subjection to an unconquerable faith. He who overcomes and masters environment will reap the reward of the faithful and enjoy the happiness of those who walk with the Lord.

Happiness is soul freedom, and how few there are who taste its sweets to the full! How few there are who rise above the hindering things of earth, and are free to render whole-hearted service in the vineyard of Jehovah! How few there are who have cut the last shore line that impedes progress in the things of the spirit! It is they who endure; they that overcome; they who, facing difficulty, conquer it, that are counted happy. No one can know such happiness, such delight of the soul, who has not met opposition or some hindering thing in his pathway, and by resistance, put it forever under his feet.

This is a principle of Christian development which should be impressed upon every boy and girl; upon every young man and woman; upon every convert newly born into the kingdom of God. The doctrine of continuance, which is the doctrine of faithful obedience, is just as important to be preached with insistence to the point of reiteration, as is the doctrine of conversion. Too many converts are given the impression that henceforth there are to be no more struggles, no further temptations, no new difficulties, with the result that when these appear, as appear they will, the convert grows discouraged, lacks endurance, and falls by the wayside, a martyr to a false theory of Christian discipleship.

How many Christians, how many congregations there are which regularly, year after year, must have the stimulus of a revival effort to keep them alive in Christian experience! Is it any wonder that at times the Church seems to lack efficiency? While there will always be times of refreshing, special occasions of inspiration, that come as a necessary part of universal Christian experience, it is a reflection upon our holy Christianity that the customary revivalistic efforts of our churches must so frequently be applied to the re-vivifying of the professed followers of Christ. So stable should be the experiences of believers that a revival so called, as practiced by the evangelical churches, should be directed almost wholly to the winning of the unsaved.

In common practice, however, it is an experience all too common, that the Church must first be gotten right, before the call can go out to the unregenerated. Is it any wonder that with such examples of instability constantly before the eyes of the non-believers, they so frequently find little that is attractive in the church of today? There are some bright exceptions, wherein a live congregation, yearning for the salvation of the lost, by prayer, united in spirit and ready for any sacrifice, enters upon the task of seeking out the unsaved and winning souls for the Master. These are they who know the joy of the Lord by enduring to the end.

The test of discipleship is obedience; and obedience means continuing faith and service. They rejoice who succeed. It is a law of life. Well may it be said that they are counted happy who endure.

The Awakening Public Conscience

Our American Republic has apparently entered upon an era of reform. To what degree the purpose is genuine, time alone will reveal. Unfortunately, policy rather than principle, governs the action of so many, that it is not always easy to foresee the outcome. Probably there is no class of men in all the world whose aims and operations are governed by expediency to quite the same extent as those of the average politician and law maker. Cowardice, rather than statesmanship, often governs their course.

This indictment is by no means universal. In fact, there is reason to believe that it has less general application now, than at any other period since the early days of the Republic. But the need of improvement is still far too great. And upon the people rests the responsibility of establishing an era of government, wherein not only will public men consider every public question from the standpoint of public benefit, but will create a condition in which no other kind of officials can be chosen by popular vote.

The cowardice and fawning of politicians is not wholly their fault. Upon the electorate rests responsibility equally strong. So long as the voting public fails to support the official who dares to do the right, and with proper discrimination marks the fawning and unprincipled candidate for slaughter, so long will we have loose government and unworthy men in official position.

The hope that is brightest in our record of today is the apparent determination of the people at large to demand reform, and to select men who will bring it about. That there has been a public awakening, dating back to the beginning of the present century, is apparent to all. What the causes have been may not be determined with exactness. Whether it be the reaction from age-worn abuses, or the education, emanating from movements like the Christian Endeavor Society, which have touched every phase of our citizenship, or the awakening of the public conscience, which is the natural fruition of the modern crusade against the liquor traffic and kindred evils; whether it be the culmination of the dogmatic teachings of the present Secretary of State, who with all his supposed economic heresies has kept moral obligations to the fore, or whether it be the preachments of our strenuous exponent of the "square deal"; whether any one or all or none of these have been contributory to it, the fact remains that a moral awakening has evidently touched the conscience of the Nation, and moral worth is at a premium, where once it was heavily discounted in the marts of trade and in the halls of legislation.

The present crusade against social vice, which is fast assuming national proportions, is a phase of the awakening that is bound to purify many of the currents of our municipal and social life. No less important is the growing determination to "make the map all white" as relates to the traffic in intoxicants. Alongside of these are the movements to purify politics, to rectify the standards by which capital and labor are unequally judged, to limit the powers of dangerous capitalistic combinations, to re-establish rightful competition as the law of commerce, to obliterate graft, and establish government upon the basis of equity and justice to all.

That the counterfeit is bound to intrude itself amid the genuine in reform is practically certain. Men will become reformers who have axes to grind, expecting to ride into power upon some popular wave. Others, who are sin-besotted will hasten to become the color bearers of some popular crusade, later on to become traitors to the cause they have espoused. Over and above all is the consciousness that reforms too often are merely spasms of virtue, wherein the people lack staying powers so essential to the maintenance of public morality.

Herein is manifested the vital importance of the incorporation of Christian principles into any movement which seeks the betterment of humanity. The church should be in the vanguard of all such activities. Genuine reform that means the amelioration of suffering or sinful humanity, is the handmaid of evangelization. The two should move forward together. Christianity should bestir itself in order to insure the turning of the present national awakening into permanent and realistic channels.

From the days of the four and five hour sermons to a twenty minute discourse marks a startling transition. Can it be true that vital Christian experience has vanished in like proportion? Not necessarily, but the connection between the two is not wholly imaginary.

It is the constant dripping of the water that wears away the stone. It is the constant example of the Christian life that has the greatest influence in winning the world to God.

In our cities, one frequently sees the sign upon some building, "Business temporarily suspended." It is a sign which too often characterizes the Christian activities of some members of the Church.

The Averted Face

BY HENRY T. HODGKIN

When the prophet sought to paint the picture of the servant of Jehovah, he did not shrink from painting in the dark, difficult, and even repulsive features. It is true that in the end there stood out a portrait of amazing loveliness, at least so it seems to us who have read it in the light of that gracious Life which alone has faithfully filled out every detail of the picture. We may do our work less thoroughly today, scamping the unlovely parts because we fear to face all that they mean. When we talk of Jesus nowadays we are apt to leave out the marred visage, the root out of a dry ground; we dare not say that he had no form or comeliness, that there was no beauty that we should desire Him. Nevertheless, this is a part of the truth, and an absolutely necessary part too.

The Apostle Paul was not afraid of it. He knew that his message would be to the Greeks foolishness, to the Jews a stumbling block. Nevertheless he said, "I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ, and Him crucified"—Him a criminal; the unlovely, difficult, incomprehensible side of His life—this I determined to bring to the front as the very heart of my message. Some of us think that if we preach Christ as the perfect Pattern for human life, if we lift up the beautiful figure of the gentle Jesus, we have done all that is required of us as His messengers. But we are expressly told that when He spoke of being "lifted up" it was a reference to His death. Can we truly lift Him up if we surpress this difficult element in the Gospel?

He was, says the prophet, "As one from whom men hide their faces." All the attention which is being turned to that great Figure in history does not give the lie to this testimony. Still we see the averted face; still do men turn away instinctively from the mystery of His death. Why is this? Is it because of the deep mystery which bids us stand in awe and keep silence? Is it because we fear so much to speak unreal words which have not sprung out of the experience of our own lives? Is it a reaction from a too exclusive reiteration on, or a too rigid interpretation of the meaning of the Cross? These may in part explain the phenomenon of the averted face, but there is a deeper and more permanent reason which must be stated if we are to reach a full answer to the question.

We hide our faces from the Cross in large part because we see in it a revelation of the loathsomeness of sin. This is what sin once did, what it has done, in effect, many times since, what it may do at any moment. It crucified and may again crucify the Son of God, the spotless Jesus against whose pure life nothing can be brought that mars its perfection, still less that marks it out for death—and for such a death! When we dare to look sin squarely in the face it is always horrible. We may paint it in glowing colors and glorify it with misleading names; but when once we see it as it really is, it is hateful, revolting and difficult to look upon. The Cross shows us sin as it really is.

We have read lately of the awful cruelty of the men who have tortured their brothers and sisters in the quest of rubber. Many of us have found it hard to read on to the end; we have turned away our faces. But even this is not so terrible as to look at the Son of God upon the cross of Calvary. There we see not only sin as it is, shown in all its awfulness against the background of perfect love, but we also see that we ourselves are the culprits. This it is which gives the deepest pain to us as we gaze upon the crucified Savior. In some way, we cannot perhaps say how or why, we are made to realize that this awful evil which brought Him there is ours, and that in our own hearts there lurks the germ of this same devastating plague. Small wonder then that the face is averted.

Nor is this all. To many there has come some such revelation, and as they still gazed in deepest penitence and woe there has come to them the further sight of utmost forgiveness and of all-conquering good. Seeing this they have indeed been cheered. They have drawn fresh life from the very sight they scarce dared to gaze upon. But they still again turn away. The dazzling brightness is too much. The Cross has not done all its work for us when we learn that we are sinners and that we have been forgiven. It makes a demand upon us in every part of our life. It tells us in the plainest terms of Him who knew that life was in truth a battle, and who went out to fight for good against evil to the very end. No one who continues to gaze at Christ upon the Cross can live a life of ease. He dare not cease from strife. He is called in every fibre of his being to rise and follow, to fight on, even if in doing so he sheds his last drop of blood and dies forsaken and forgotten.

The life of our time is not in harmony with this stringent, urgent call to sacrifice and death. It seeks to tread an easier path than He trod. It is not strange that, while it talks about the beautiful life of the Savior, it turns away its face from the Figure on the Cross. It cannot bear to hear those strong, harsh words, "If any man would come after me let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me."

But the church that is out to do God's work in the world cannot afford to put the Cross into the second place. The averted face does not spell victory. It means lack of courage and leads only to defeat. Every great forward movement in the church has found first inspiration in the marvel and mystery of the crucified Son of God. If the Society of Friends is to do its work in the world today, it must look long and earnestly at this strange sight until it becomes possessed once more with the divine passion, and learns afresh to lose its life in the service of Jesus Christ.

London, England.

Some Reflections on Christian Worship

BY GEORGE A. BARTON, IN FRIEND'S FELLOWSHIP PAPERS

To us who have been educated from childhood as Friends, the type of worship expressed in a Friends' Meeting is essentially sacred. Its moments of living silence in which the soul becomes conscious of the realities of the spiritual life and God comes very near, are dear to us, as are those other moments when some gifted and inspired soul voices a message from God which meets our need, or utters a supplication which makes vocal our unformulated aspirations in a way to give them greater stability and a permanent influence in our lives. Educated in such a spiritual environment, it is little wonder that many of us have looked with scant sympathy upon the religious forms of the rest of the Christian world, and have comforted ourselves with the thought that we, somehow, stand a little nearer to God than others, and form a spiritual aristocracy.

In these latter days our self-congratulation has, however, received some rude shocks. There have been defections from the Quaker type of worship in many parts of our own borders. The modern "Friends Churches" probably outnumber the old-fashioned Friends Meetings, and in the "Churches" the worship is conducted according to a program. At the present moment probably the largest number of those who call themselves Friends have abandoned the Quaker type of worship. This fact should lead us to a renewed examination of the purpose and function of public worship, and to a renewed examination of its different types, to see if we can understand why the Quaker forms of worship, dear as they are to us, failed to hold even our own membership, to say nothing of failure to attract the world.

It must be confessed even by those who love the Friends' Meeting most, that its best product has been purchased at great cost. None who have taught in Friends' schools can have failed to note how little many children get out of the meetings. There is nothing to aid in the control of their undisciplined thoughts; meeting too often is a time for irreverent pranks. In spite of this the great realities of the Spirit finally grip the hearts of some, but the irksome repression has driven many hopelessly beyond our influence. One cannot help wondering whether it is necessary that the choice products of Quaker character and experience should be purchased at the cost of such great waste of lives.

Again, many of our meetings, especially in country districts in America, have become formal, stupid, and unspiritual. The silence has too often been devoid of spiritual life; the utterances have been the fantastic notions of ignorant people, uttered with the most grotesque tones and gestures, which, powerless as they were to feed the spirit or kindle faith, have been mistaken by the leaders of the meetings for the utterances of the Spirit. A large part of our heritage has gone to waste in consequence of such intellectual and spiri-ual dry rot. The causes of this are no doubt complex, but among them one has been potent. Our early Quaker polity was built on a false psychology. The early Friends made a great discovery in the realm of worship, but, like many discoverers in other fields, they pushed the discovery too far.

Robert Barclay was profoundly influenced by Descartes' doctrine of innate divine ideas. It would seem that other of the early leaders, though not scholars, had in some way come under its influence.* Back of this Cartesian doctrine lay the mediæval conception of the worthlessness and utter corruption of human nature. It was easy to teach under the ægis of this philosophy that only a direct inspiration, which spoke through the feelings and not through the mind could be of value in worship.

Again, the early Friends conceived public worship as the prostration of the soul before God. When individual communion was conceived as the only function of public worship, it was natural, under the influence of the new discovery of the power of silence, to make that dominant. In this, however, Friends set themselves in opposition, not only to the general practice of Christians, but to Apostolic practice as well. Early Christian worship was profoundly influenced by the synagogue, into the exercises of which the Scripture lessons entered largely. From the beginning the Apostles recognized that there was an element of instruction in all proper Christian worship. While Paul, in I Cor. XII: 14, lays down the rule that there must be opportunity for each to exercise his gift, and that the Spirit must be free, he does not insist upon or presuppose silence. He takes it for granted that there will be, as there has been, the reading and interpretation of Scripture, the singing of psalms, and teaching.

Owen, in the introduction to the English edition of one of Harnack's books,† draws a picture of a typical Lord's Day service in the north of Palestine at the end of the first century. The picture is based on historical analogies and is, I believe, essentially correct. All the elements of instruction and praise which Paul had pre-supposed were present. * * *

Public worship undoubtedly has a social as well as an individual function. Its social function is to draw all, mature and immature alike, veteran Christians and immature children, into sympathy with one another, into sympathetic fellowship with the heroes of faith, into communion with God and devotion to His will. The majority of Christians, from the days of Paul to our own, have found in such exercises as Scripture reading and exposition and in singing, the best means to this social end. Out of the social helpfulness aid has come to individuals. Sluggish souls have been stirred and lifted to the point of individual consecration and communion. One cannot help wondering at times whether Friends were wise to disregard this social side of worship and compel all, however immature, to strive to worship

* See the writer's "Heart of the Christian Message," 2d ed., p. 174.

† See "Sources of the Apostolic Canons," London, 1895, p. lix. f.

Where is neither church or priest,
And never rag of form or creed,
To clothe the nakedness of need.

In the early period of Quaker history, when the age was dominated by the philosophical conceptions which shaped Quaker theology, people were won to Quakerism in such numbers that it seemed as though the Quaker form of worship might sweep the world. The early Quaker apostles expected that it would. They had no thought of founding a mere sect. They believed that they had re-discovered a truth of universal adaptability to human experience, and they hoped to make it truly Catholic in the Christian world. We no longer have that hope. Our missionaries have generally found it necessary to use other forms of worship at least to some degree in their work. In our Home Mission and Adult School work we acknowledge that the traditional Quaker way does not produce the best results. In America whole Yearly Meetings have abandoned this form of worship in their own gatherings. Those of us who love this way of worship must have no hope of doing more than to keep it for use among a specially educated spiritual aristocracy.

When, however, we turn our eyes from our ecclesiastical forms to those of others, the ideal form of worship is hard to find. It certainly does not exist in the Roman, Greek, and Oriental communions, in which the laity take no real part in the exercises of worship. The Anglican service, which has in common with Quakerism the idea that all the congregation participates in worship, has nevertheless serious drawbacks. It is hedged in by a form of words, which, though decorous and beautiful, are inelastic.

The form of worship that prevails among Presbyterians and Nonconformists generally is not more satisfactory. Worship is here performed for the congregation by the minister and the choir. It has only this advantage over the worship of the Roman and Eastern churches; its teaching is more intelligent and the congregation can often join in the hymns. In general, however, the worshipers watch while the service is performed for them, and as a spectacle it is less interesting than in the Roman and Oriental communions.

It is not contended that any forms of worship are vain. Through all of them souls reach out after God and find Him. I am only saying that, if we are honest enough to perceive that the Quaker form of worship which we love has its limitations, we have the comfort of knowing that all other forms have their defects too. The perfect form of the congregational worship of God is yet to come.

Meantime we may comfort ourselves with the knowledge that our spiritual ancestors made a distinct contribution to adequate public worship by the discovery of the value of silence. Ministers of other denominations are beginning to introduce periods of silence into their worship. One not a Friend, in describing his experience in such a silent period, says: "First there came very quietly the sense of a Presence. The work of prayer grew strangely easy. We were not resolutely fixing our thoughts upon a friend in a far country; we were listening to One who was there in the church—speaking." May it not be that these men, in making silence an instrument of communion for mature, spiritually minded Christians, are wiser than we, who have long practically said that it is the only way to approach God?

Meantime the question presses upon the conscience of some of us: What shall be our attitude to the Christian world? Shall it be provincial or catholic? Shall we count ourselves as members of a small aristocracy? Shall we live apart and enjoy our inheritance? Or shall we take the precious spiritual discovery of our forefathers, lift it out of the limitations in which they placed it, and seek in the light of the present and the future to find that way of Christian worship that shall at once meet the social and individual needs of the greatest number of men, and be the most efficient aid for the mature spirit in its efforts to come into communion with God?

The Panama Exposition

The Administrative Committee of the Federal Council of Churches has sent out a request that religious bodies take proper action relative to the resolution given below. We suggest that individual congregations and monthly meetings approve the resolution, and when properly signed, forward the same to the President of the Panama Exposition, San Francisco, California. The various Yearly Meetings should take appropriate action, also, when they convene.

The suggested resolutions are as follows:

"Whereas, There is to be held in the city of San Francisco, in 1915, a great Exposition, in which both American and foreign nations are to participate, and

"Whereas, The moral conditions under which such an Exposition is held are a matter of immediate and general concern, be it hereby

"Resolved, That we..... in accord with the action of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, do earnestly urge the city government of San Francisco and the Board of Directors of the Exposition to adopt every means to prevent the exploiting of the Exposition by commercialized vice, and to protect the visitors to San Francisco from such influence as would tend to lower public morals and injure the good name of San Francisco and America."

Copies of the action taken should also be addressed to the mayor of San Francisco.

Let us be content in work
To do the thing we can, and not presume
To fret because it's little.

The Mexican Situation and Our Missions

BY CHARLES E. TEBBETTS

Meeting of the Executive Committee of American Friends Board of Foreign Missions

At the mid-year meeting of the Executive Committee reports were received from the different fields under its care, and the general interests of the work carefully considered, a brief report of which is here given:

MISSIONS IN MEXICO

The work in Mexico has been peculiarly trying because of the political condition of the country. Much of the time the mail service has been interrupted, and railroad communication absolutely cut off. The General Secretary in returning from California expected to attend the annual meeting of the Mission, which was to have been held at Matehuala at the Easter season. But all roads to the interior were closed, and he could only reach Matamoros. The annual meeting could not be held. There has been no trouble at Matamoros that has seriously disturbed the work there. Everett Morgan's work has been interrupted for a time, as his health is much broken, and he has gone to Battle Creek to see what can be done to restore it. The Presbyterian workers there have kindly consented to look after his work in his absence so far as the church services are concerned.

At Matehuala the workers have been living under severe nervous strain, because of the uncertainty of conditions. Raymond Holding wrote on February 18: "Today is the eighth day that we have been completely cut off from the outside world. We do not know what is going on ten leagues away. All sorts of rumors are continually coming to us. They tell us all that the surrounding towns and villages have been taken by the rebels, and that all the depredations incident to warfare have been committed, and that Matehuala is sure to be attacked at any hour. At all hours of the night the word is passed from house to house 'They are coming, they are coming'; but so far they have not come. The people have been greatly alarmed because of the horrible crimes that were committed at Vanegas (the junction point of the Matehuala Railroad, a few miles away).

"It was feared the same depredations would be perpetrated here. It was very difficult to induce anyone to offer their services as guards. They would say, 'What's the use; why place ourselves as targets for the bandits.' A few families went out into the country and passed the nights, returning during the day. The large copper smelter has been closed down nearly a month, as have most of the mining activities, thus throwing a large number of wage-earners out of employment. They really constitute the most dangerous class just now. Any sort of an uprising would be seconded by many of these, and a general looting would be the result. We are anxious to see traffic restored, so that if needs be we can move out. But just now we are obliged to take our portion of whatever comes. We Americans have passed the greater portion of our time visiting back and forth to make inquiry as to the outlook. The most common salutation is: 'What's the word?' or 'Have you heard?' 'I came to tell you, though I do not know whether it is true,' 'If you hear anything let me know,' 'What would be the best thing to do?' We think that 'tomorrow we will know something.' But no not so."

Such has been the condition of affairs most of the time for the last three months. On the 23d he writes: "Late this evening friends of ours that live out on a ranch, a day's drive, came into the city to find refuge from the bandits. They relate something of the horrors from which they fled. The group of rebels numbered about thirty. They entered the ranch and made demands for money and edibles, horses and cattle. Their demands were met and they went to another ranch with similar demands. They ordered the owner to send word to others of their party to return, which was done. They ordered a sumptuous feast to be prepared by the lady of the house. This having been done they began an all-night debauch, taking all the liberties that their brutal natures might suggest. In the morning upon leaving they called for a fine horse that the rancher owned. It was immediately brought forth. A bandit asked if the horse was gentle, and was answered, 'Get on and try it.' This displeased the bandit and he drew his pistol and killed the man. The lady of the house was ordered to scrub up his blood that ran out on the floor. Such are the reports that so frequently come in from the nearby villages and ranches."

The 26th he writes: "We received a telegram from my father-in-law telling us that the situation looked ugly, and we had better get out. Since we are not ready to go by telegraph, we are consoling ourselves with the thought that the wires are working once more."

On the 28th: "It was eleven o'clock this morning when a number of parents came hurrying to the school asking for their children, saying that a band of rebels were three miles from the city, and would soon make an attack. I at once repaired to the police station and learned that it was the same gang that had visited Vanegas a few days before. They demanded the surrender of the city. Word spread like wildfire. The indignation that already existed because of the depredations at Vanegas soon stirred the citizens to action. A committee was sent to treat with the band, to ascertain their object and to see if they could be dissuaded, offering whatsoever they might wish if it were in the bounds of reason. Otherwise the people are determined to resist.

"At two o'clock I went to lay in a few groceries so that in case it was a few days' affair we would have something to eat. I noticed that there was scarcely a woman or child on the street. Men were gathered in serious groups at various places planning, in event that things should come to the worst. At the store the clerks were busy loading shotgun shells with buckshot. Later in the evening they were able to effect arrangements whereby the rebels would pass on without giving further trouble to the city."

Is it worth while to work under such conditions? Of one Sabbath, Raymond Holding writes: "The Sabbath day has passed by comparatively quiet. Services have been well attended. The night meeting was one of the best we have had for a long while. In the city there were no moving pictures, and there are many people that cannot get out, and were anxious to hear something that would give rest to their troubled spirits." Of all times, such as these are times when the native church and anxious souls need the gospel and the help of the Mission. When the wolf comes it is no time to leave the flock without a shepherd.

At Victoria it has been less disturbed, and yet during the session of our committee, a telegram was received from R. Solomon Tice saying, they were all safe, and requesting information to be sent to their friends. What the trouble was is not known here as yet, but evidently there had been serious trouble.

The end is not yet, and no one can foresee when it will be. It is surely time for the church to stand close to our missionaries through prayer, and by giving such prompt help that they may have no added anxiety over fear lest there be lack of full support at home. Miss Sarah Lindley has resigned, as she cannot longer stand the strain, after so many years of hard service. She has long needed a missionary helper in the large school, but our funds would not warrant it. Cannot the friends of Mexico rally with larger support, and relieve the strain?

The Peace Movement Among Friends

[This Department is designed to afford an opportunity for a presentation of important phases of the Peace question, and will welcome correspondence which gives information in regard to the progress of the Peace movement anywhere among Friends, or which reflects clearly the views of any of our readers, younger or older, on this important subject. Such correspondence should be addressed to Allen D. Hole, 615 National Road, West, Richmond, Indiana.]

Conscience and War

Conscience not always against War

The most ardent advocates of peace must certainly agree that some, perhaps very many, of the supporters of the program of the militarists give their support conscientiously. It is also certain that a very large majority of our citizens are not convinced that war is in itself wrong, for by the tens of thousands, men enlisted in 1861 to 1865, and again by the thousand in the war against Spain; enlisted with the support and encouragement of others by the hundreds of thousands who for various reasons remained at home.

From the churches, soldiers came. Even from among Friends, who as a body have always maintained a clear testimony against war, came some who enlisted as soldiers when the call was made. True, there were many Friends in the South who in those trying days suffered the most severe trials rather than disobey the voice of conscience as to war; and to the honor of Southern Friends let it be said that none of their number took up arms in that time of so great trial. Thousands of Friends in the North also suffered reproach for conscience sake; but some equally conscientious, no doubt, joined as soldiers in the great conflict.

Our situation. Our Problem

Our situation seems then to be this: In common with other nations we find ourselves to a greater or less extent under the influence of a great system which requires of us support. The support demanded is sometimes money, sometimes influence, sometimes the lives of thousands of our sons. As a matter of life and death, at least, it is a moral question which makes an appeal to the conscience. But some of our citizens have a conscience to support the system, some have a conscience to oppose it, and some, while not wishing to give their support, do not have convictions strong enough to become the ground for real opposition to the system.

The problem for those who view the war system as a great wrong, is how to make the number of men who feel that war is wrong sufficiently large to outlaw it among all the nations of the earth.

The Method

When we ask how conscience can be quickened we are asking the old but ever new questions, "How do we know what is right? How can we convince men that this or that is right?" For we are to remember that conscience does not answer the question "Is this right?" Conscience acts only after a belief in what is right is established.

Just in what way the decision as to what is right is brought about, is a question for philosophers to make clear. But this much we all can see: Men today are not inclined to accept as binding on their own individual consciences unsupported statements by others in regard to what is right and wrong. Even for those who trust most implicitly the words of the Bible, there is still the consciousness that when two men, equally intelligent, and equally desirous of knowing the truth, read the same Holy Book and yet come away with different views as to what God intends to teach there, some help must be sought outside the Book to know how it is to be understood.

Some will tell us to seek to acquaint ourselves more intimately with the Holy Spirit if we would know the right interpretation of the Scriptures; and this is indeed the right and complete way. But we must still inquire as to how we are to know the mind of the Spirit; and while much should be said and learned about access to the Spirit by means of prayer and personal communion, it has been found to be true that for most men the mind of the Spirit is most fully revealed only as they have consciously used all their powers in the attempt to find out the truth for themselves. This means primarily careful observation and thoughtful investigation.

As touching the question here referred to upon which there is now a division of opinion, namely, "Is war wrong?" the field of observation most important and most readily accessible for investigation is that of the history of the nations. And the method to be followed is to be determined by this principle, which is almost an axiom in its nature: "That which is ethically and morally wrong will be found in the end to be wrong industrially, socially, politically, and economically." And conversely, "If any practice is found to be ruinous to the industrial, the social, and the political interests of a nation, that practice is ethically and morally wrong."

Our Present Stage

It is interesting and instructive to note some of the different stages through which entrenched evils pass before they are finally removed, such as the following:

1. Existence as a custom which is taken for granted as necessary, and therefore unchallenged.
2. Existence as an established custom, but with emphatic protest by a few men who are to be classed as prophets and seers, saying, "This is wrong."
3. A stage in which the growing sentiment against it forces the evil to attempt to justify its existence. This usually includes an attempt to prove its own very great usefulness, and the consequent injustice of its being classed as a "wrong."
4. A stage in which the claim of "usefulness" is tested fully. This is the beginning of the end.

Conscience against an evil as awakened in a few by the burning messages of a prophet, may be of somewhat different temper and quality from the conscience awakened in a nation by the conviction that the interests of the nation and the well-being of its citizens are threatened. Yet each has its fitting part in the great work of hastening the day when the Prince of Peace shall reign supreme in all the nations of the earth. Let us do our full share in the work before us in this our day.

Lord, help me live from day to day,
In such a self-forgetful way,
That even when I kneel to pray,
My prayer shall be for others.
And when my work on earth is done,
And my work in heaven's begun,
May I forget the crown I've won,
While thinking still of—others.—Ex.

We must remember that we live in the Master's presence; and therefore in his strength, for his sake, let us show in all our dealings with men the graciousness which won all hearts to himself.—W. L. Watkinson.

JOSIAH NICHOLSON

The death of Josiah Nicholson, which occurred on March 30, has removed from North Carolina Yearly Meeting one of its best known and best beloved members. Indeed, the loss of a Friend of such wide interest in our branch of the church, one whose activity has extended over so long a period, is keenly felt by a very large circle of our membership in the various yearly meetings.

The ancestry of the Nicholson family came early to this country, settling in New England about the year 1660. On account of the bitter and relentless persecutions of Friends under John Endicott's administration, quite a tide of emigration set in from the New England colony. Many of these found a home in North Carolina. Among them were Elizabeth Nicholson and her two sons, Christopher and Joseph, who settled in eastern Carolina about 1670. The first record of marriage among these Friends is that of Christopher Nicholson and Ann Atwood. It is believed that this was the Christopher Nicholson whose name occurs among the Boston sufferers. Christopher's grandson, Thomas, was a prominent Friends minister for forty-four years. Josiah Nicholson was the great-grandson of Thomas Nicholson. His parents, Josiah and Anna White Robinson Nicholson were elders in the Society of Friends and influential in the church and community.

Josiah Nicholson was born April 13, 1831. In his childhood and youth he was very conscientious and yet an agreeable companion and popular with his associates. His early education was obtained in the Belvidere Academy, near the old homestead. Later he attended Providence School, R. I. He possessed a bright mind and made good use of his opportunity; in later life his intellectual ability and refinement of manners clearly marked him as a Christian gentleman. Especially was he well informed in all matters pertaining to the Society of Friends.

While his brothers left their native State and became leaders wherever they resided, not only in matters relating to the church, but also in every kind of endeavor that aimed at human uplift, Josiah remained within the limits of North Carolina Yearly Meeting and was long a pillar of strength in all the affairs which claimed the attention of the Yearly Meeting. He was an elder in Piney Woods Monthly Meeting for fifty years and a member of the Permanent Board from its beginning to the end of his life. He served the church with great efficiency in almost every capacity from clerk of the monthly meeting to that of the yearly meeting, both of the meeting on ministry and oversight and of the body at large. The latter office he filled at various times for five years.

As representative of the yearly meeting to Conferences and to the Five Years Meeting, his service was greatly valued by North Carolina Friends and by delegates from other yearly meetings. The last duty of this kind was in the Five Years Meeting last held.

His interests in education was marked, and his efforts in behalf of the Belvidere Academy were greatly appreciated by the entire community in which he lived; and his support and guiding hand in the school was a large factor in the perpetuation and development of this worthy institution. In 1890 he was elected a member of the Board of Trustees of Guilford College and served with great satisfaction to the yearly meeting and to the board from that date until his death. He was repeatedly elected Treasurer of Perquimans County.

He was first married to Ellen Bassett of Providence, R. I. Of this union there survive one son, F. H. Nicholson of Greensboro, N. C.; Alice N. White of High Point, N. C.; and Anna N. Riddick of Belvidere. His second marriage was with Harriet Hare, who lived only a short time thereafter. Subsequently he married Elizabeth White, who survives.

Josiah Nicholson was noted for quick insight into all questions, good business ability, excellent judgment and rare gentleness of manner. When great questions were at stake, his courage in word and in deed was equal to any emergency. Both his wisdom and courage were put to the test many times in the difficult position in which he was placed during the Civil War. Opposed on principle to both war and the disruption of the Union, and living on the border line between the two armies, his conduct was determined by such fine sense of truth and righteousness mingled with good judgment, that he was held in the highest esteem by his neighbors irrespective of his known Union sympathy.

As indicating the impression which the life of Josiah Nicholson made on a young man not a member of the Society of Friends, the following estimate of him is taken from an address made in 1912 at Guilford College by his friend, the well known Christian scholar, Horace H. Williams, professor of philosophy in the University of North Carolina: "Two years of my life were spent in Belvidere in the service of Josiah Nicholson. I was his clerk and lived in his family. I saw all sides of his life. This was thirty-three years ago. Since then I have seen many men and have had much experience. Next to my mother I place Josiah Nicholson. His influence upon me was elemental. In Harvard University I knew well the greatest thinker America ever produced—Dr. Charles Eliot. In Boston I heard America's greatest preacher—Phillips Brooks. Among these deep, elemental forces in my life, I am still inspired by the gentleness, the simplicity, the integrity, the beauty of the life of Josiah Nicholson. For thirty years I have been striving to understand it and make it my own."

The United Missionary Campaign

At the time of the meeting of the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting and the meeting of the Executive Committee of the Foreign Mission Board in Richmond week before last, Mr. George Innes of Philadelphia, one of the secretaries of the United Missionary Campaign movement, accounts of which have already been set forth in the AMERICAN FRIEND, was present and presented the claims of this cause to both committees.

The Executive Committee authorized the appointment of a sub-committee to counsel with like committees to be appointed by the Boards interested, in devising plans for the incorporation of the Campaign into the work of Friends. The Foreign Mission Board likewise appointed a committee, and others, like the Evangelistic and Church Extension Board and the Social Service Board, will likely take similar action.

If the inauguration of this system means nothing more to Friends than the adoption of some systematic and adequate method of raising the funds necessary for the work of our various Boards, it will be well worth the trial. It is hoped that the Committees will be able to work out some satisfactory plan by which this whole movement can be presented to the various Yearly Meetings for endorsement.

One of the purposes of the Campaign is to secure an every member canvass, with a view to getting every member of the church to contribute to the work of the church, especially that pertaining to missions, both home and foreign. It is an interdenominational effort looking to a simultaneous canvass in March, 1914, with conventions to be held this autumn, and proper organization to be effected meanwhile in each denomination that will make the Campaign effective.

A tender thought in warm emotion dressed
Outlives the laughter of the keener jest;
Who brings a smile can hardly get so near
The human heart, as one who brings a tear.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

California Yearly Meeting

We have received word that Ruth Trueblood Green, wife of William K. Green, of Whittier, died in a hospital May 1. She was a sister of Professor Edwin P. Trueblood, of Earlham College. We hope to have a fuller notice later.

Canada Yearly Meeting

Canadian Friends have contributed $151.75 for the War Victims' Relief Fund, being raised by members of London Yearly Meeting.

Friends of Wellington Quarterly Meeting to be held at Wellington, June 7th and 8th, are hoping to have with them Gurney Binford and wife.

The Young Friends' Christian Association at Newmarket gave two splendid programs last month. The first was an evening with the Huguenots, an address being given by Fred J. Sutton. The second was an illustrated lecture by David Rogers, the Science Master of Pickering College, on recent day astronomy. On the evening of the 20th, Arthur G. Dorland, of Pickering College, gave a helpful sermon on "Show Thyself a Man."

Indiana Yearly Meeting

A social evening was enjoyed by members of the Friends' Bible School at Ludlow Falls, Ohio, recently, when a reception was given in honor of the primary class, which secured the largest number of new scholars during the month of March. A splendid program was rendered and the social spirit will long be remembered. Ice cream and cake were served in the dining room of the church. The spirit now is to do something to increase the interest of the school.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

On April 13th, Oskaloosa Friends were favored with the presence of Allen Roundtree, of England, both at the morning and at the evening meeting. In the morning meeting he supplemented Clarence M. Case's sermon on Peace and Patriotism, with a few fitting remarks, and in the evening service he delivered an address on the same subject, which was greatly appreciated by those who had the privilege of hearing him.

According to the provisions of the will of Bertha Heacock Williams, late wife of Edgar R. Williams, of Grinnell, Iowa, $50.00 from her estate goes to the Friends' church at Grinnell, Iowa; $50.00 to the Children's Home at Council Bluffs, Iowa; and $75.00 for the benefit of the Boys' Dormitory in Jamaica, W. I. Bertha Williams was a devoted Christian, and her interest in missions was attested by her liberal contributions to this cause. She was a life long members of Sugar Creek Monthly Meeting, Iowa.

New England Yearly Meeting

The Woman's Foreign Missionary Society of Fall River, Massachusetts, recently entertained the societies of Providence, Somerset, Portsmouth and Newport. H. Alma Swift spoke most interestingly of the work of Friends in Jamaica. Following the meeting was a social hour, when tea was served in the meeting house parlors, and Mrs. Swift exhibited a number of interesting curios, pictures, and handwork by the students of Happy Grove. An offering of $10.13 for Jamaica was taken in the meeting.

During the winter the Christian Endeavor Society of Fall River, Massachusetts, has had a number of outside speakers, who have contributed much toward the meetings. David Keefe, ex-representative, spoke on tuberculosis. Mr. Quimby, immigrant secretary of the Y. M. C. A., spoke of the work being done in Fall River for the foreigners. Vincent D. Nicholson was with us one Sabbath, and told of the Mission work of American Friends. Mr. Jones, of the Y. M. C. A., and Miss Laurenson, of the Fall River Christian Endeavor Union, have each led one meeting. But perhaps the greatest good has come through the faithfulness of the members.

New York Yearly Meeting

Robert Pretlow, who has served the Friends' meeting at Brooklyn, New York, for some years as pastor, has resigned his position, and will take up the pastoral work immediately at Seattle, Washington, succeeding the late Isom P. Wooten. The Brooklyn Friends gave him and his wife a farewell reception, which was largely attended, and was an occasion long to be remembered. After a fitting program had been rendered, showing the appreciation in which the pastor and his family had been held, a substantial purse was presented to Robert Pretlow and a brooch to Mrs. Pretlow. Robert Pretlow begins his work at Seattle about the middle of May. In July he is on the program to give an address at one of the missionary conferences at the National Christian Endeavor convention at Los Angeles. He is a trustee of that organization, and will be heard at the Friends' denominational rally to be held in connection with the convention on July 10.

Oregon Yearly Meeting

Arthur and Eliza F. Dann, of England, visited Salem, Oregon, and held a four days' service. Their messages were very acceptable and helpful to the congregations.

Homer L. Cox and wife, of Portland, assisted the pastor, Blanche Ford Pickering, at the First Friends' Church in Salem, Oregon, in a series of revival meetings which lasted eighteen days, beginning March 9th. The preaching of the gospel was in the power of the Spirit. Sin was uncovered, confessions were made, many were renewed and saved, many received the baptism with the Spirit, (seventy-five in all were at the altar), and the church was greatly strengthened. Fourteen have united with the church.

Sanford J. and Blanche Ford Pickering, who have been the pastors of the two Friends' churches in Salem, the former since its organization last October, and the latter for two and a half years, have resigned their work, and will leave the Yearly Meeting at the close of the coming session in June. It was with strong protest that the resignations were accepted, for their work in our midst has been eminently successful. The new church at South Salem has been growing steadily under the ministry of S. J. Pickering, and the First Church under that of Blanche Ford Pickering, in the two and a half years of service, has brought in one hundred and fifty members. They have won a large place in the religious work of the city, have been called upon to address union meetings of different character, have been conspicuous in the work of the Ministerial Association, and have faithfully shepherded the flocks. It is with regret that the church and city hears of the resignations.

Wilmington Yearly Meeting

The people of Wilmington gave prompt response to the appeal for aid from the flood sufferers, raising about $3,000.00 in money, and sending large donations of food and clothing by automobiles to Dayton, thirty-five miles away. Friends were liberal and active in this work.

Fairfield Quarterly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight at its session, April 25th; discussed the interests of the AMERICAN FRIEND, and steps were taken to canvass each meeting in the Quarterly Meeting.

Ellison R. Purdy preached at the Fairfield Quarterly Meeting held at New Vienna, Ohio, April 26th, and in the business meeting presented the claims of the AMERICAN FRIEND and the Evangelistic Committee of the Five Years Meeting, urging the unity of Friends in the work throughout the country.

Wilmington Monthly Meeting recorded twelve new members in April.

Mrs. Ellison R. Purdy was hostess to her Sunday-school class Friday, April 18. The occasion was not alone for the social advantage, but for a combination of work and pleasure. The "Helpers' Class" spent all day working on Christmas quilts and comforts for the needy. Forty-four members of the class and twelve small children were present. A feast of good things added to the day's pleasure, especially the sumptuous dinner. Two large tables were spread with a variety of choice things and the noon hour was a real feast. A half hour was given to a review of the life of Abraham, and the story was very interestingly told by seven or eight of the ladies.

Friends Celebrate Silver Wedding

An impressive reception took place Friday evening, April 18, at Everett, Washington, when Charles and May Replogle, of the First Friends Church, celebrated their silver wedding anniversary. About one hundred and fifty invited guests registered their names in the beautifully bound volume arranged for the occasion.

A splendid program had been prepared and was given in the auditorium of the meeting house. The committee, consisting of two elders, Emerson Ball and Lettie Gregory, and two overseers, Frank Hallock and Flora Jones, appointed by the monthly meeting, was seated on the platform, and Virgil Sarff was in charge of the program. Miss Italy Hallock presided at the organ, and opened the program with a splendidly rendered wedding march. This was followed by an impressive scripture reading and prayer by Lettie Gregory.

Virgil Sarff then explained at length the practice in the church in the years gone by, of its members marrying themselves without the aid of priest or preacher, and how, as long as the church held to its original custom, divorce had been absolutely unknown among them.

Following this address, the honor guests came down the center aisle of the room unattended, and stood before the platform, while a copy of their license was read. They then joined their hands and solemnly rehearsed the proceedings of their wedding, after which Mrs. Mildred McCumby, their only daughter, sang a beautiful solo.

Flora Jones read a paper giving an account of their service in the church from 1888 to 1903, which included their nine years in Alaska as missionaries and a year in Europe, where they traveled, visiting meetings and scattered families through many countries. Lettie Gregory told the story of the circumstances leading to their coming to Everett, and of their nine years of service in this city and state.

William Wills gave an excellent solo, and Alda Hickey contributed a splendid reading. A song by Mrs. Ellen Carbanio with Professor James at the organ, added further pleasure. B. F. Caudill, of the First Baptist Church, concluded the program with a splendid talk.

After a picture of the company had been taken, the guests partook of refreshments prepared by the ladies of the church. Many acquaintances were formed, and a general good time was enjoyed.

Winona, July 23-30

Are you going to Winona with the rest of us to attend our Fourth Annual Summer Conference for Young Friends in America? The date this year is July 23-30. Since the Five Years Meeting, one of the liveliest topics for discussion among Friends has been the department of young people's activities. Everywhere young Friends are awakening to the great opportunities for service in our church. At Winona we shall spend a week in close study of our church organization and its problems. You will meet young Quakers from all parts of America, and some from England.

The George Fox Pilgrimage

A jolly group of ten Friends from Baltimore, Washington, Patuxent and Hopewell, left Baltimore on the Norfolk boat, Wednesday, April 23. That evening we learned to laugh together, nor forgot our first lesson throughout the trip, and as the days went by we learned little by little to work together as well.

The objects of the "Pilgrimage" were: to attend the Commencement of Friends' Corinth Academy, at Corinth, Virginia; to visit the site of the old Porter Homestead, where George Fox had stayed; to attend four of the meetings which compose Lower Virginia Quarterly Meeting; but chief of all to get acquainted with the local Friends. These four Meetings are separated by miles of flat, sandy roads, which at this time of year pass for the most part between ploughed fields and woods of tall, dark pines, whose sombre aspect is enlivened by oaks and elms and other deciduous trees, with here and there a blossoming dogwood or gay clusters of pink and white azaleas.

We frequently came upon swamps and were reminded that not far off lay Lake Drummond, surrounded by the mysterious stretches of the Dismal swamp, haunted, we were told by occasional bears and poisonous snakes. Songs of mating birds filled the bright spring air with melody, so that the long rides were a source of delight, and the unwearied hospitality of Virginia Friends made us feel that it was no burden, but a pleasure to them, to convey us from place to place.

On our arrival, we went straight to Corinth Academy, where we attended the varying exercises of its Commencement, which included a masterly presentation of part of Longfellow's "Hiawatha," given at night by the students, out of doors among the pines; a meeting on "Education and the Society of Friends," at which special emphasis was laid upon the practicability of a technical course for boys and a domestic science course for girls to be offered by the Academy next year; a Farmers' Meeting; and the Commencement, at which the four graduates read carefully prepared essays, and L. Oscar Moon gave an inspiring address.

Immediately after the Commencement, seven of the group went to Franklin, where we spent a very enjoyable evening with Dr. and Mrs. White and the Pretlow sisters. Next morning we went by train and carriage to Somerton, where we attended the Monthly Meeting. In the afternoon the Pilgrims, together with local Friends, visited the site of the old Porter Homestead, now a ploughed field, and sitting on the pine-needles in the neighboring woods, recounted the memorable visit of George Fox, when he preached to a thousand of the inhabitants, and retold the hardships which he and others went through that they might carry the message which they felt to be of such vital importance. We then discussed the applicability of this message to the present day, and how best it may be presented.

On Sunday the Pilgrims attended the four local meetings and Bible Schools, to their encouragement and edification, and in the evening met on the boat at Norfolk for the homeward journey, and spent a profitable time recounting their various experiences and discussing the "Pilgrimage" as a whole. All felt that we had had a thoroughly enjoyable and helpful trip in the land of the pine and the cypress. Our interests have been widened and our hearts warmed by the overflowing hospitality and kindness of local Friends, many of whom are now to us not friends in name only but in reality.

"THE PILGRIMS."

Sixtieth Wedding Anniversary

On April 14th, Luke and Elvirah Woodard celebrated their sixtieth marriage anniversary at their home in Fountain City, Indiana. The affair was arranged by their children.

Invitations were given to citizens who were sixty years old and over, including all companions who had not reached that age. More than sixty responded to this invitation.

Mr. and Mrs. Woodard appeared in the Friends' costume of sixty years ago, before the company which was seated as in a Friends' meeting. After a silence of a few moments, they stood up, hand in hand, and repeated the Friends' ceremony by which they were married.

Then followed a few words explaining the preliminary marriage proceedings of that date and the reading of a poem and a prayer by Luke Woodard, after which an informal social time was enjoyed. There were appropriate floral decorations, and refreshments were served.

All seemed to enjoy the occasion, and the guests expressed their congratulations as they took the "newly married" couple by the hand.

A poem which was composed by Luke Woodard was read by him on the occasion.—Richmond Palladium.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON—Genesis 42: 3-17. Commit verses 15, 16.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

MAY 18.

TOPIC—"The Stature of Christ"—Growing up into it. Ephesians 4: 11-16. (Union meeting with the Junior and Intermediate Societies.)

This is a lesson of ideals, of incentives and of growth. The ideal in corn is the best and largest seasoned ear that can be grown. The ideal in fruit is the largest, juiciest apple or pear or cherry or berry that can be produced. The ideal in character is the best and brightest saint we have ever known. Our ideals are generally the best, the highest types, actually produced or imagined.

It is in the nature of man to strive for something not yet attained. Humanity, realizing its own limitations, its own finiteness, looks for ideals outside and beyond its own boundaries.

The divine stature, which is the measure of Christ, is the ideal for all Christendom. The Apostle recognized it, when speaking of the edifying of the Church, which is the body of Christ. Growing into the perfect man, into the stature of Christ is the natural fruition of the exercise of the gifts, the apostolic, the prophetic, the evangelistic, the pastoral and the teaching.

We grow into the ideal by faithfulness, by obedience, by prayer, by trusting, by Christian activity. By "speaking the truth in love," we "may grow up into Him in all things." By testimony, therefore, and by example, we are to grow in the things of the Spirit.

"In growing mentally or spiritually we must have an ideal. Carlyle believed that everyone is at bottom a hero-worshipper. The hoodlum on the street has for his ideal, it may be, a prominent criminal, and he takes delight in imitating his deeds of daring. In the same way the Christian should set up an ideal to follow, and then strive to be like his Master. The Christian Endeavorer's ideal is Christ; as the pledge says, 'Trusting in the Lord Jesus Christ for strength, I promise Him that I will strive to do whatever He would like to have me do.'"—Christian Endeavor World.

Arrange the program so that both the Junior and Intermediate Societies may have some definite part, using lessons of natural growth with which to emphasize the growing in grace and in the knowledge of God.

MORE THAN EVER

Increased Capacity for Mental Labor Since Leaving Off Coffee.

Many former coffee drinkers who have mental work to perform, day after day, have found a better capacity and greater endurance by using Postum instead of coffee. An Ills. woman writes:

"I had drank coffee for about twenty years, and finally had what the doctor called 'coffee heart.' I was nervous and extremely despondent; had little mental or physical strength left, had kidney trouble and constipation.

"The first noticeable benefit derived from the change from coffee to Postum was the natural action of the kidneys and bowels. In two weeks my heart action was greatly improved and my nerves steady.

"Then I became less despondent, and the desire to be active again showed proof of renewed physical and mental strength.

"I am steadily gaining in physical strength and brain power. I formerly did mental work and had to give it up on account of coffee, but since using Postum, I am doing hard mental labor with less fatigue than ever before."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum now comes in new, concentrated form called Instant Postum. It is regular Postum so processed at the factory that only the soluble portions are retained.

A spoonful of Instant Postum with hot water, and sugar and cream to taste, produce instantly a delicious beverage.

Write for the little book, "The Road to Wellville."

He began active Christian service during some meetings held by Harvey and Alice Bergman over thirty years ago, joined Friends at that time, and was soon after recorded a minister. He served several meetings in Indiana and Wilmington Yearly Meetings as pastor, and was very successful in evangelistic work. Three years ago, on account of physical infirmity, he was obliged to give up preaching. He was a man of sterling Christian character and much beloved by those who knew him. At his funeral services held at Wilmington, there were a number of testimonies to the blessing his life and service had been. He left a widow and one son.

She was a birthright member of Friends. When grown to womanhood, having given herself to Christ and his work, she entered the missionary field. Her first work was as teacher in Friends' Mission in Indian Territory. She remained there two years, and later was with Charles and May Replogle in the Friends' Mission at Douglas, Alaska, for three years. Later she entered a school for missionary training at Los Angeles, California, wishing to prepare herself more fully for the Lord's work. While there she married Thomas J. Kelly, a returned missionary from Central America. Since her husband's death, which occurred in less than a year after their marriage, she has been living in her home land, devoting herself to her one son, who survives her.

God's Answer

THE cry of man's anguish went up unto God:
"Lord, take away pain.
The sorrow that darkens the world Thou hast made,
The close coiling chain
That strangles the heart, the burden that weighs
On the wings that would soar;
Lord, take away pain from the world
Thou hast made,
That it love Thee the more.

Then answered the Lord to the cry of His world:
"Shall I take away pain?—
And with it the power of the soul to endure,
Made strong by the strain?
Shall I take away pity that knits heart to heart,
And sacrifice high?
Will ye lose all your heroes that lift from the fire
White brows to the sky?
Shall I take away love that redeems with a price
And smiles at its loss?
Can ye spare from your lives that would climb into mine
The Christ on His cross?"

—Lloyd Austin.

Getting New Subscribers

Since the first of January, when the AMERICAN FRIEND was taken over by the Five Years Meeting, 636 new subscriptions have been entered upon our books. While the management feels thankful for this increase, it is so small in comparison with what evidently ought to be, that we feel the time has come to emphasize the responsibility of Friends generally relative to this periodical. Fifteen new names have been added during the past week.

Evidently there are thousands of families which as yet have felt no obligation whatever toward this product of the Church. Yet there is probably no part of the mechanism of Quakerism in America that is fraught with such wide-spread possibilities of blessing and uplift to the whole denomination as the publication of the AMERICAN FRIEND.

As has been so frequently remarked before, the paper needs the patronage of every Friend's family, to enable it to become the force in our activities which it ought to be. If only one-half of Friends' families were taking the paper, we would be publishing at least 24 pages every week, with the probability of another increase in size in the near future.

In the second place, and this is the more important element in the problem, every Friend's family needs the AMERICAN FRIEND. Now that it is the product of the Church, and the authorized mouth-piece of every department of the Church, conveying weekly both the messages and the news of the Church, we fail to understand how anyone interested at all in the work and welfare of the denomination can afford to do without its weekly visitations. We feel sure that those who are not readers of the paper are even now sustaining a distinct loss, which they can ill afford to have continued.

Much of the best talent in the denomination will be heard in our columns during the year; the Boards will bring important messages that need to reach the entire membership; the news of the church will be set forth attractively and in larger volume week after week; we will endeavor to maintain the spiritual tone of the paper at a high standard that ought to be felt in every home and in every meeting; the needs of younger Friends will be given special attention shortly; while education, Bible schools, missions and evangelistic endeavors will be constant features that cannot fail to interest and profit.

But if the AMERICAN FRIEND occupies the wide field which it has planned to do, and which the Five Years Meeting expects it to do, the responsibility rests heavily upon its friends to see that its circulation is vastly increased at the earliest possible moment. In the last analysis, the paper will have to stand upon its own merits, but until Friends generally have felt the insistence of the obligations that are upon them to become patrons, the responsibilities of others is equally great with the management in building up the circulation.

We urge, therefore, serious and earnest consideration of the following suggestions, to be utilized in our various meetings, in addition to the wide-spread personal canvass which the management is at present arranging for.

1. There are perhaps 100 local meetings which can arrange for every family in the meeting to receive the paper, according to some such plan as the Richmond, Indiana, East Main Street Meeting has already inaugurated, and which has been set forth in our columns.

2. There are probably another 100 meetings where a few Friends could raise from $5.00 to $20.00 to send the paper to families not able to take the paper, and to those who ought to become interested. What pleasure and profit this would bring to hundreds of families throughout all the Yearly Meetings! This method in part is already being used in three Yearly Meetings.

3. More than half of our subscribers might easily afford to pay the subscription of one or more others not able to subscribe, or as a means of getting them interested. Such an investment will bring large dividends in the form of increased interest in our denominational activities.

4. One or two Sabbath schools have instituted a contest among the classes to secure the largest number of new subscribers to the paper. It is a plan which many schools can use with profit to themselves and to the AMERICAN FRIEND.

5. Young People's Societies can do much by taking charge of an active canvass for new subscriptions, and thereby carry out the spirit of the young Friends of the Five Years Meeting, who were such an important factor in inaugurating the movement for the publication of the paper under the present arrangement.

6. Friends can help materially by renewing their subscriptions, and paying for the same promptly.

7. Finally, every one can say a good word for the AMERICAN FRIEND upon every proper occasion, and urge others to become subscribers. If every subscriber now on the list, would only secure an additional subscription and forward to us, the paper would be on the high road to prosperity.

We shall be glad to send samples, and forward any information necessary to carry out the purposes of this appeal.

Let a special effort be made to double our list during the balance of May and throughout June. July 1 is the goal for 4,000 new subscribers since January 1.

Address, THE AMERICAN FRIEND,
Richmond, Indiana.

The man or woman who does work worth doing is the man or woman who lives, breathes, and sleeps that work; with whom it is ever present in his or her soul; whose ambition is to do it well and feel rewarded by the thought of having done it well. That man, that woman, puts the whole country under an obligation.—

A Lesson from an Old Story

"Inquire thou whose son the stripling is."—I. Sam. 17: 56.

The ways of God often seem mysterious to the natural man. The Divine law sometimes appears to be strangely at variance with the commonly accepted human standards. What the average man often regards as the law of contrasts is more often the law of cause and effect. The beatitudes of Jesus, while according with the best psychological deductions, scarce harmonize with the ordinary ideals of the world.

To the unthinking mind the philosophy of human procedure means little. In the daily routine of life, events are accepted as they occur, be they surprising or commonplace, and there is only now and then a man who writes a question mark and dares to ask the reason why. The busy, rushing, work-a-day world rarely takes time to study causes, and when some unusual event arouses curiosity or interest, is easily satisfied with surface conclusions, or failing to probe to the depths what prove to be intricate problems, is easily led astray into a maze of uncertainty, bewilderment and doubt.

To the real philosopher, who dares to probe into the inner consciousness of reason and study the causes which are fundamental to human conduct, the problem of life is not so mysterious. This is the realm of the why and the wherefore. Here is revealed the important fact that every action has a cause, ranging from the manifold natural forces that affect human life to the operations of a Divine law, wherein God is recognized not only as a great first Cause but also as the Father of His children, re-enforcing natural energy and purpose by the power of His spirit, until human instrumentality becomes the Divine agency in the operations of human conduct. It is this knowledge which is needed to throw light upon many of the startling events of history, biblical, mediæval and modern.

Our text concerns such an event. David was an enigma to Saul. None of the usual interpretations could account for such a prodigy. Here was a shepherd boy, a mere lad in the eye of the king, an incidental visitor to the camp of the army, with no suggestion of the training of the warrior, who boldly announces both his ability and willingness to meet the awful challenge of a giant from the opposing camp, from whose presence the hosts of Israel had recoiled in terror. In the presence of the ruler, this youth preached a strange doctrine of efficiency and power so at variance with the ordinary standards, that it is little wonder the curiosity of the king was stirred to the point of commanding his captain to find out what this unnatural spectacle meant.

"Inquire thou whose son the stripling is." What is his lineage; by what authority does he speak with such boldness; what are the causes operating in this young life? Abner was to become philosopher for the moment; he was to search out what was back of such a miracle of assurance, which shortly became a reality in that wonderful triumph down in the valley over him who had so tauntingly challenged the army of the Lord.

To him, however, who is able to see the Divine touch upon human life, and to believe in the impartation of Divine energy to re-enforce the powers of human effort when occasion is needed to give triumph to a righteous cause, the problem is not so puzzling. David had an acquaintanceship with his God. While feeding the flocks, he had learned to commune with his Father, and when the supreme test came he had the equipment to do the utmost that was required of him. Knowledge begets faith, while faith begets confidence and trust, which are the essential elements of power in all human endeavors.

May we not herein find a lesson for the Society of Friends of today? There are yet enemies to be destroyed, which are a challenge to the Church of this generation no less real than was the challenge of the giant Philistine in the days of Saul.

Infidelity, rationalism, materialism, the groser evils that threaten society, the slums of our cities, the manifold sins of the age that block the pathway of Christian progress, all are a challenge to the best endeavors of the Christian Church in the early years of this twentieth century. Where is the stripling that is to answer the challenge and up-hold the standards of our King Immanuel?

We are not so credulous as to suppose that Friends can ever take their place as the major part of the Christian army—the Church universal—that is Christ's representative in the world, commanded now as ever to destroy the sin that is abroad, or, as characterized in the Scriptures, "the works of the devil." Probably if Friends had remained faithful to their early visions and had continued in the spirit of the first evangelists of the Quaker truth, our denomination might easily today be in the vanguard of the hosts of righteousness as a world-power of Christian influence. However that may be, it is practically certain that we have not filled up our measure of usefulness to the full, and are not doing it today.

It is just as certain, we believe, that a far larger field of service awaits us, if as a denomination we only dare to touch the springs of power and equip ourselves for the larger tasks. Our aim should not be to build up Quakerism for its own sake. Such a purpose has enervated many a religious organization in the past. What we need is a vision of things to be done, and a purpose to gird ourselves with power for the effort. The spirit and faith and assurance of the stripling David should become the endowment of our Quaker life, not for purposes of carnal usage, but for the larger and more important task of helping to evangelize the world, and blaze a clean pathway in which the coming millions may walk free from the contamination of the evils which now threaten upon every hand.

The Quaker character is suited to the requirements of an age, such as we now face, wherein simple faith and the guidance of the Spirit are the elements of power so much required. In the spirit of confidence, which marked David's exploit and characterized him as a marvel of history, may we not determine to go forward into a larger denominational life with the assurance that Jehovah will not forsake us, and that His grace will suffice for every need?

A Great Modern Problem—No. 1

There is no problem in our American life that so vitally concerns the present and future welfare of the Republic as the liquor problem. In large degree it is fundamental to every other social and economic question that touches the morals, the happiness and the prosperity of our people. Any subject that concerns the sanctity of the home, the progress of the Church, the purity of the ballot, the status of the social order, the success of trade and commerce or the stability of government is one to be faced with solicitude by all friends of human progress; but when an element exists in the body politic that affects all of these adversely, and casts its blight upon all that is holy and good and beneficent in the life of our people, it is time for an awakening that will mean disaster to such contamination.

Primarily, the Church and the saloon are the antipodes of the social and religious life of the Nation. As light obliterates darkness, as mercy opposes oppression, as holiness hates sin, so must the Church array itself in opposition to this organized evil.

As a problem in social ethics, the futility of reforming the drunkard and preserving others from the drinking habit was long ago seen, so long as the public saloon, whose business it is to make drunkards, was allowed to exist. Therein lay the foundation of the present-day prohibition movements in this country. Every sort of regulation has been attempted. The traffic has been hedged in, until it stands plainly in a class by itself, controlled and restricted as is no other business interest in America today. Yet its blight has continued, until the Church, the home, society, our electorate, legislation and the government have all felt the deadly sting of its touch.

Little wonder then that the conviction has seized the American mind that a business that cannot be controlled and will not be regulated must be destroyed. Little wonder that our national and business and social conscience, no less than our moral and religious conscience, outraged by the excesses of this traffic and driven to desperation by its continued devastations, have begun to crystallize plans for its extinction.

The advocates of this remedy have grown to a multitude within a decade, ready to be led by the Christian church still yet more aggressively for the overthrow of this tyrant of iniquity in our land.

We are not herewith concerned so much with methods of operations, the divisions over which have been the bane of the prohibition movement, but our concern is that the church as a whole and the Society of Friends in particular shall in no degree shrink from the task of saloon destruction to which the American people have apparently set themselves. By the educative methods of total abstinence teachings that will make the Church of the next generation a unit as the uncompromising enemy of the liquor traffic, and by the use of all practical means which can be devised today for driving the saloon farther and farther back from territory which it now controls, having as its objective the speediest possible destruction of the whole system of the beverage liquor traffic, the Church should gird itself with power for the greater battles with the saloon evil which are just ahead.

Friends have an enviable record as a temperance people. At a time when the conflict has grown sharper let us be no less active because the problem is more difficult. It will be no easy task to dethrone the rum power, buttressed as it is by legislation and so many of our political machines, and supported by a vast array of kindred and sympathetic evils. It is not an achievement which can be won by any one body. But Friends can do their full share by standing positively and unitedly upon every occasion, by precept and by example, in public declaration and at the polls, for the annihilation of the liquor traffic. The saloon must go, and Friends must get ready to help make it go.

The Pattern of Christianity

BY ELBERT RUSSELL

Our wonderfully cheap fabrics with their complicated designs have been made possible by the invention, not only of power-driven machinery but of mechanical patterns, by which a design may be automatically woven into the fabric. Without either pattern or power the beautiful and cheap result would be impossible.

These two elements—pattern and power—are as important in religion as in the silk mill; in weaving life as in weaving cloth. The first element in all vital religion is power. It comes through union of the soul with God; through faith, self-renunciation, and consecration, which remove the barriers that selfishness and sensuality interpose to the free working of God in the soul; through love and religious passion, which are man's response to the revelation and call of God. Without these religion must be formal, cold, and dead. Therefore Jesus puts as the first commandment, "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart and with all thy soul and with all thy mind and with all thy strength."

We have been accustomed to interpret Christianity chiefly in terms of power or the means to power, but it is not this which chiefly distinguishes the Christian religion. Christ did open for men sluices of moral and spiritual energy. The boldness, convincing power, the endurance and overflowing enthusiasm of his disciples when they became filled with his Spirit impressed all observers. The triumphant sufferings of his martyrs, the patient zeal of his missionaries, the successful struggle of his followers against social and personal sin are among the wonders of religious history.

Nevertheless, such power is not of itself distinctive of the religion of Christ. The founders of all great religions would agree with him that voluntary obedience (if not love) to God or the gods is the first and great commandment. In abandon of faith, in enthusiasm, in endurance of pain, in utter self-sacrifice, the devotees of many religions may equal the Christian monk, martyr, and missionary. The Hindu holy man, who in the desire to lose himself in Brahma holds his arm outstretched and rigid until the bones grow together at the joints and his finger-nails grow through his palms, has found power in his religion. In self-forgetful ecstasy the Mohammedan dervish equals the "gift of tongues" rapture of the early church. The crusading passion of Mediæval Catholicism never reached the reckless fury with which the Mahdi's fanatical army flung itself to death upon Kitchener's machine guns. Self-immolation in the name of religion could hardly surpass the Hindu widow sharing the funeral pyre of her husband or the Mormon wife sharing her husband with another woman.

The element of power is common to all vital religions. It is their pattern of life that distinguishes them from one another. All urge men to forsake sin and to do the will of God, but they differ when they come to define sin and duty. They differ in the concrete meaning they give to the will of God, in the pattern they set for daily conduct. The uniqueness of Christianity appears in the answer Jesus gives to the questions: "What must we do to be acceptable to God? We must repent of what? Be saved from what? Be converted to what? In terms of daily living and conduct what is God's will?"

For a Christian the pattern of life is determined by the revelation of God's character and purposes in Christ. The circle of life's interests will be drawn from the Divine will as a center. To draw it correctly we must learn from Jesus where among the practical objects of human striving we find God's will: In heaven in the next world, or in the church, or in ourselves, or in our fellowmen? If we locate the purposes of God exclusively or chiefly in the next life, then the interests of this present world will lie outside the Christian circle and will be classed as secular or worldly. The pattern of life will be made up of acts of ascetic self-mortification and exercises preparatory to the world to come. In order to be religious men will neglect themselves and their neighbors, retire into monastic seclusion and devote themselves to pious exercises, getting ready to appear righteous before God in the next life.

If we believe the will of God is chiefly concerned with the order and observances of the church, then we shall attend "services with zeal, repeat liturgies and say prescribed prayers, pay tithes and honor the clergy with diminished regard for the weightier matters of justice, mercy, and faith."

If we locate the purposes of God chiefly in our personal salvation, then religion will consist primarily in the struggles, emotions, and experiences of the prescribed pattern for getting saved. It will end practically in personal and self-centered pardon, peace, bliss.

If we find God's will chiefly in the welfare of humanity as a whole, religious effort aims to help our fellow men: to heal disease, to enlighten the ignorant, uplift, purify, bless and redeem our neighbors.

The decisive question as to the practical character of Christianity is, therefore, where does Jesus designate the center of Divine interest? What is his pattern of life? As we have seen, Jesus asserts that the first commandment is to love God with one's whole being; but, lest Pharisee should take that to mean merely washings and other outward ordinances of the law, or other Jews should construe it to mean justice and mercy to fellow-Jews alone, Jesus gives at once a second commandment, which defines the first in terms of conduct: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." For the purposes of religious expression Jesus identifies the love of God with the service of men. He advises the neglect of forms of worship rather than loss of brotherhood (Matt. 5: 23, 24), and commends the alien and heretic who proved neighbor above the hereditary and orthodox priest and Levite who neglected the ministry of human love (Luke 10: 25-37).

A brief study of the recorded sayings of Jesus shows how far these are from isolated expressions; how completely he identifies the will of God with the welfare of men. His summary of the righteousness of the kingdom of God in the sermon on the mount is the Golden Rule (Matt. 7: 12). In his model prayer he teaches his disciples to pray for forgiveness as they forgive one another (Matt. 6: 11, 14, 15). In the parable of the King's Judgment he makes men's treatment of one another the test of their service to him (Matt. 25: 40, 45). At the last supper Jesus made love toward men the test by which discipleship might be known to men (John 13: 34).

If we consult Jesus' earliest interpreters we find the same emphasis. Paul says that love is the first fruit of the Spirit (Gal. 5: 22); the greatest and most enduring among spiritual gifts (1 Cor. 13). He asserts that in Christ nothing outward has value, apart from faith working through love (Gal. 5: 6). John asserts that love is the proof that one has been born of the Spirit (1 John 3: 14; 4: 7); and that one cannot love God, if he do not love men in a very practical way (1 John 3: 17; 4: 20). According to Christ and the apostles, then, to be converted is to be changed from a selfish to an altruistic spirit; to love and serve God is fundamentally to love and serve men. It is toward this end that the power of Christian faith is to be devoted. It is the social and moral power it has conferred upon men that distinguishes Christianity from other forms of religion.

Our generation has, through the historical study of the New Testament, newly discovered Jesus and his pattern of life. We find it necessary sometimes to revise our inherited beliefs, our religious practices and our social order to make it conform to his pattern. In doing so we may keep all that is consistent with human good, that may be practiced from purely altruistic motives. In the past our presentation of the gospel has often made too much of sins that harm the individual, and too little of those that hurt others. The chief appeal to men has been to forsake sin because of the harm that it does to them, here and hereafter. We have exhorted men not to steal because it would ostracise them from society and get them into jail. We have warned the young man against adultery because of the guilt that would haunt his soul and the disease that would infest his body. We have exhorted men to be truthful because lies would destroy their business credit and their neighbor's trust in them. But from Christ's point of view the most terrible thing about sin is that it hurts somebody else. One cannot steal without impoverishing a neighbor. Adultery is a terrible sin against womanhood, against the peace of the family and the purity of the home. Lying is serious because it deceives somebody; because it cheats somebody, slanders somebody; separates friends or thwarts justice.

From Jesus' point of view we should value religious experiences, not as ends in themselves, not as selfish privileges, not for the joy and peace they bring us alone, but because by them the spirit of brotherhood has come to us and the power to help others. And a religious experience that is self-centered and leaves one careless of other's rights and feelings, hot-tempered when crossed, and hard in dealings and judgment, is hardly to be called a Christian experience. According to Jesus' pattern a creed may be useful as a means of teaching others to find the way to God as a guide-book or text-book in the things of God, but never a prison house for the mind or a fetter for the conscience. A church is Christian as long as it serves, not for the selfish pleasure and advancement of the members, but as an effective organization for administering to the needs of men the grace of God and the love of Christ. Worship is Christian when it strengthens the worshipers for that love of men which is Jesus' test of discipleship. It becomes unchristian when it becomes merely passive, when men seek it for the luxury of ecstatic emotions, or intellectual enjoyment, or social exclusiveness.

No man is right by Christ's standard of righteousness if he has merely sought Christ to save his soul and to keep his experience. No man can be saved alone. God offers us salvation as parts of humanity. It may help us to realize that we are included in the world which God seeks to save and which Christ died to save, to repeat (as we are sometimes exhorted to do) Isaiah 53: 5 or John 3: 16, using the singular personal pronoun: "He was wounded for my transgressions, * * * and with his stripes I am healed." "For God so loved me, that he gave his only begotten Son, that I believing on him should not perish but have eternal life." But as a matter of fact, the great promises of Christ are for the world and we have our part in them only as we take our place in the world that is the object of the Divine redemption; and we enter the kingdom of God by learning to say in the complete spirit of brotherhood, "Our Father."

Pictures for Tuskegee Institute

We have received the following letter from Booker T. Washington, which is self-explanatory. Anyone having pictures to donate such as he indicates can communicate directly with him.

DEAR SIR: It occurs to me that some of your readers might have either new or old pictures, framed or unframed, which they might donate to this institution. We can make good pictures serve as a medium of educating our students, and I very much hope that some of your readers will help us in this matter. If the pictures are unframed, they can be framed in our own shop. Pictures can be sent by express or mailed to the following address.

Yours very truly,

"Our business as Christians is to serve the Lord in every business of life."—Mark Guy Pearse.

The Development of the Country Church

BY RAY GLENNEY

It is evident that the country church is not the effective agency in the community that it might be and ought to be. It has not kept pace with the general development. The appeal of the city has been so strong and has offered so many advantages over country life, that it has been and is the ambition of young men and women to seek their fortune in the city. This migration has weakened the country, and made it in the minds of most people an undesirable place in which to live and make a success in life.

The disadvantages of the country are found in low community ideals; a poor public school system; poor methods of farming; low standards of home life and lack of community spirit.

The solution of this problem must be worked out by some agency which is in sympathy with every phase of rural life. We can find no institution that is capable of dealing with it justly except the church. In the past the church has been an institution very much like the school, doing a certain line of work and keeping within set bounds. The country problem demands assistance which seeks not for material remuneration, but gives of its best life blood to secure the greatest good to the greatest number. We must fall back on the church as an institution capable of establishing a new community ideal, and directing the development of the community toward this ideal under the guidance of the religious nature.

The greatest difficulty will be to break down certain customs of rural life and conquer traditional ideas and conservative minds. To suggest anything new for country people, without educating and preparing them to receive new ideas, would mean the death of progress. This new rural medicine must be given in terms of established rural customs, and thus bring about new conceptions without appearing to break with the previous ones. This education must be given to the different classes of people in different ways. The schools cannot do this, social organizations are not interested and the grange only to a certain extent. It remains then for the church to assume the burden of educating our rural people to assist in the solution of their own problems.

About the only possibility for the church is to secure a pastor fully in sympathy with the rural problem, who from the pulpit will deal with religion in such an appealing manner, as to gradually lead his people to an appreciation of country life, and the adaptation of religion to it. He ought to be a student of every phase of farm life, reading much, observing much, getting in touch with farmers, and discussing with them, not religion alone, but farm life. He should not assume superior knowledge of farming but talk in a suggestive way, asking an abundance of questions and discussing solutions freely. In this way the country pastor will make himself a welcome caller, and in due time the community will be thinking about personal affairs.

This will lead inevitably to the consideration of community problems.

The pastor's interest should include every member of the community, old and young alike. He needs a perfected organization back of him. This is the keynote to an ideal rural life. If the church is going to be the leader in community ideals she must set the example. It must grow upon a firm foundation before the community can grow. Hence the need of a perfected organization which uses the best business methods and commands strict adherence to systematic action. This task of organization is not to be accomplished easily nor immediately, but the progress can go on until a new state of affairs exists in the church and community.

Following this educational process, a few social gatherings may be called with the thought in mind of developing a community spirit. This is necessary for the accomplishing of anything new in the country. At the first of these gatherings, programs can be arranged, instigative of ideas for informal discussions and amusements of a rural type. By this means they will do collective thinking, and common interests will spring up. Conditions will soon be favorable to having programs at the social occasions. These may be of an entertaining nature at first, but a little of agriculture, home life on the farm may, along with other subjects of interest to a rural people, be introduced as soon as admissible. Before people know what is happening they will be doing effective thinking on the community problem. Then comes the possibility of securing the necessary organizations in the community to build toward the ideal community life, because the required interest has been aroused under the direction of the proper motive.

A meeting of the farmers who are interested in better farming might be called, where there could be a free discussion of the relation of good farming to an ideal community life. At the proper time the relation of the farmers to the church should be discussed in order to link the church to as much of progress in the community as possible.

Perhaps the most important feature of this problem is that of home life, which deserves the greatest consideration in the task of keeping the young people on the farm. Farm homes are largely responsible for the great number of boys and girls going to the city. It might be possible to deal with this problem by means of a parents' club, which would be the forum of discussion on home life. Subjects which demand proper consideration are, sanitation, farm houses, literature, amusements, the training and rearing of children, etc. Being under the supervision of the pastor and the church, all these interests will be treated in their relation to Christian living.

In order to keep the community on a high plane intellectually and keep it in touch with the outside world, a literary club is necessary. The influence of such a club will keep the rural ideas from becoming narrow and conservative, and will, doubtless, have an important influence on the kind and standard of literature used in the community. What people read determines where their interests are very largely, and if the right kind of reading is promoted in the rural community the rural problem will be partly solved.

Ultimately the conditions may be favorable to extending rural ideas to the country school. If the teachers are in sympathy with the movement, they will welcome any suggestions as to courses in the study of rural life. Agriculture ought to have a place in the school. Various elementary studies in regard to the farm and home will be of value to the children in giving them a love for the country.

When the non-church people of the community see how practical religion can be made and how far reaching it is, there will be a changed attitude toward the church. There will be a tendency perhaps for the prime motive of the church to be covered over in the face of these many new duties, but it ought to be able to use every possible means to make the interests of the church predominate in the community.

Foreign Missionary Activities

BY CHARLES E. TEBBETTS

Report of Meeting of Executive Committee of the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions

WORK IN CUBA

Missionary work in Cuba has been going steadily forward. The main difficulty has been to keep well qualified teachers in charge of the schools. Each of the missionaries has been required to give much time to teaching, somewhat at the expense of the general work.

Miss Bertha Lawrence retires from the work this year because of the lack of physical strength.

Joseph M. Purdy and wife are to strengthen the teaching force next year. He is a son of Samuel M. Purdy, our first missionary to Mexico.

Miss Carrie E. Haviland, a member of Baltimore Yearly Meeting, will also be added to the teaching force. For some time she has been teaching in a private school in Havana.

The problem of higher educational work is a very pressing one. No opportunity is at present given in our territory for any child to go beyond the sixth grade. All must recognize how very insufficient this is, and the importance of providing for higher work. The Baptists have a fine school at Cristo, in a very healthy location on the highlands on the railroad to Santiago. A proposition has been made for us to join with them in the higher educational work. This is being carefully considered by the Cuba Field Committee and Board.

THE AFRICAN MISSION

Reports from Africa show worthy progress. In the evangelistic department in Kaimosa district there are Sunday services held at four points with an average attendance of 1,300. In Marigoli district services are held at nine points, and fourteen applicants for membership in the mission church. At Lirhandia station the average attendance at the Sunday services is 400 and there is out-station work besides.

In educational work there is said to be manifest improvement in attention of pupils and character of work.

Marigoli reports 522 enrolled in the three schools of that district. There is need of a larger supply of school supplies.

The industrial departments are making increased progress. The building of the new sawmill and sheds for curing lumber, and work on the mission homes at Lirhandia and Marigoli is advancing rapidly. The material for the hospital is getting in shape. Large quantities of brick are being prepared for these buildings. The agricultural work is being pushed with fresh vigor since the arrival of the Conovers.

The new workers are reported as being well adapted for their work, and are taking hold very effectively. The outlook for the entire field is very bright. They are not without some discouragements. There are occasional lapses of natives, disappointing their fond hopes. But on the other hand the larger number of those under their immediate care give strong evidence of faithfulness under the severe temptations of their heathen surroundings. The health of some of the mission force is not as rugged as we wish it were. They are laboring under great strain, and greatly need our sympathy and prayers.

JAMAICA MISSION

The work at all the stations in Jamaica is steadily progressing, notwithstanding some breaks in the staff of workers. Mrs. Alma Swift has been on furlough for several months, and has used the time in securing $3,000.00 for dormitory accommodations in connection with the Boys' School. She has now returned to the Field. Miss Mary White was obliged to come home for rest, on account of her health breaking. Miss Eva H. Allen has been sent to take her place in the East India work at Fellowship. Jefferson Ford and wife have resigned, to leave Jamaica at the end of the year to take work in Africa. Miss Alice Kennedy is on furlough this year.

The reports indicate that the different branches of the work are prospering. The educational work has the fullest endorsement of the Jamaican government. They have especially approved of the work for the East Indian coolies, and have placed many of the orphan children, for whom the government acts as guardian, in the Happy Grove Training Home. Miss Alsina Andrews has had unusual success in the careful training of these girls, and of the colored girls under her care. The bright young East Indian men who have been trained as catechists are effective workers among their own people. So successful has this East Indian mission been, that the owners of plantations, who have many of them in their service, have generously offered lots and built suitable chapel buildings for the use of Friends.

CANDIDATES

Joseph M. Purdy and wife, and Miss Carrie E. Haviland have been accepted for work in Cuba next year. The first two have worked under our Board before. Lloyd Mendenhall and Bertha Louise Hammond have been accepted for the Mexican Mission next year. Both are graduates of Penn College, and Lloyd Mendenhall is this year at Haverford as the scholarship student from Penn. He is fitting himself for Industrial mission work and is expected to have charge of that department at Victoria. Miss Pearl Johnson, of Sterling, Kansas, has been accepted for teaching in mission schools whenever there may be a suitable opening. She is now a teacher in the public schools of Kansas. Errol D. Peckham and wife, who are now at the Hartford Seminary, will be ready soon for work in China if way can be provided for them. Our Board has no China mission. Dr. James F. Cooper, of Falmouth, Mass., desires to go out as a medical missionary under some Board, preferably Friends, but we have no medical missions except in Africa, and they are provided for. Other candidates are offering themselves whenever they can be used.

Philadelphia Yearly Meeting

What was regarded by many as one of the best and most interesting sessions of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting in recent years, was the one which was held April 21-25 of this year. It was the two hundred and thirty-second annual gathering of the body, which emphasizes the fact that Quakerism as a religious force is co-extensive with that which is most valuable in the life of the American people.

The attendance was up to the usual standard, and the number of Friends participating in the active deliberations of the various sessions was encouraging. To many elsewhere, the wide scope of subjects considered by Philadelphia Friends may be somewhat surprising. When to the number of subjects embracing the practical affairs of the church which come under review at Fourth and Arch Streets in the Yearly Meeting proper, are added the questions touching the more modern activities in which all evangelical Churches are interested, and which are considered in afternoon and evening meetings at the Twelfth Street meeting house, one is impressed with the broad outlook of this somewhat conservative body.

An unusually large number of visiting Friends were present from other Yearly Meetings, among whom were Gurney and Elizabeth Binford of Japan, and members of Kansas Yearly Meeting; Benjamin P. Brown of North Carolina; Thomas E. Mott and wife of Iowa; and Amassa Jenkins and wife of Indiana.

The Representative Meeting, which occupies very much the place of an Executive Committee or Permanent Board, and acts for the Yearly Meeting when it is not in session, and which until recently was known as the Meeting for Sufferings, convened in a preliminary meeting on April 18. Its report of the year's work, brought before the Yearly Meeting on Second-day, covered a variety of questions including, a formal protest against appropriating $100,000.00 for the encouragement of rifle practice in the schools and colleges of the country; a report that the Committee having in charge the care of the Doukhobors find that their labors are practically ended, as the Canadian government now offers practically all the advantages needed by these faithful people; a protest to the governor and authorities of Maryland against gambling and a race track at Havre de Grace in that state; the proposition of the book committee to have portions of the Journal of John Woolman translated into the Japanese language for circulation in that country; the publication by the same committee of various books and pamphlets; the introduction into the Pennsylvania legislature of a bill substituting life imprisonment for capital punishment at the option of the jury; the preparation and circulation of a paper among the newspapers of the country, pleading for higher ideals and a loftier standard of morals in the press, and expressing sympathy with the efforts for civic honesty, which paper was reproduced in full in the Literary Digest; the preparation of a letter to President Wilson, which was conveyed to him in person by three Friends, expressing the desire of Friends to uphold the president and his cabinet in his righteous purposes for the nation; and a call upon Secretary of State Bryan by the same deputation in the interest of a cessation of armaments.

The meeting of ministers and elders, held at 10 o'clock on the 19th, proved to be a season of deep interest, in which the spiritual needs of the membership and subordinate meetings were the burden of many hearts. Friends were reminded that the simplicity of their mode of worship should most commend it. Some concern was expressed over the fact that in some meetings vocal ministry is only occasionally exercised, and members were exhorted to have a care for these as far as possible. Much sympathy was expressed for the younger members of the Yearly Meeting, and that older Friends should be careful to encourage rather than hinder development.

On Sabbath afternoon of the 20th, a special meeting of the Foreign Missionary Association met at Twelfth Street, presided over by Asa S. Wing. Addresses were given by Elizabeth C. Wistar of Bombay, India; Wilbert W. White, who in past years has been in China, Korea and Japan; and Gurney and Elizabeth Binford of Japan. It was declared that progress in the Orient is due to the open Bible, and all were exhorted to stand by the missionaries with their prayers and with funds.

The reading and consideration of the queries occupied the greater part of two days, as usual, more attention being given to this procedure, as in London and Dublin Yearly Meetings, than in the remaining American bodies. The reading brought out considerable solicitude for certain tendencies among Friends, as well as many expressions of satisfaction at the faithfulness manifested by so many members. The religious exercise which this year, as in former years, overspread the sessions, bringing all to a realization of their dependance upon God, and the importance of maintaining a proper testimony before the world, stamps this as one of the features of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting.

Considerable interest was manifested in friendly greetings which came from London Yearly Meeting and from Friends in Australia. Contrary to the usual custom, these messages were read and after a full expression of appreciation had been given, suitable replies were directed to be prepared and sent, the one to Australia voicing the sympathy of the meeting with the trials of Friends in that far away land, in attempting to avoid the Australian universal requirement for military service.

A concern was brought before the meeting relating to the care of those, who while not members of Friends, are closely associated with their various interests and activities. After full deliberation a joint committee was named to consider the question and report next year. A memorial to the late John H. Dillingham was given much prayerful and thoughtful consideration.

The reports showed a total membership in the Yearly Meeting of 4,388, which is a slight reduction from the total of last year. Children of school age number 701, and 227 of these attend monthly or preparative meeting schools, 143 attend the school at Westtown, 39 attend other schools under the care of Friends, while 27 attend colleges under Friends' management, 108 attend public schools and 67 other institutions. There are thirteen primary schools and four high schools under the care of Friends in the Yearly Meeting.

Considerable attention was given to Westtown school, which is in a prosperous condition. A large percentage of the graduates enter college. A new department of forestry and orchards involving an outlay of about $15,000 is being considered. A new lake of fourteen acres has been added to the school grounds. The physical equipment is well cared for.

The afternoon and evening meetings at Twelfth Street were up to the usual standard of lively interest. On Second-day afternoon was held the annual meeting of the Peace Association of Friends, during which the chairman, Stanley R. Yarnell, paid high tribute to Congressman A. Mitchell Palmer, who is a Hicksite Friend, and who while close to President Wilson, refused to accept the position of Secretary of War because of his peace principles as a Quaker. The evening session was in charge of the Freedman's Association, at which President Isaac Sharpless presided, with addresses by Chancellor Elmer E. Brown of New York University, and Edgar A. Long, principal of a school supported by Friends at Christiansburg, Virginia.

On Third-day evening, the annual meeting on temperance was held, addressed by Charles L. Huston of Coatesville, Pennsylvania, and Albert T. Bell, manager of the Chalfonte Hotel at Atlantic City, the latter emphasizing the fact that hotels do not require bars in order to conduct a successful business.

A meeting of the Young Women's Auxiliary of the Friends Missionary Association was held on Fourth-day afternoon, and in the evening Friends' First-day School Association held their annual gathering, with several addresses. On Fifth-day evening, Robert G. Valentine, former Commissioner of Indian Affairs, gave an interesting and profitable address at a meeting of the Indian Aid Association, followed by General Pratt, formerly of the Carlisle Indian School.

The Yearly Meeting closed under a conscious sense of the presence and blessing of God, and with much prayer and exhortation on the part of many.

The Panama Canal Toll Question

The question of the exemption of tolls upon American coastwise traffic, passing through the Panama Canal, is one of live interest still to all lovers of international peace. Ex-Vice-President Fairbanks delivered an address at the recent national peace congress at St. Louis in which he discussed this problem vigorously, taking the position that the action of the last Congress was plainly a violation of the provisions of the treaty between this country and Great Britain. Regarding our general obligations as a world power, he said:

If America is to attain a high destiny she must always faithfully preserve her solemnly plighted word. If our country is to have weight in the world's affairs, we must keep our treaties in letter and spirit—not occasionally, but always—not when it suits us, but when it does not suit us also.

After discussing the provisions of the old Clayton-Bulwer treaty, and the new convention which resulted in the ratification of the Hay-Pauncefote treaty, with reference to the latter, he said:

If it had been in the minds of Secretary Hay and Lord Pauncefote that so radical a departure should be made from the equality provisions of the Clayton-Bulwer treaty as the exemption of tolls upon American coastwise traffic, they would have employed some other language to express it; they would never have followed so closely the phraseology of the old treaty. * * * When he wrote that the canal should be free and open to the vessels of commerce and of war of all nations, and that there should be no discrimination against any nation or its citizens or subjects in respect to the conditions and charges of traffic or otherwise, he meant precisely what he said. * * * I do not believe that we should put Great Britain to the trouble of resorting to an arbitral tribunal to determine a question which has no basis either in fact or in good conscience. The question is one which from every consideration of national good faith and national honor should be settled by ourselves, and if we rightly understand it, there need be no doubt that it will be settled in entire harmony with our manifest national duty. In the event, however, that we are unable to accept the view that we are not entitled to preferential treatment, then we owe it to ourselves and to Great Britain, and other nations to submit the question to the determination of an impartial tribunal. This course is laid upon us by the highest considerations of justice and fair dealing toward other powers. The American people will keep faith; they will not for the first time break their international word, and thereby forfeit the high respect in which they are held by the nations of the world.

Summer School of Missions, Winona Lake, Indiana, June 19 to June 27, 1913

The hundreds of women of our churches who are working so earnestly for the cause of Missions will be glad to know of an opportunity to obtain help in solving some of their many problems. The Summer School of Missions, held annually at Winona Lake, Indiana, under the auspices of the Interdenominational Committee of the Central West for Missions, offers a fine opportunity for special preparation for service.

Immigration will be the central thought in the study for Home Missions. The book to be studied is "The New America," by Mrs. L. C. Barnes. Mrs. D. B. Wells, so well known as a lecturer on missionary subjects, will give lectures on the book. Mrs. Henry A. Hunter, who has done such fine service in preparation for "The World in Chicago," will give the lectures on the Foreign Mission book, "The King's Business," treating of increased efficiency at Home, written by Mrs. Paul W. Raymond.

There will also be classes for those desiring to take up the Young Women's work, the Hours with Missionaries, and many helpful Conferences. The evening services will be of special interest. Among those who will give lectures on special subjects are Dr. Edward A. Steiner, well known as an authority on the Immigrant, Dr. George B. Stafford on the problems of our great Cities, and President William King of Monmouth College, who will tell of actual conditions on Mission Fields.

It is hoped there will be a large attendance of our women at this helpful gathering.

A Federal Council Publication

"Christian Unity at Work," edited by Charles S. McFarland, Secretary, and published by the Federal Council of Churches, is just off the press. The book contains the report of the various commissions, on a variety of subjects, made to the last meeting of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America at Chicago last December. In addition, the address of the retiring president, Bishop R. Hendrix, and the address of the new president, Prof. Shailer Mathews, together with other addresses are given.

It may be doubted whether such a mass of valuable material throwing light upon almost every phase of Church activity has ever before been published in a single volume. The book sells for $1.00, is bound in red cloth, eight vo., and contains 291 pages. It ought to be in the hands of every pastor and church worker who believes in the co-operation of the Christian Churches in their efforts to better humanity and evangelize the world.

Accompanying this book is a separate volume bound in paper, containing the business proceedings of the Federal Council convention. This book is given free to all purchasers of "Christian Unity at Work."

Orders can be made through the AMERICAN FRIEND, or the books can probably be had from various bookstores handling Friends publications.

A Notable Cartoon

On April 3 the New York Evening Journal published an unusual cartoon in connection with a short but forceful editorial. It represents a huge whiskey bottle, with the word "Whiskey" printed on the label, as the headstone of a grave with a small glass as the foot-piece. The editorial is as follows:

"Do you know any young man who is investing money in a tombstone like this? If so, hand him this picture.

"Here is a tombstone that stands at the head of tens of thousands of graves. You cannot see it as you enter the graveyard, but the relations of the man in the grave know that the tombstone is there.

"This is the tombstone that costs more money than all other kinds of tombstones put together.

"This is the tombstone that stands above ruined hopes, broken families, disappointments, bitterness and all misery.

"If you want to do something useful, without too much trouble, cut out this picture and paste it up where it will be seen by those that need it.

"The huge bottle and the small glass, the weak will, the blasted career—and then the grave with the tombstone—that is the story."

The Maryland Anti-Saloon League reproduced this cartoon and editorial as a first-page advertisement in the Baltimore Sun of April 11, and it is being copied by newspapers in other states.

A Tribute to Friends

In connection with the National Peace Congress held at St. Louis, May 1-3, it is important to note that in the appointment of delegates by Governors, Mayors of cities, and various civic organizations, Friends have been given an unusually liberal share of recognition. As we have by no means a complete list of these appointees, we do not undertake to publish any of the list. So far as we have heard, however, in states or cities where Friends reside, from one to three or four members of our denomination have been named in the official list of delegates. These appointees are greatly out of proportion to our membership as compared with other denominations. It is a fitting recognition of the loyalty which Friends have ever shown toward the peace problem. We understand that quite a number of Friends from different states were able to attend the Congress.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

Baltimore Yearly Meeting

Washington City Monthly Meeting at its session on May 1, directed a resolution sent to Secretary of State, William J. Bryan, commending his attitude on the peace and temperance questions.

California Yearly Meeting

The forty-eighth semi-annual meeting of the College Park Association of Friends was held at the meeting house at San Jose on May 3. The meeting for worship at 10:30 A. M. was followed by a short business session, after which luncheon was served at the meeting house. Business was resumed at 1:30 o'clock, and the following program was rendered:

Discussion.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

A conference of the Sunday Schools of Fairmount Quarterly Meeting was held Tuesday, April 29. The day sessions were held at Fairmount, while the evening meeting convened at the Jonesboro Friends' Church. Mrs. Hiram Harvey was the presiding officer, and Miss Leora Bogue had charge of the music. Various topics were discussed by capable speakers, and a very profitable and instructive convention was enjoyed throughout.

Van Wert Quarterly Meeting was held at Rockford, Ohio, May 2 and 3. Robert W. Douglass, of Versailles, Ohio; Fred Tormohlen, of Portland, Indiana; and Ira C. Johnson, of Lynn, Indiana, Yearly Meeting Superintendent, were present. The meeting was fairly well attended, and all enjoyed the gospel messages brought by the visiting Friends. Tennyson Lewis, who could not be present on account of poor health, was greatly missed, this being the first time he has been absent from the Quarterly Meeting in the seven years he has been pastor at Van Wert.

Iowa Yearly Meeting

Wallace Gill, of Los Angeles, California, has just accepted a call to the pastorate at Marshalltown, Iowa, which has been supplied for some weeks by W. Irving Kelsey, of Penn College. The meeting at Marshalltown is in good unity. Friends have recently papered and painted the interior of the meeting house, and will soon paint the exterior.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

Kansas Yearly Meeting will be held at Wichita this year beginning October 8, instead of at Lawrence, as announced recently in the AMERICAN FRIEND. The Meeting on Ministry and Oversight will convene on the day before.

New England Yearly Meeting

The fifth annual meeting of the Friends of the Connecticut Valley was held at the home of Hannah H. and Ellen A. Winslow, at 100 Monmouth Street, Springfield, Massachusetts, on April 27, 1913. East Northfield, Northampton, Hartford, and Mt. Holyoke College were all represented, as well as the more immediate vicinity. Those present came from seven different yearly meetings and one was a descendant in a direct line on two sides from Lawrence and Cassandra Southwick. A number took part in prayer or testimony, but the greater part of the vocal service was taken by Elihu Grant, of Northampton. It was a time of refreshing from the felt presence of the Lord, and of close Christian fellowship of those with kindred interests.

Ohio Yearly Meeting

Alum Creek Quarterly Meeting was held at Alum Creek, April 26-27, and was a time of good instruction. On Saturday morning and at night, and on Sabbath the house was crowded. William Kirby, pastor at Highland Avenue Meeting at Columbus, brought us a wonderful message, "Teaching us the way of life more perfectly." Many testified that their understanding had been helped. On Saturday night, Aaron S. Watkins analyzed the temperance problem in a masterly way, and again on Sabbath morning he brought us a delightful message from the text, "I was not disobedient to the Heavenly vision." He also discussed for an hour in the afternoon the topic, "What the Sabbath-school needs." These were all characterized by a spirit of earnest soul conviction. The services Sabbath evening were evangelistic in their nature. Many hearts were cheered by the many good services.

Western Yearly Meeting

Since the first of September, 1912, twenty-five persons have been received into active membership in the First Friends Church at Indianapolis.

The Glee and Madrigal Clubs, of Earlham College, came to Indianapolis on Saturday, April 26, under the auspices of the Sabbath-school of the First Friends' Church, and delighted a large audience with an exceedingly entertaining program.

Endorses the American Friend

The Ministerial Conference of Western Yearly Meeting, in session at Kokomo, Indiana, last week, adopted the following resolution:

Whereas, THE AMERICAN FRIEND is the official organ of the Friends Church,

Therefore, Be it resolved that the conference of ministers and workers of Western Yearly Meeting endorse it, and request each Quarterly Meeting to make an earnest effort to get the paper into every Friend's home.

We direct our secretary to furnish each Quarterly Meeting with a copy of this resolution.

Nebraska Yearly Meeting

Nebraska Yearly Meeting convenes at Central City, Nebraska, June 4, 1913. The entertainment committee has made ample arrangements for entertaining all who may attend. Meals will be furnished at the parsonage on the cafeteria plan.

Rooms may be rented at reasonable rates by those desiring lodging near the church. Let all Friends who expect to be present send their names as soon as possible to either J. J. Workman or James Stephen, Central City, Nebraska.

Friends Educational Association

The annual meeting of the Friends' Educational Association of Philadelphia, will be held at the Friends' Select School, 140 North Sixteenth Street, Philadelphia, at 3:00 P. M. and 7:00 P. M. Seventh day, Fifth month 17th. Program, "The Yearly Meeting and its Teachers." Speakers: President Isaac Sharpless, Sarah W. El-kinton, Charles Evans, and others. The importance of a Teachers' Retirement Fund will be discussed. In the evening: "The Psychology of Ideals," by Dr. Arthur Holmes, Dean of Pennsylvania State College.

Western Yearly Meeting Ministerial Conference

The Ministerial Conference of Western Yearly Meeting met at Union Street Friends Church, Kokomo, Indiana, May 6 and 7, 1913. The opening session was at 2 o'clock on Tuesday. Devotional exercises were conducted by Jehu Reagan.

At 2:15 o'clock, a symposium on "How to Produce Experts," was conducted as follows:

The Preacher—Frank V. Stafford.

The Missionary—Jane D. H. Moore.

In the Bible School—James E. Carter.

In Social Service—Morton C. Pearson.

Speeches were limited to ten minutes.

The general discussion was led by Edward M. Woodard. Frank V. Stafford being absent, George H. Moore spoke on his subject. To become expert, preachers must have a good start—not started in a hot bed or refrigerator, but where altar fires burn warm. Jane D. H. Moore dwelt on the great harvest in mission fields, doors being open as never before, and the effort to produce a self-supporting church on foreign fields, all of which require men and women of ability. James Carter said that efficiency is the demand of the age. Bible school teachers and officers must work harmoniously. How to teach will continue to be a problem.

Morton C. Pearson's address on Social Service was full of inspiration. During the first hundred years of Friends, much social work was done. We need a new birth of this work and an old fashioned concern to help people to find God. To become experts on this line we must study men, books and the field; study with a book in one hand, and with the other hand upon the man. Josiah Strong's books were recommended, together with others. The speaker emphasized the fact that the new birth is essential.

As Edward M. Woodard was not present, Jehu Reagan opened the discussion, which was as full of interest as the speeches had been.

Tuesday evening devotional exercises were conducted by Austin Osborn. The subject was "The Social Task of Christianity." Willard O. Trueblood was the speaker and surely was at his best. He was greeted by a large congregation. This session was full of interest. The speaker took Col. 1: 28 for his subject or text. When the Church says there is nothing beyond, it may as well close its doors. To present "every man perfect" in Christ Jesus is Christian equality. Do we believe in the power of Christ? When he came into the country of the Gadarenes he met the mad man and soon the throng looked upon him clothed and in his right mind, ready to be sent home to tell his friends. He also changed Peter into a man of strength and power, while the vile woman of Samaria is another example of Christ's power to transform human life. The same power transformed Jerry McCaulley, and has been tried with success in Africa. Christianity is equal. Men were on God's heart before they were upon ours. We are co-workers with Christ. Every man comes in the same way, "God be merciful to me a sinner."

The problems in the Orient today present great opportunities. Will we meet this with a fire that will burn out ignorance and superstition? Our task is to present China "perfect before Christ." This task is greater than building air ships, or any of the great achievements of the day. Young man, do you ask what you will get in return for such labor? You will get hardship, sacrifice, but in the end you will get peace and "men made perfect."

The Wednesday morning's session was opened with a service of prayer and praise, conducted by Addison Parr. This was a time of great blessing. The subject of this hour was "The State of the Church—Past, Present and Future," and was presented by Enos Harvey, Thomas Brown not being present. If time and space would permit, we would like to tell the many good things said by this speaker. Discussion was led by George H. Moore, and was full of interest and hope for the future.

This being the last business session, a vote of thanks and hearty appreciation was extended to Kokomo Friends for their kind hospitality.

David Hadley spoke in the interest of THE AMERICAN FRIEND. Resolutions were passed by the Conference that will be sent to the paper for publication.

The Conference met at 1:30 o'clock in a meeting for worship. There was silence, followed by Scripture reading and prayer by Sarah J. King. The sermon was delivered by David Hadley. We think it safe to say that in all of his ministry, he never preached with greater unction and power. By this time the spiritual tide was high, and our hearts were overflowing. A praise service followed, ending with a song, "Blest be the Tie." Benediction by Sarah J. King. Mrs. Floyd Stout led the song service, with Mrs. Harland Hollowell at the piano.

The Conference was favored with the presence of Meritt Stipp, who assisted in the music in solo work and otherwise. We only wish that the Conference blessing could go with this article so that every reader could have his heart warmed by it. On every hand expression could be heard that this was the best conference the Association ever held. Everything went to show that both pastor and people of Union Street Friends Meeting had done all in their power to make it a success.

At Mount Airy, North Carolina

It was most delightful to us when a three-seated hack drove to our door, taking passengers to Surry Quarterly Meeting, which was held on April 26, at Westfield, ten miles east of Mount Airy. The morning was beautiful, and the ride one of pleasure, over roads greatly improved in recent years. The opening spring clothed the woodland in beauty. Truly one was made to feel that "dame nature is a good housekeeper." The society was charming. The meeting place is historic, being the oldest Friends' Meeting in Western North Carolina. The spot is beautiful for situation. The nicely kept graveyard is in full view, where the fathers and mothers are sleeping, but where now their children uphold the banner of Quakerism.

The meeting of ministry and oversight began at ten o'clock, followed by the Quarterly Meeting proper. There was a glad greeting of Friends from all the subordinate meetings. Four ministers were present from Mount Airy. James Jones from Blue Ridge Mission in Virginia, full of the spirit, gave excellent counsel at both the sessions. The value of the Church and her claims upon the membership, and the necessity of a face to face and heart to heart talk with the Son of God, were the topics considered. The sweet fellowship of the saints through communion with the Holy Spirit was felt by all. At the close a delightful luncheon was served, which was greatly enjoyed. James Jones and Wesley Wooten remained over for the Sabbath services.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

MAY 25.

TOPIC—Mission Work at Home and Abroad. V. Industrial Missions. Acts 18: 1-6.

It is well to impress the many sided character of foreign mission work. Many people think of it as being distinctly evangelistic. Christ often impressed religious truth by relieving natural wants, and drew men to Him by His lessons from nature and the common affairs of life.

So it is in missionary endeavor, evangelism, education, medical skill, the Bible school, industrial training go hand in hand. One of the needs, especially of the heathen races, is that of self dependence by the skill of their own hands. Many know little about the manner of sustaining life, except the quest for game and fish. Their lives are spent in idleness, when they are not at war, and they lack equipment and breadth of vision and mind and soul development which come from toil.

Then too, industrial toil is an important accompaniment to the spread of the gospel. One of the impressive methods by which the power of Christianity is forced upon the minds of the heathen world, is the manifestation of development in material things in the leading Christian nations.

"A common feeling about menial work in India was shown when a Christian girl in school, on being asked to hold a basin for the missionary nurse bathing the injured foot of a scholar, said, 'I am not a servant.' The change wrought by missionary training was described by a Hindu priest who was speaking of some in his village that had become Christians within a year. He said, 'Formerly they were lazy, and sometimes drank, lied and cheated, as those around them do; but see what a change it has made in them; now they are sober, industrious, well-behaved, and thrifty. Why, there is not such a village in all this region.'—Christian Endeavor World.

It is well to quote in the meeting Van Dyke's poem on "The Tiling of Felix," the concluding verse of which is as follows:

"This is the gospel of labor! Ring it,
ye bells of the kirk:
The Lord of love came down from above,
to live with the men who work.
This is the rose that He planted, here in the thorn-cursed soil—Heaven is blest with perfect rest, but the blessing of earth is toil."

They settled at Bloomingdale, Indiana, but in 1865 moved to Oskaloosa, Iowa, where they resided until after her husband's death in 1898. Since 1903 she has resided with her son, in Chicago. She was a life long member of Friends, and at the time of her death was a member of Oskaloosa Monthly Meeting. Hers was a sweet, devoted life, which found its highest mission in a Christian home. She was much interested in Missions, was an ideal home-maker, and her presence created an atmosphere which was a crown and perfection of all. She is survived by two sons and three daughters.

interest, there was no department of church activity in which she was not active. She was president of the local W. F. M. She was also one of three Friends representing Iowa Yearly Meeting, on the American Friends' Board of Foreign Missions. She was clerk of Oskaloosa Quarterly Meeting on Ministry and Oversight, and had charge of the cradle roll in the Sabbath School. She was also a member and official of the local W. C. T. U. CLEARED AWAY

Proper Food Put the Troubles Away

Our own troubles always seem more severe than any others. But when a man is unable to eat even a light breakfast, for years, without severe distress, he has trouble enough.

It is small wonder he likes to tell of food which cleared away the troubles. "I am glad of the opportunity to tell of the good Grape-Nuts has done for me," writes a N. H. man. "For many years I was unable to eat even a light breakfast without great suffering."

"After eating I would suddenly be seized with an attack of colic and vomiting. This would be followed by headache and misery that would sometimes last a week or more, leaving me so weak I could hardly sit up or walk."

"Since I began to eat Grape-Nuts I have been free from the old troubles. I usually eat Grape-Nuts one or more times a day, taking it at the beginning of the meal. Now I can eat almost anything I want without trouble."

"When I began to use Grape-Nuts I was way under my usual weight, now I weigh 30 pounds more than I ever weighed in my life, and I am glad to speak of the food that has worked the change."

Late News From Mexico

Some disturbing news was received last week from Friends' Mission Stations in Mexico. Apparently the Huerta administration is as little able to enforce order in that republic as was its predecessor.

A telegram was received from Victoria on May 13, stating that an eight hours' battle between the Federals and rebels had just closed, but that Friends had not personally been disturbed. All children had been taken out of school and some had been sent to other points.

At the same time word was received from Raymond Holding that the situation in Matehuala was worse than in February. Another attack had been made upon the city, but Americans had not yet been disturbed. One had incurred the displeasure of the rebels, however, by rescuing two citizens.

A telegram from Sarah Charles was received by her relatives at Fountain City, Indiana, to the effect that the rebels were in the vicinity of Matamoros and that they would attack the city on the 13th. All connected with the Friends' school there, together with those at the Presbyterian school, had gone over to Brownsville, Texas, and were being cared for.

Later: Since the above was written, letters have been received by Charles E. Tebbetts from Raymond S. Holding, which shows that a veritable reign of terror exists at Cedral and Matehuala. On April 25 he wrote about the prosperous condition of the schools and meeting. Two days later, on Sabbath, April 27, both Cedral and Matehuala were attacked by the rebels and captured, and indescribable horrors, burning, looting, and killing followed. On May 2, preparations were being made to remove all the women from Matehuala. The Friends Mission buildings were uninjured, except by bullet holes and the breaking of window panes. Fuller details will be given next week.

Our African Mission

Emory Rees, at Marigoli, reports over 900 boys and girls in the schools there. There are twenty preaching places in that district, the average attendance every Sunday being over 3,500. At Maragoli the average attendance is 715. At most places preaching messages are given by young men who, twenty years ago, had never seen a white man. Opposition has almost ceased among the young men.

Progress on the Complete Works of Penn

Albert Cook Myers has returned from a winter's work in England on the projected complete works of William Penn. He has had headquarters in London, at Devonshire House, the headquarters of English Friends; his assistants have remained there, busily engaged in the work of copying and arranging materials. The documents thus far brought together and arranged in order fill 70 quarto volumes.

Albert Cook Myers was the official delegate of the Historical Society of Pennsylvania at the International Congress of Historical Studies held in London early in Fourth month. A Friend, J. A. Pease, British Minister of Education, a nephew of the late Thomas Hodgkin, was President of the Congress.

In the work on the collected works of Penn some very interesting and valuable material not before published nor generally known has been unearthed. Among this are records of the first comers to Pennsylvania with itemized lists of the furniture and other personal belongings they brought with them.

Some very important documents were found in the private collection of the Duke of Norfolk, the first duke of England, who owns Worminghurst, the country seat of Penn.

Albert Cook Myers will remain in this country until late in the summer, making his headquarters at the Library of the Pennsylvania Historical Society, Philadelphia, with some journeyings to New England, to the West and South, in the search for Penn papers.—Friends Intelligencer.

If God is a vital reality to us so that our life is in his life and our will is his will, and with our hand we hold his hand, then we know that God will lead us, and help us, and bless us, and bring us at last through whatever sorrows into his light and joy perpetual. And that faith will interpret all the days of the new year, begun, continued and ended in the name of God.—George Hodges.

The Christian Church and Its Weaknesses

"That he might present the Church to himself a glorious Church."—R. V. Eph. 5: 27.

It is no spirit of pessimism that compels us to the belief that the Church is falling far short of its mission in the world today. Few local congregations and still fewer denominations live up to their own ideals. A lecturer of note recently declared that Christianity is not making any headway. We are by no means ready to accept his conclusions, but few will doubt that the Church is not the positive force for righteousness that it ought to be.

To many religion is an object of secondary concern, a convenient cloak to wear on occasion, a badge to identify them with respectable people, a profession that eases the conscience and renders it less difficult to hope for the rewards of the righteous, while holding to the world and its pleasures. There are not many perhaps that are hypocritical at heart, but there are multitudes to whom Christianity has not yet appeared as a vital righteous force, changing the whole outlook of their lives and filling their vision with the glory of service for God and humanity.

If the Church lacks potentiality today, it is because worldliness has crowded in upon every side; a worldliness that is the creature of self, and which would salve the conscience until it beholds indistinctly the border line between loyalty to Jehovah and fealty to Mammon. Probably the materialism of the age has to some extent touched the heart of the Church, until it has lost something of that fineness of discrimination, that sensitiveness of conscience which quickly marks the distinction between right and wrong.

Sometimes it would seem that the Church has come to lack the positive force that comes from a great conviction; that it has grown too tolerant of evil; too easily satisfied with its condition; too much self-centered; too formal in its life; too afraid to know the truth in its fullness; too little concerned about the social order; too ready to compromise its position because forsooth some prominent member holds the key to influence and the purse strings of the wealth which supports the church activities. The Church can never afford to be in bondage. Its potentiality is lessened every time it suffers itself to be handicapped by any environment. It must keep itself free from worldly contamination, if it would win the sons of men to the King's highway of holiness.

We have no purpose to condemn the Church. We are not even in a spirit to criticize. It is because we believe profoundly in its mission, and have such an abounding faith in its ultimate triumph, that we yearn to see it free from all elements that entangle, that weaken its efficiency, that it may be equipped for the highest service for the Master to which it has been called.

Many a Christian body lacks efficiency because it is in bondage to some tradition, some social custom, some compromise when some vital question is at stake, some tendency to shirk responsibility, some lack of a great purpose, some willingness to be concerned with only the little things and the commonplace, some narrowness of vision that develops an abnormal and one-sided Christianity, some failure to see and meet the needs of suffering humanity, some inclination to make the Church a club of social respectability, rather than a militant body that is to dethrone evil by establishing righteousness in the earth.

How few personal workers there are in the average congregation, who, because the love of Christ constraineth them, are impelled to go out with the spirit of the missionary to become experts in ministering to the needs of humanity about them; how few there are like Paul, ready to become all things to all men that by all means they may save some! In the average church of today, there is perhaps too great a tendency to over-organization, and not enough of the spirit of personal service that envelops the whole membership; too much of a disposition to administer Church policies according to written rules and formulas, and not enough of the spirit of sacrifice that goes out after men and wins them to Christ by the power of a personal and manifested love.

Organization is important in every sphere, but only as it emphasizes and insures the power of personal touch. Organization can never become a substitute for the living ministry of kindly deeds and personal example. It is the personal life that counts most, no less in the realm of religion than in the social and political world. The Church can never win men by patronizing them, by holding them aloof, by handing out mere formal statements of doctrinal belief. Love can never be expressed in formal terms. It is the contact of soul with soul in fellowship that is the test of influence that is abiding.

The early Quakers won men and women by the thousands, not because they preached a new religion, but because the genuineness of the truth they lived and proclaimed established a fraternity of interest, a touch of spirit with spirit that was impelling. Christ's power over his disciples and the multitudes that thronged his pathway did not depend upon any formula of utterance, any loyalty to tradition, any patronage of custom. It depended upon his ability to make men feel that the life he proclaimed as the ideal life was a better one than the old life, and that, because of the great love which he manifested, and the exceeding depth of interest in human affairs which he revealed, here was One whose soul was linked with theirs in an eternal fellowship that made his appeal irresistible.

It is in such a spirit that the Church must traverse the highways of human life today, free from bondage, free from contamination, free from compromises, profoundly interested in the uplift and eternal welfare of all men at home and abroad, seeking to win them to Christ for their own good and the glory of their Creator.

These are no ordinary times in which we live. The spirit of Jehovah is moving majestically among the nations. Science, invention, philosophy, all things material and intellectual, have established a community of interest, a brotherhood of investigation and experiment among all the nations. It is time for the Church of God to gird itself with power, and in the spirit of Him who is waiting to fill the whole earth with His blessed Presence, go forth to spread the light of His truth among all peoples.

A Great Modern Problem—No. 2

With the awakening of the American public conscience, a nation-wide solicitude has developed within a half decade concerning the ravages of the social evil. In any form "vice is a monster of frightful mien," as Pope has so aptly declared, but never so hideous and repelling as when directed to the debauchment of woman and the trafficking in human virtue. It can have no apologist except that of debased selfishness.

The wonder is that in a Christian Republic an organized system that traffics in human souls could ever have been allowed to develop. Together with its affinity in sin, the rum traffic, they present a twin diabolism of wickedness that is foreign to a social order that makes any pretensions to decency and moral betterment. Yet because of our loose political systems and our lax standards of moral obligations these two are little short of being all powerful in scores of our municipalities.

The worst thing about the social evil is not the millions of money with which its coffers are annually filled, nor yet the tribute which it pays for protection. The worst thing is not even the awful sin of the guilty principals in this tragedy of this modern age, horrible as the sin is, and deplorable as are the consequences. The worst thing about it all is the fact that a supposedly Christian public has been willing to tolerate such an iniquity with no apparently effective protest, until the blight of its influence has corrupted the fountains of justice, marred the visage of our national character, touched the springs of legislation and affected the operations of government.

The present crusade against this iniquity is but the reflex action of a system that has grown so bold and so bad that a not overly sensitive public conscience is moved to protest. But an evil like this can never be cured by denunciation or the hurling of anathemas. It is not a thing to be cured by segregation, for the open public house is only one horrid manifestation of a disease that runs far below the surface. We had just as well try to confine a deadly contagion to its surface manifestations, ignorant of the contamination of the flesh and blood that is steadily working destruction at the fountain heads of life. This evil can be cured only in part by legislation and the enforcement of the statutes. The remedy must probe deeper, until a moral and religious conviction takes possession of our social and national life, that not only abhors the sinful deed but refuses longer to give the system a foothold anywhere beneath the flag.

This evil, like the liquor traffic, is buttressed by the plea to be let alone, which is a form of the plea for personal liberty, a specious counterfeit, which demands a base self-gratification which lies far below the common conscience of the masses. Like the liquor traffic, it claims exemption from public wrath on the ground that it is a necessary evil, to be deplored, but one of the necessary adjuncts of a human civilization. This is brute philosophy, nothing better, nothing more, and is a slander upon both a manhood and womanhood that are no longer heathen.

A sinful deed may be forgiven, even as Christ forgave the woman taken in the act of sin; but the toleration of a system that not only fosters the sin but commercializes it by a nation-wide propaganda, will work its own retribution in wide-spread disease and a far-reaching contamination of character and public morals which cannot be forgiven, and which can only be outlived long after the system has been condemned and abandoned.

With such a problem the Church of Christ must have to do, and it dare not turn aside from the task because it is as difficult as it is complex. To the extent that the grace of God has a chance to regenerate human life, will a higher standard of morals be raised that will revolt against the commercialization of any evil by the protection which is permitted or authorized by government. The gospel of the Son of God is the remedy of all the ages for sin and uncleanness, applied no less to the social order than to the individual delinquencies. Not alone then for the salvation of individuals, but for the purification of society and the regeneration of the mechanism of government, must the Church of God take on new life and equip itself with power for the dual task which has been committed to its keeping.

A live church will mean a quickened public conscience and a national moral conviction that will not only refuse to condone an evil like this, but make it an outlaw in every municipality in the land, with no protecting hand outstretched to save it from the wrath of an outraged people.

Friends may feel that they can do little toward the suppression of such a system, but if in every community and municipality where Friends are influential they will do their full share toward the maintenance of high community standards, and become leaders in the inauguration of movements for the enforcement of anti-vice statutes and ordinances, they will be serving their day and generation well and be building a bulwark of defence for the future.

Observing a Modern Samaritan Passover

BY MARION E. KELSEY

To one who has always lived away from the large centers in America, mention of the passover immediately suggests a Bible incident, but in this land with its ancient history, it is still an annual occurrence among the Moslems, the Jews and the Samaritans. One may attend the passover feast of the first two sects in many localities, but there is no place in the world save one where one may see the ceremony observed by the last named. Indications are that it may not continue for many generations longer in this place.

It was necessary for us to drive north, from Ramallah, about thirty miles into the country of Samaria to the modern village of Nablus, built on the site of ancient Shechem. Here live the remnants of the sect of Samaritans, or "Keepers" of the true law. They now claim to number one hundred ninety-six, and most of them live at the foot of Mt. Gerizim, on the edge of the town. One family has removed to Jaffa and some of the men have gone to America.

Nablus lies between two high mountains mentioned oftentimes in the Bible. Mt. Ebal, on the north, is the higher and commands a view of all Palestine. It was to this mountain that the Lord God commanded the children of Israel to bring the stones from the Jordan and after plastering them in place, to worship. Here the six tribes of Israel stood and answered "Amen" to the curses pronounced by the Levites (Deut. 27: 15-26).

The sect of Samaritans believe that Pentateuch is the sole sacred book, and they guard two ancient copies of it carefully. They changed the word Ebal in Deut. 27: 4 to Gerizim, and, about four centuries before Christ, built a temple on Mt. Gerizim, the mountain that looms to the south of old Shechem and seems to stand guard, opposite Mt. Ebal, over the beautiful rich valley where one may be refreshed the year round by the sound of running water. The temple was destroyed about a hundred years before Christ and we fancied we could yet see some of the traces of it, as we walked about the summit of the fine old mountain.

Near these ruins, each year, at the time to celebrate the feast of the passover, the entire body of remaining Samaritans takes one of the old copies of the Pentateuch, a scroll, and with all necessary supplies for the feast, goes up on Gerizim and in tents prepares the members for the true observance of the ceremony as Moses was directed to command the people to do in Egypt. The high priest is a venerable looking old man of seventy-four years, with a decidedly Jewish type of nose. He makes quite a prophetic appearance; a tall figure, slightly bent, with gray hair and beard, wearing rich flowing robes and speaking with the gentle feebleness of an aged man. Some of the men are fine looking and well-developed, but many are not of prepossessing appearance, and their women resemble the gypsies in our country in their slovenliness and ill-breeding. The men and boys make themselves neat for the feast by dressing in white cotton garments—shirts gathered in front at the waist, but loose in the back and falling outside the full trousers that are gathered into a band at the ankles.

This year the date of the feast was April twentieth, and toward eventime the high priest, after some chanting, applied a match to the fire kindled in a stone-lined pit about eight feet deep. The tending of the fire was given over to the younger members, as it had to be kept going to heat the stones thoroughly for the subsequent roasting of the sacrifice. At the north end of an enclosure that was perhaps twenty by forty feet, was a depression in the earth where another fire was built and over it two cauldrons of water were placed to scald the wool from the sacrificed lambs.

At sunset the high priest with all the other priests took places at the south end of the enclosure facing the south, with all the men and boys behind them. Standing bareheaded, with hands uplifted, palms upward, they seemed to be in a suppliant mood for some moments. They occasionally stroked their faces, a sign of contrition, repeating passages of Scripture in concert. They chanted in chorus with loud voices, the first chapter of Exodus, then the chapters containing the account of the plagues and how Pharaoh's heart continued to be hardened. In between these accounts they dropped on their knees on the rich silk mats spread for them and bent their heads to the ground in prayer apparently, after which they remained on their knees singing for some time. After the chanting, the high priest read the directions from Exodus twelve, and at the close the men at the other end of the enclosure killed the seven lambs that answered the requirements of the passover. This number is sufficient for the present number of men and boys of the sect, who divide into seven groups for the sacrificial supper. With a bunch of hyssop, they struck on the two sides of the tent doors with the blood of the sacrifice.

As twilight fell, the air was scented with burning remnants of the preparation and one after another of the dressed animals was strung on the poles used as spits. While the men worked they were refreshed with bread and bitter herbs, the herbs being rolled inside the thin bread, making a roll about the size of one's thumb. The impressive part of the service was now over and we left the hill by moonlight, about eight o'clock. As soon as all were prepared, the lambs would be lowered into the now highly-heated pit and covered with branches and sealed with mud. In four or five hours the roasting is complete and the high priest gives the word for the meat to be removed and feasting begins. By morning the feast would be over and all remnants burned.

"And ye shall let nothing of it remain until the morning, but that which remaineth of it until morning ye shall burn with fire. And thus shall ye eat it; with your loins girded, your shoes on your feet and your staff in your hand; and ye shall eat in haste; it is the Lord's passover."

For seven days they remained on the mount in their tents, eating unleavened bread according to the commandment: "Ye shall observe the feast of unleavened bread; for in this self-same day have I brought your hosts out of the land of Egypt; therefore shall ye observe this day throughout your generations by an ordinance forever. In the first month, on the fourteenth day of the month at even, ye shall eat unleavened bread, until the one and twentieth day of the month at even. Seven days shall there be no leaven found in your houses; for whosoever eateth that which is leavened, that soul shall be a sojourner, or one that is born in the land. Ye shall eat nothing leavened; in all your habitations shall ye eat unleavened bread."

The Strength and Weakness of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting

BY ISAAC SHARPLESS

(Copied from The Westonian.)

[Under the above heading, The Westonian publishes a paper prepared by Isaac Sharpless, President of Haverford College, and read by him at the anniversary of Twelfth Street Meeting House in Philadelphia. While dealing primarily with a Yearly Meeting that as yet is not a member of the Five Years Meeting, it contains so much of value to the whole church, both of history and modern suggestion, that we feel it should have a wider circulation. Hence its publication in part in THE AMERICAN FRIEND. It should be read by every Friend in America, and whether its conclusions are wholly accepted or not, it cannot fail to have a broadening and quickening influence upon the entire denomination.—THE EDITOR.]

Philadelphia Yearly Meeting has had a memorable history. It was founded by William Penn and his associates from England, men who had gained their conviction in the seething days of the Commonwealth and had suffered for them, with the martyr spirit and without compromise, in the courts and jails of that intolerant century. They had a perfect confidence that they were engaged in a triumphant cause. If the triumph should be delayed in the old countries where customs and opinions were set, in America an early victory might be foreseen.

The ripple of the George Keith separation, bitter and reactionary though it was while it lasted, soon died away and in 1700 they had settled themselves down to the conquest of the continent for Quakerism.

Looking back even with the disappointing history of the past 200 years before our eyes, this does not seem to have been an impossible dream. Calvinism and Quakerism were running neck and neck for the prize of the nation. The principles of Quakerism have largely won, but hardly through the body which represented them. Their opponents grew with a great growth partly by the adoption of the principles which they had opposed. The Friends faithfully, almost slavishly at times, stood by their inheritance with a continually diminishing relative influence and importance.

Consecration is not always a matter of inheritance. The spiritual experiences of the fathers were not always transmitted to the sons. So the second generation of birthright members was a mingled body, part of iron and part of clay. If there was not transmission of experience, there might be transmission of example and there followed generations less original, less fervent but equally consistent, as the word came to be used, with their brave and unselfish ancestors. John Smith of Marlborough tells how in his sixty years of observation following 1700, there grew side by side wealth and worldly importance on the one hand and spiritual decline on the other. He may have been mistaken in associating these together wholly as cause and effect; they were both natural results of the development of the new country and the growth of new generations which were heirs of the temporal but not of the spiritual possessions of their fathers.

They became the political leaders of the colony first by their right as founders and then by the free choice of the people. They came up fairly against the compromising problems of government. They tried to meet them practically and at the same time be true to their principles. When policy and pure truth diverged, they for a time kept astride of both. But when the distance was too great for this feat to be successfully accomplished, some took one course and some the other. Many of the best educated, most trusted men, of perfect integrity and high motives, went with the military movement seemingly needed to defend the province from French and Indian attacks, but the great body, acting on English advice, gave up, many of them most reluctantly and half-heartedly, the governmental positions, the duties of which seemed to conflict with Christian rectitude.

Then came the Revolutionary War, and there could no longer be compromise. The lines were sharply drawn. Good and in the main loyal to Quaker truth as the fighting Friends were, they must go, and Philadelphia Yearly Meeting was definitely committed to peace at any price and under all circumstances.

Not only did this war establish uncompromising peace as a Friends' principle, it saw slavery disappear among them, tavern keeping practically abolished, primary, denominational schools made a part of the general policy of the Yearly Meeting, and an attempt made, largely successful, to develop that exclusiveness which has until recently been a feature of our policy. Friends were to be socially, ecclesiastically, intellectually and largely in business a peculiar people. They were to have their interests among themselves and devote themselves to a defence of their own standards and methods. Strictly honest and just and kindly, they lost the larger influence upon the state and upon society of the Colonial Friends, and the Quaker of the early days of some of us was rapidly developed. There were perhaps about 40,000 members at the end of this period.

About this date began the western migration. Thousands went to western Pennsylvania and Ohio, perhaps one-fourth of the total membership. Education was crude, Westtown was just started. Spiritual life was weakened and the balance of intellectuality was not strong enough to steady the theological current of the times. The great separation with the doctrinal basis at the extremes, but largely social in the intermediate strata, cut like a knife through the vitals of the Society. Each body went its own way with the hard personal and denominational feelings which it required two generations to moderate.

This little sketch seems a necessary prelude to a fair and searching examination of present conditions. We are what this history has left us and we cannot escape it. It may enable us to steady ourselves before the problems of the present and face them in the light of real Quaker spirit and ideals, or it may cause us to shut our eyes to changes which the years have wrought and attempt to follow in detail all that our fathers have believed and attempted.

No fairer consideration of present conditions can be had without taking into account the changes of the last one or two decades; changes so rapid and important that they would have been deemed impossible at the beginning of the epoch. They are very largely the result of a willingness to take advantage of opportunities for a higher education. Friends have been in the past fearful of such opportunities. Their exaltation of inspiration as the sole qualification of a minister of the Gospel, deprived them of an incentive, very powerful in other Christian bodies, for the establishment and patronage of colleges. It is an interesting speculation as to the effect on the history of the Society had they, as did the Puritans and Presbyterians, established one or more colleges in the Colonial days. A broader outlook, less exact copying of past methods, more and better influence upon the outside world would almost surely have resulted. But they confined their educational efforts, up to the time of the founding of Haverford, to primary and academic education given to all, with very few great scholars to stimulate the larger intellectual interests. And for the first half century of the history of the one small college under Friendly care, it seemed to represent an alien influence and was treated with suspicion which often verged into hostility.

Now a large proportion of the youth of both sexes are collegians. There is probably no Yearly Meeting and but few communities outside the Society which contains a larger percentage. The desire for higher education is so general and the chances for it, for rich and poor alike, are so numerous, that college standards and habits of thought pervade almost every household.

With these conditions several things were sure to happen in our attitude towards our peculiar problems. The revelation to the past would be narrowly analyzed. Statements that a certain custom had existed among Friends would be no longer satisfactory as a final settlement of the question. Men taught to inquire severely in the fields of Science and linguistic criticism, into the exact significance of facts and words, would not be stopped from a like free inquiry into the meaning and efficacy of doctrine and method in the realm ecclesiastic. With this inquiry would undoubtedly come the answer that certain old customs were of doubtful advantage to this age, and others were positively out of harmony with Quaker principle or progress and must be modified or abandoned. There would come up from certain advanced Monthly Meetings suggested changes which in time the Yearly Meeting would grant. So decorously was the process carried on that many have been hardly aware of its significance. So profound a respect for the fathers and mothers of our Quaker families has been felt, so graciously have they yielded to the growing liberal demands, that harmony during this transformation has been undisturbed and we have been perhaps as never before since 1690 a real Society of Friends.

The lesson is obvious. It is not wholesome change or sane progress which creates division or disunity. These are the normal conditions of all good society. That it is our duty to improve and not simply to defend, is an axiom and condition of health. It is the spirit in which these changes are urged or opposed that creates the bitterness and partisanship which are to be deprecated.

But what are the changes which have come with this awakening intellectual life? The peculiar dress and language have assumed less large proportions in our estimation, except in so far as they are matters of individual conviction. They are no longer tests of spirituality or of capacity to hold official positions. Their adoption is not always the first step in a consecrated religious life.

This is but an index of a more profound change. The exclusiveness which has set apart the Society as a distinct and special people within the Christian fold, is going with them. The habit of reading, the contact with widely read and original scholars can no longer be confined to the writings of the early Friends. The complaint which John Dickinson made to James Pemberton about 1790, that Friends read nothing but the writings of Friends; and that they knew nothing of the valuable literature outside the Quaker Canon, cannot possibly be made now.

This inclusive attitude is putting them back into worldly activities as in the Colonial days. They vote and hold office. They constitute reform committees and engage with other Christian citizens in social and charitable work. With them they are studying the problems of philanthropy and feeling a responsibility for the conditions around the doors of their meeting houses. Perhaps they lose something of the distant respect paid to just men who have consciences and set standards of righteousness seen of all, and by every one considered good examples. But they have the other sort of influence which good and trained men always emanate, when they get down to the real problems of society or religion and work them out in conjunction with their fellows.

Saving a Young Man in Japan

BY HORACE E. COLEMAN

The following story of a young man illustrates, it seems to me, very well the modern student's difficulties in Japan, and also how easily those difficulties are met if the seeker is earnest.

I first met the young man at a baseball game at Ka-ruizawa, being connected with the team. He showed an interest in talking with a foreigner and I took his name and address. He returned to his home in Nagano, and as he did not come to Tokyo until the following spring, in the meantime I sent him the Bible Letter which I issue each month, with notes on a Bible lesson for each week. Then he came to see me in Tokyo, and on my "at home" night came to see me several times, and also attended my social meeting for the young men and the English Bible class a few times. Then he dropped off, and I did not see him for more than a year. One evening while I was taking a walk he saw me from a distance, and wrote me a letter to the following effect. After a brief explanation, he said: "I have a lot of questions to ask you about Christianity. I must confess that I was hitherto of a foolish opinion that man can do without belief. I don't remember the exact words, but I happened to read Tennyson's saying, that 'only men of superficial knowledge insult God.' On seeing that individualism, Nietzschism, and Noraism are blasting the present society, and that modern civilization is the field of intrigues, and that people are going down to a hellish world, being departed by the material oppression, I think there must be something strong with which to oppose them boldly.

"A friend of mine who is now in China, says I was an atheist while I was in my own country, but being now away from home, parents, friends, and native country, I feel lonely; and I must ask you to send me a Holy Bible and a hymn book. All these make me turn to religion."

I appointed a time for him to come with his difficult questions, and he came two Friday evenings, then to two or three Sunday evening services. At one of these he said, when asked if he had any more questions, "I have determined that I will not doubt or assume the critical attitude, for if I do I fear I shall not enter into the spiritual meaning of the teaching." In a few weeks he came to the Christmas meeting, attended by about twenty-four young men, when I always give a decision turn to the Christmas talk. He was one of two to raise his hand expressing his desire to become a Christian, in response to my appeal to follow the highest ideal in giving that name through Christmas, viz., to give one's self first to God, then to society, and to humanity.

After reaching home he said in a letter, "I think a good man, for example, an honest man in his business, or a dutiful son to his parents, must come as a logical result of this loftiest ideal." His father, although a Buddhist, was a broad minded man, a teetotaler, and a member of a society for helping discharged prisoners. He encouraged his son, saying he was glad he had turned to religion, and had chosen to become a Christian; that there would be no collision between them; and that, further, his Christian life, or the value of it, would depend on whether he could put what he believed to be the instructions of God into practice in daily life. Therefore the son said, "I vowed I will be a Christian and die a Christian." After returning to Tokyo he was instructed in the way more perfectly, made his public confession of faith in Christ, and entered into fellowship with Christians. He has recently graduated with honor, and entered a bank in Osaka, and I believe will be a fruit-bearing Christian.

Foreign Missionary Activities

BY CHARLES E. TEBBETTS

Report of Meeting of Executive Committee of the American Friends Board of Foreign Missions

(CONCLUDED)

MISSION IN INDIA

A proposition came from the Ohio Board to transfer their Mission at Nowgong, India, to our Board, as they feel that their Mission in China requires all their resources, and they cannot do justice to both missions. Our Executive Committee entered into a strong feeling of sympathy with this proposition. But we find ourselves already heavily taxed with the work we now have, and feel we cannot undertake so large an additional responsibility, unless our income should be largely increased. This work ought to remain in the care of Friends, and there are abundant resources in the church to handle it if they were consecrated to God and made available for the use of the Board. It brings to us very strongly the consciousness that we need a larger awakening to our responsibility to undertake our share of the world's work.

FINANCES

Funds always come in slowly during the first half of our year, making it necessary to borrow to meet the needs of the work on the field. This year the amount thus obtained has been much larger than heretofore, because of the enlarging needs of all the fields, especially of Africa, and also because of the taking over of the Jamaica Mission. Iowa Friends are pledged to provide for the latter. Funds have always come in more freely toward the Yearly Meeting period of the year, and for the last five years we have been able to close the year without debt. But the situation this year is one that causes us some anxiety. The five-year fund that was raised at the Five Years Meeting in 1907 is no longer available. The call for funds to organize the other departments of our church may influence somewhat the missionary offerings. The enlarging of our work requiring more than heretofore; these and other things are liable to put a severer strain upon our resources. We, therefore, earnestly call upon all our supporting constituency to be very careful to see that contributions be given adequately to meet our growing work. To close a year with debt throws a discouraging burden upon the next year, and hampers the Board at the annual meeting in making the needed appropriations for the next year.

We take it for granted that Friends desire to see the work grow, and would be dissatisfied if it had in any way to be curtailed. But our Board is wholly dependent upon the offerings of the church for the sustaining of the work, and can only act as trustees of that which is committed to our care by the church. This year seems one to test the church in its faithfulness to this sacred charge. We earnestly pray she may prove equal to the testing. Friends of all the Yearly Meetings are equally responsible for the Mission in Africa, as our Board is only acting in the place of the special F. A. I. M. Board on which all the Yearly Meetings were represented. That field is the one that appeals strongly to all for help. Let every friend of Africa come to our help in our efforts to meet the growing need there. It is also a serious responsibility on the church when well prepared young Friends are offering to devote their lives to this work, to hinder their going because of lack of funds for their support. That contingency will be upon us this year. Where there is sacrifice of life to the Master's service, there certainly should be willing sacrifice of that which is of so much less value to make the sacrifice of life available.

UNITED MISSIONARY CAMPAIGN

Mr. George Innes, the authorized representative of the movement to unify the forces of all the Boards, both Home and Foreign, of all the Protestant Churches in America, was present and made a statement of the plans that are being made to that end. His presentation made a strong appeal to our entire committee as in the direct line of the needs of our own work, as well as that of the other departments of Friends Church. He also made a similar statement to the Executive Committee of the Five Years Meeting on the evening before. The plan will have to be worked out largely by the different Yearly Meetings. It seems to promise the solution of the most important problem we are now facing in the efficient organization of the entire work of our church. It will require a lot of careful planning to bring it before the Yearly Meetings in order that they may be effectively linked on to the general Interdenominational Campaign. We earnestly solicit a most prayerful consideration of this proposition on the part of all Friends who are in any way responsible for any department of the advance work of the church.

ASSISTANT GENERAL SECRETARY

A committee was appointed at the annual Board meeting last October to provide assistance for the central office. No one has yet been secured. The General Secretary reported that the responsibility and routine of office work was becoming a burden more than he could longer bear. The increased care needed in connection with the enlarging of the work, and the taking over of new fields should have more attention at the home base than he was able to give. If a satisfactory assistant could be secured the General Secretary offered to give his own time as far as possible to the general interests of the work, without salary, and thus release that for securing the assistant. The committee was encouraged to report a suitable name for assistant at an early date.

The General Secretary reported the "History of Mission Work of American Friends" as now ready, in cloth binding, for 60 cents, postpaid, and in paper, for 45 cents, postpaid. The Executive Committee desired that these should be circulated among Friends as generally as possible. It is very complete from the beginning to 1912, and is illustrated. It should be in all Friends' libraries, and somewhere accessible in every meeting.

The annual report for the last year is also ready, and can be had by sending name and address, with a two-cent stamp to the central office at Richmond, Ind.

Some Vital Educational Problems

BY ROBERT L. KELLY

The Boards of Education of several of the large churches are well organized, are manned by capable persons on permanent salaries, have considerable funds at their disposal and are doing a really great work for the cause of Christian education. Many of their problems are similar to our own. In many instances they are beating us to a solution.

On the whole, I believe Friends have the best secondary schools of any church in the country. I wish I could say the best system of secondary schools or the best chain of secondary schools, but, of course, we have neither a system nor even a chain. A brief account of the work of some Friends' secondary schools, at the last interchurch conference at Cleveland seemed to be something of a revelation to the representatives of the other churches who had almost given up in despair so far as secondary education is concerned. I may say that it is distinctly to the credit of some of our academies in Indiana that they are moving forward in a decisive way just at present. Bloomingdale is passing through a critical period of adjustment and much wisdom will have to be displayed on the part of the management if the Academy maintains itself at a high standard of work. Spiceland is evidently going to win out in a campaign for a new building, and the general outlook there is good indeed. It is probably not known to many that Fairmount Academy is the largest academy of Friends west of the Allegheny Mountains and that it is located in the county that has the largest number of commissioned public high schools in the State. The academies, when decently provided for, are formative centers of leadership and power, and the Friends who stand by them and make them educationally respectable are rendering a distinct and valuable service to the church and the community.

There was an interesting drift of opinion among the educational officials of the churches at the above named conference, with reference to beneficiary aid to students. It was felt that such aid should be rendered to those looking forward to "lay activity" as well as to prospective ministers; that in many instances loans should be made rather than grants, and that such loans might well be repaid not so much in money as in service to the church at a later period, it being understood that in exceptional cases such loans should be remittable. The government of the United States at great expense educates a number of young men at Annapolis and West Point, and the young men so educated are expected, as a matter of honor and patriotic duty, to render service subsequently in navy or army if the call of the country is sounded. Many cities and states give to young men and women a most complete normal training free of charge, and these students in receiving such benefit, not only tacitly but in some instances formally pledge themselves to the work of teaching in the public schools, for at least a minimum term of years. The church schools would not attempt so much to drive contracts, but they would seem to be on reasonable ground in applying the same expectation of loyalty to the children of the church who are educated at the church's expense. But perhaps the most interesting and vital conclusion reached in this connection—and I wish this thought could grip Friends communities—was that colleges laboring under heavy financial burdens should not be penalized for encouraging and receiving students feeling a call or likely to feel a call to the ministry or other forms of religious work. Every year in our Yearly Meetings in the middle west and west scores and even hundreds of such young people are reported. In listening to these reports from the field, and I have listened to them for years, one is impressed that there are plenty of prospective laborers of the newer generation to carry on our work and bring to splendid fruition our fondest hopes and aspirations for the church. And yet the laborers do not spring up in such encouraging numbers and the outcome seems to indicate either that Friends were mistaken about the probable call of these young people or else the church has been sinfully negligent in co-operating with the Spirit and in developing this promising talent. Now, in practice, what does happen is that an occasional young man or woman is reported to some college authority, the request invariably being made that the college give him or her free tuition and provide, if possible, for living expenses while he carries on his studies. The more such students a college has, in other words, the more active it is in the task of preparing church workers, the more it is penalized. It is at this point that the reform ought to set in. When a meeting is honored by God in having a young man or woman in its midst upon whom the Lord has laid his hand, that meeting should see that funds are provided if they are needed, and they usually are, so that the best of training may be given in the college, all tuition charges and living expenses being accounted for by the meeting. It is the belief of the writer that if this kind of care were given by our several meetings the work of the church would receive a mighty impetus, and the young person so encouraged would forever feel an obligation to the home meeting, which now in many instances is not felt.

When the seven days of the week have been renamed, "Presently," "By-and-by," "Pretty-soon," "After-a-while," "To-morrow," "In-a-minute" and "Right-away," how busy we shall all be with postponed duties if we are at all mindful of past promises.—Woman's Home Companion.

New Friends' Meeting House at Victoria, B. C.

The new Friends' meeting house at Victoria, British Columbia, the photograph of which will be found on the front cover of THE AMERICAN FRIEND this week, was used for the first time on Sunday, May 4. It will seat two hundred people, and is capable of enlargement. Caretakers' rooms, and also a reading room are attached.

It is located on Fern Street upon a lot 76 by 240 feet, which cost $3,000.00. The building itself cost $4,250.00. Of this amount $2,500.00 was donated by Friends in England, and there is still a debt of $2,800.00 on the property.

This is the first Friends' meeting house in British Columbia, a country having an area larger than England and Germany combined. Victoria Monthly Meeting was established in September, 1908, and Vancouver Monthly Meeting in November, 1911. These two constitute British Columbia Quarterly Meeting, which was formed in July, 1912.

The number of Friends in British Columbia is approximately three hundred, more than half of which live in the cities of Victoria and Vancouver, the remainder being scattered.

A Quaker at Hartford

Under the heading, "The Carew Lectures for 1912-1913," The Hartford Seminary Record, a high-class magazine published under the direction of the faculty of Hartford (Conn.) Theological Seminary, prints the following in its April edition:

"The Carew lectures for this year were delivered by Dr. Rufus M. Jones, professor of philosophy in Haverford College, Pennsylvania. His theme was "Spiritual Reformers of the Sixteenth Century." Professor Jones belongs to the Society of Friends, and his interest was thus especially keen for the work of these men who contributed to the inner life of the Reformation rather than to its more conspicuous outer manifestation.

"The lectures were given on the afternoons of January 29 and 31, February 5, 7, and 10. The subject itself, the clarity of the presentation, the evident mastery of material, together with the flashes of a genial humor appearing from time to time, made the series as a whole exceptionally delightful."

The magazine prints in this same issue the lecture in full on "Caspar Schwenkfeld," and gives an outline of each of the other lectures.

The annual egg product of the United States is valued at $400,000,000.00.

Puget Sound Quarterly Meeting

Puget Sound Quarterly Meeting was held at the East Side meeting house in Tacoma, Washington, on May 2 and 3. It was an occasion that bids fair to be the beginning of a great forward movement in this Northwest country. There being no visitors present, the work of the ministry fell to the home workers. On Sixth-day afternoon there were thirty-one present at the Ministry and Oversight meeting, each one feeling the burden for an advance by our beloved society. A remarkable feature in the meeting was that there were so very few who were brought up in the church, there being eighty percent. of convinced Friends present. Strong thrilling messages were given by Claude Barker, Harvey F. Tyler, and others. Charles Replogle preached in the evening, and a most stirring address inspired the Quarterly Meeting to a greater zeal than ever before.

The Quarterly Meeting on Seventh-day opened with a deep sense of the presence of the Lord upon us, and after a season of silence, in which the living Spirit was very evident, May Replogle brought the message of the day. It was a blessed time, and the meeting arose to the occasion and a splendid feeling prevailed. The meeting was so filled that it required a part of the business session in the afternoon to finish the testimonies which kept overflowing.

A very notable feature of the occasion was the presence of Joshua Wright, of Seattle Meeting, eighty-nine years old, and the loving countenance of Jane B. Votaw, of Tacoma, now eighty-four years old, but young as any of us in spirit; also Mary Wilson, now of Seattle, seventy-four years old. These each gave inspiring messages. They seemed like the ancient war horses who, having fought many a battle have been resting and waiting their time, but had smelled the powder again and were chafing to get back to the front. How they cheered those who might feel weary with the burden of the work! It was a great meeting, and all went home helped, and many declared it to be the best Quarterly Meeting ever held in Washington.

The next will be held in Seattle the first Seventh-day in August, and a conference of British Columbia Quarterly Meeting and Puget Sound will be held in conjunction. A program will be announced later.

The determination of Secretary of State, Bryan, to serve no liquors at official dinners has attracted far more public attention than has his reported reconciliation with Speaker Champ Clark.

Southland College Commencement

Southland, Ark., May 9.—Another milestone in the history of Southland College, an institution that has for a half century stood as a beacon light for Christian education for the Negro, was passed today.

Beginning last Sunday morning, the baccalaureate sermon was preached to a large and appreciative audience by George A. Long, pastor of the Second Baptist Church at Helena, Arkansas.

Monday afternoon, a very creditable program was rendered by the primary department, and this was followed Tuesday at 2:30 P. M., by the rendition of a program by the English department, thirty-three members making up the class.

Wednesday afternoon was featured by an excellent program of elocution and music, in which the participants did themselves much credit.

Thursday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, the college and normal program was rendered, which elicited hearty rounds of applause from the large crowds who listened to these programs each afternoon. At a later hour in the evening the Alumni reception was tendered in the parlors of Central Hall, at which quite a large number of the graduates were present to pay homage to their Alma Mater; enjoy the hospitalities at her hand and to felicitate each other upon the occasion.

By ten o'clock the spacious auditorium was crowded to its utmost seating capacity and standing room was at a premium. The graduating orations by Mr. Dionisio Armas, "Sunshine and Shade," and Miss Roberta Jones, "Pitching Our Tents Toward Sodom," were delivered in a very interesting and pleasing manner, and were extremely meritorious in that they showed deep study and broad research. Mr. Armas is a native Cuban, and deserves special mention for the rapid progress and excellent mark he has made during his few school years here.

J. M. Wheeler, pastor of St. Luke A. M. E. Church at Marianna, Arkansas, in his own inimitable way, delivered the class address which was fraught with wholesome advice for the class. The class colors, cream and yellow, were much in evidence, and the class motto: "Every man's work shall be made manifest," in bold, resonant letters, by reason of its attraction, easily caught the eye, carrying with it the desired import. President Wolford and other members of the faculty have need to congratulate themselves upon this very splendid showing.—The Opinion-Enterprise.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

California Yearly Meeting

During next month Emma Garretson will finish a very satisfactory three years' pastorate with Denair Church. She is just completing her new cottage, and will take a much needed rest the coming year at Denair. At the request of the Church, Olive E. Guyer, late of Illinois, will take up the work as pastor, commencing July first.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

A merry crowd of both young and old gathered in the basement of the Friends' Church at Fairmount, Indiana, on the evening of May 8, at which time a social hour was enjoyed, which event was followed by an instructive and highly entertaining address by Professor Elbert Russell, of Earlham College, on the subject, "Christianity and Society." Professor Russell described the old Roman empire, and how it was affected by the birth of Christ and the spread of Christianity.

Mothers' Day was observed at the Friends' Church, Fairmount, in a most gratifying way. Almost one hundred mothers were present, who were seated on the platform and were honored and revered. Mrs. Mattie Cammack Gibson, of Jonesboro, Indiana, was present and gave an address in keeping with the occasion. This was followed by an appropriate sermon by the pastor, Richard Haworth. Each mother present was presented with a carnation.

On May 4, the Friends' Sabbath-school of Dublin, Indiana, observed a special "Rally Day." With an enrollment of one hundred and twelve, a strenuous effort was made to have at least one hundred in attendance. After a two weeks' campaign by the pastor, officers and teachers, as well as students, our hopes were more than realized. The result was one hundred and forty-four in attendance, forty-nine reported for the Home department, and fifteen for the Cradle Roll, with a collection of $7.68. Charles Sweet, of Muncie, was with us, and his addresses in both the Sabbath-school and morning service for worship were inspiring and helpful. Dublin meeting is not yet satisfied but feels that quite an advanced step has been taken. The average attendance in our school has steadily increased for the last four years.

Mothers' Day was observed at the Friends' Church at Knightstown, Indiana, on May 11. After the usual hymns and scripture reading, the service was opened for prayers from the mothers, led by Mrs. Joseph Binford. Rebecca Trueblood then gave a short talk on the origin and significance of Mothers' Day. Following this, Dossie Byrket read from THE AMERICAN FRIEND, "Mother of Mine." Esther Cook brought the message of the morning, dwelling on the mothers in history and in the church, and paying a beautiful tribute to Margaret Fell and others who have given their lives to His service.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

Stella Friends' Academy, at Stella, Oklahoma, has an enrollment of forty students. The attendance kept up well for the spring term. Since a recent revival, nearly all are professing Christians. The graduating class is made up of four girls and one boy. There are two literary societies, which give a program every Saturday afternoon. The school is given hearty support by Stella meeting.

New England Yearly Meeting

Smithfield Quarterly Meeting was held at Bolton, Massachusetts, on the 8th instant. Wilbur K. Thomas, pastor in the Boston Meeting, was the only visiting minister, and he preached from the text, "The glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle." An unusual solemnity prevailed, and when the meeting closed, many went out deeply concerned to lead more completely holy lives. Dinner was served in the hall opposite the meeting house, and more than seventy-five sat down at the tables. The meeting house is remote from dwelling houses and a former resident in the neighborhood, not a Friend, built this hall a few years ago and gave it to Bolton Meeting for Quarterly Meeting dinners and other purposes. The business meeting convened about one o'clock and was well attended.

In this issue appears a notice of the death of Laura A. Read. In early life she joined the Congregational Church. She was married in 1861 to James S. Read, and in 1875 she and her husband requested membership for themselves and their two children in the Society of Friends. She was modest and retiring, of sound judgment, loving, firm and faithful. When about her domestic duties she prayed for others. She sang sweetly and sometimes the silence of our meeting for worship would be broken by her singing a single stanza. She was never at variance with others and her influence for good, not only in her own beautiful home, but in the community, was great and effective.

The last meeting of the South China Round Table was held at the home of Charles Fry on the third of May. A study of the Social Service report as given in the minutes of the Five Years Meeting, together with the reading of the report on Young People's Activities, constituted a fitting program for the completion of the winter course. The usual company of about twenty was present. Indications are that the interest aroused by the Round Table meetings will still continue to be active in the Monthly Meeting and church. The China Monthly Meeting held an all-day service in April and gave the afternoon to be under the care of the Round Table. The young people chose different sections of various reports in the Five Years Meeting minutes which would be of interest to the meeting, followed by reading and a discussion of the same. The reports on Bible Study and pastoral care received especial attention.

New York Yearly Meeting

Ferrisburg Quarterly Meeting was held at North Ferrisburg, Vermont, on the 10th and 11th of May. The very cold wind prevented some from attending. Several wrote letters of acknowledgment and sympathy. Albert G. Shepard, of Glens Falls, New York, was acceptably present and his services were much appreciated. On Mothers' Day, he preached from the text, "That our daughters may be as corner stones."—Ps. 144: 12, and was appreciated by all. The routine of business was made interesting by the announcement that most of the members of this Monthly Meeting had declared in writing that they would be loyal to the Church. The "Willing Workers" of Monkton Ridge have greatly improved the interior of the church in the way of paper, carpets and paint, and A. B. Miles has made a beautiful pulpit-stand with his own hands and presented it to the church.

Nine Partners Quarterly Meeting was held at Millbrook, New York, May 9 and 10. On Friday afternoon the meeting on ministry and oversight was held. Herbert L. Huffman, of Clinton Corners opened the discussion on the question, "How can we bring the home, the church and the Bible school into close relationship?" In the evening a Quarterly Meeting Conference was held, when William J. Sayres discussed the subject, "Efficiency for Effectiveness." On Saturday a meeting for worship was held at 10:30 o'clock, followed by luncheon. At one o'clock the business session convened, followed at three o'clock by a meeting of the evangelistic committee.

Richard R. and M. Emma Newby were completely taken by surprise a few days ago, when the members of the Union Springs Meeting gathered at their home to express appreciation of the work of Richard Newby and family. In a few fitting remarks the pastor, Ida T. Parker, on behalf of the meeting, presented Mrs. Newby with a set of six fruit knives, to serve as a material reminder of the Friends at Union Springs. Both Richard Newby and his wife responded appropriately.

The Friends' Bible school at Union Springs, New York, observed Mothers' Day, May 11. The greater part of the lesson hour was occupied with an interesting program taken from the leaflets specially prepared for that day.

Philadelphia Yearly Meeting

From the May issue of The Westonian, we glean the following:

"President Isaac Sharpless and wife, of Haverford College, will sail for Europe soon after the college closes, and will later reach Japan by way of the Trans-Siberian railway. They will visit their daughter at Friends' mission at Mito, Japan, and plan to return home in the early autumn by way of California.

About the middle of March, four members of the Representative Meeting, George M. Warner, Dr. Edward G. Rhoads, William B. Harvey, and Davis H. Forsythe, in company with T. Raeburn White, had a hearing before the Senate Judiciary Committee of the Pennsylvania Legislature, in the interests of the abolition of capital punishment.

Western Yearly Meeting

Vermilion Quarterly Meeting was held at Vermilion Grove, Illinois, May 9-11. Charles E. Tebbetts, secretary of the Foreign Mission Board, was present at two sessions and spoke on mission work. Charles Axton, pastor of the Friends' Church at Kokomo, Indiana, was also present and preached two sermons. Ellis Wells, who has recently taken pastoral work in this quarterly meeting, had a very acceptable service on Sabbath evening. A new advisory committee was appointed for Vermilion Academy, and the announcements concerning this institution were gratifying.

David Hadley, of Danville, Indiana, was with Friends of West Union on May 4, and gave a report of the Five Years Meeting, in which he urged Friends to subscribe for THE AMERICAN FRIEND. As a result we hope soon to send a number of new names.

Edward M. Woodard, Yearly Meeting Evangelistic Superintendent, attended Quarterly Meeting held at Mooresville, May 11, at which he gave a helpful message. He visited the West Union Friends on Sunday morning and preached an inspiring sermon. Friends have an interesting Sabbath-school at West Union.

Friends of Poplar Ridge Meeting near Carmel, Indiana, celebrated Mothers' Day, May 11, with a very appropriate service. A large congregation was present, and each person was given a carnation to wear in honor of mother. The following program was given under the direction of the pastor, Jehu Reagan:

Devotional.

Song, "My Mother's Prayer"—Choir.

Recitation, "Mothers' Day"—Bessie Reagan.

"The Mothers of the Bible"—Rhoda Roberts.

"A Mother's Influence"—Lydia Dixon.

Solo, "Tell Mother I'll be there"—Hattie Carey.

"A Mother's Responsibility in Temperance Training"—Eva Jessup.

"What the World Owes to Mothers"—Henry M. Symons.

"A Girl's Duty to her Mother"—Muriel Whiting.

"A Boy's Duty to his Mother"—Don F. Carey.

The papers were interesting and well prepared, and the occasion one of helpfulness.

Penn College Notes

President David M. Edwards was one of the delegates appointed by Governor Clark, of Iowa, to represent the state at the Fourth American Peace Congress, which assembled at St. Louis, May 1-3, inclusive.

Penn Commencement will, this year, constitute an event of unusual interest, inasmuch as Class '13 is larger by four than any previous class graduated from the institution. The Commencement address will be delivered by Ex-Governor Hadley, of Missouri. The Prize Oratorical Contest will occur Friday evening, June 6. The Department of Expression will give a recital Saturday evening, June 7. On Sabbath afternoon at four o'clock, President Edwards will deliver the Baccalaureate address. The Department of Music will give a recital Monday evening. Tuesday is Alumni day, and an unusually large number of Penn's Alumni will be present. The Senior Class Play will occur Tuesday evening. Class '13 will interpret Henrik Ibsen's "The Pillars of Society." The Commencement address will be delivered Wednesday, June 11, at ten o'clock a. m.

The students, faculty and friends of Penn College recently enjoyed the rare good fortune of hearing Mme. Harriet Labadie, the famous dramatic interpreter, in Penn chapel, in her interpretation of Percy MacKaye's psychological production, "Tomorrow." Mme. Labadie is perhaps, the most famous interpreter before the public today, and the Department of Expression consider themselves fortunate to be able to arrange a date with one who usually visits only large cities on this her world tour.

John Pierpont Morgan began his will with these words: "I commit my soul into the hands of my Savior, in full confidence that, having redeemed it and washed it in His most precious blood, He will present it faultless before the throne of my Heavenly Father; and I entreat my children to maintain and defend, at all hazard and at all cost of personal sacrifice, the blessed doctrine of the complete atonement for sin through the blood of Jesus Christ, once offered, and through that alone."

New Books Received

"Curious Bits of History," by Albert W. Macy. Publishers, the Cosmopolitan Press, New York. Price, $1.00, net.

This is an entertaining and varied collection of short episodes and unique sketches from the history of all nations. The author, who is an alumnus of Earlham College, has done much to infuse new interest in historical acts, which to many a youth has seemed to be dry reading. The book which contains 225 pages, deals especially with the "oddities" of history, but is instructive as well as entertaining. It resembles somewhat "the human nature" stories which so frequently characterize modern journalism, and seems to give a new insight into the human side of that oft times mysterious and complex record we call history.

"Henry Stanley Newman at Leominster," a booklet of twenty-three pages, containing the substance of a paper read at a gathering of the Men's Adult School, held in the dining room at Buckfield, Leominster, England, December 28, 1912. Published by the Orphans' Printing Press of Leominster. Price 12 cents. Orders can be given to Friends' Book and Tract Committee, 144 East Twentieth Street, New York City.

The booklet is both a tribute and a biographical sketch. It deals briefly with the early life and personal characteristics of Henry Stanley Newman, and quite naturally devotes large space to his establishment of the Leominster Orphan Homes and the Adult School of his home town. Interesting sketches are copied from the reports of H. S. Newman concerning the operation of these two institutions which were so near his heart. The booklet is most entertaining as well as instructive, and is brief enough to avoid the tiresomeness so frequently found in larger biographies. It is a work which should be read by young Friends bent upon understanding better modern English methods.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

JUNE 1.

TOPIC—The Ideal Christian. VI. His Bible-Study. Deut. 6: 1-9. (Monthly Consecration meeting.)

For the sixth time since January first, last, Christian Endeavorers are called upon to consider "The Ideal Christian." Following the successive sub-heads, "Evangelism," "His Zeal," "His Practical Service," "His Humility," and "His Prayers," consideration of "His Bible-study" is now asked.

In the lesson text, the keeping of God's commandments and obedience to them form the basis of prosperity, temporal and spiritual. "That it may be well with thee, and that ye may increase mightily," was the promised reward to Israel.

The value of Bible-study may be recognized by the fact that Old Testament Scripture is so frequently quoted and referred to by Christ and by the Apostles. "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures," were Christ's own words to those who were quibbling over holy matters. "Christ interpreted to them (His disciples) in all the scriptures the things concerning Himself."

At Thessalonica, Paul for three Sabbath days reasoned with the people out of the scriptures. Regarding the residents of Berea, the writer of the Acts declares them to be "more noble than those in Thessalonica, in that they received the word with all readiness of mind, examining the scriptures daily." A certain Jew named Apollos was declared to be "mighty in the Scriptures."

In modern times, Bible-study is one of the most important elements in Christian training and service. The rapid growth in the circulation of the Bible at home and in all lands, attests its value as a light to guide the footsteps of man.

Every Christian Endeavor society ought to adopt some systematic course in Bible study for its members. It has been suggested that while the Bible should be read through, it should be studied book by book, rather than text by text or chapter by chapter. In no other way can there be a comprehensive understanding of each writer.

At the prayer meeting, let the members quote favorite passages from the Bible, and comment upon them as a means of personal blessing.

The number of newspapers printed in the United States in 1912 was 22,837.

Friendswood Academy Commencement

Friendswood Academy at Friendsville, Texas, closed a successful year's work by graduating a class of seven on May 1. Professor D. W. Lawrence and Miss Mary E. Kelly were the teachers. Professor Lawrence preached the baccalaureate sermon on Sunday morning, April 27th.

Tuesday evening the undergraduates gave a play entitled "Mr. Bob." Wednesday evening was the Alumni meeting, at which Professor F. H. Clark delivered a fine, scholarly address on the subject, "What." The theme was, "What is it that makes a life successful?"

On Thursday evening the Commencement exercises were held. The large room was well filled with people from all the towns and country around and they were well entertained. The following orations were given by the class:

HER "BEST" FRIEND A Woman Thus Speaks of Postum

We usually consider our best friends those who treat us best.

Some persons think coffee a real friend, but watch it carefully awhile and observe that it is one of the meanest of all enemies, for it stabs one while professing friendship.

Coffee contains a poisonous drug—caffeine—which injures the delicate nervous system and frequently sets up disease in one or more organs of the body, if its use is persisted in.

"I had heart palpitation and nervousness for four years and the doctor told me the trouble was caused by coffee. He advised me to leave it off, but I thought I could not," writes a Wis. lady.

"On the advice of a friend I tried Postum, and it so satisfied me I did not care for coffee after a few days' trial of Postum.

"As weeks went by and I continued to use Postum my weight increased from 98 to 118 pounds, and the heart trouble left me. I have used it a year now and am stronger than I ever was. I can hustle up stairs without any heart palpitation, and I am free from nervousness.

"My children are very fond of Postum and it agrees with them. My sister liked it when she drank it at my house; now she has Postum at home and has become very fond of it. You may use my name if you wish, as I am not ashamed of praising my best friend—Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum now comes in new concentrated form called Instant Postum. It is regular Postum, so processed at the factory that only the soluble portions are retained.

A spoonful of Instant Postum with hot water, and sugar and cream to taste, produce instantly a delicious beverage.

Write for the little book, "The Road to Wellville."

The Class address was given by Dr. J. L. Dickens, president of Asgard College, South Huston.

This academy is the only Friends' school in the state, and we believe it is filling its mission in giving the young people a guarded Christian education. There are now nineteen graduates, and there are quite a number who did not complete the course.

There seems to be a good prospect for next year. Miss Kelly left for her home at Wilmington, Ohio. Professor and Mrs. Lawrence will reside at Friendswood, having purchased a home there.

Guarding the Citadel

SENTINEL at the loose-swung door of my impetuous lips,
Guard close today!
Make sure no word unjust or cruel slips
In anger forth, by folly spurred or armed with envy's whips;
Keep clear the way today.

And watchmen on the cliff-scarred heights that lead from heart to mind,
When wolf-thoughts, clothed in guile's soft fleece creep up, O be not blind!
But may they pass whose foreheads bear the glowing seal-word "kind,"
Bid them God-speed I pray.

And warden of my soul's stained house where love and hate are born,
O make it clean, if swept it must be with pain's rough broom of thorn!
And quiet impost, so straining ears with world-din racked and torn
May catch what God doth say.

Increasing Our Subscription List

We are extremely anxious that a determined canvass be made during the month of June, in all Friends communities in America, for new subscriptions, both to the paper and to the Church at large.

As a special offer, we will receive new subscriptions throughout June for the remainder of this year for 75 cents. All who subscribe now will get the paper seven months for this amount. Will not all pastors, agents and others interested busy themselves for the next 30 days in a determined effort in behalf of the AMERICAN FRIEND?

We will furnish subscription blanks and all necessary information to those who will make an active canvass of their local meeting.

During the last two weeks 33 new names have been added to the list. We feel grateful for this steady growth, but for the next 30 days, they should come in at the rate of 50 per day. Now is the time to push the canvass.

Meanwhile we ask all who know themselves to be delinquent to make an effort to remit early in June.

Dublin Yearly Meeting

From letters received, and from other sources, we would judge that the recent Dublin Yearly Meeting was an occasion of unusual interest. While belated, we hope to have a brief report of the proceedings by next week.

CORRESPONDENCE

A Letter From Old England

Dear Friends in America:

Our work throughout Great Britain has been very pleasant indeed. Leanah Hobson and I have attended peace meetings in Liverpool, suffragist meetings in London, the General Meeting in Scotland, Dublin Yearly Meeting, and go to London Yearly Meeting this week.

In all these places there were opportunities to meet with young people and children, to speak to mothers' meetings, medical missions and adult schools. God has opened the way for service and we have been wonderfully blessed.

There were seventy-five young Friends present at Dublin Yearly Meeting. We had two public meetings and also a Breakfast and social times together. The report of the Young Friends Association was most heartily received by the Yearly Meeting, and they were assured of the support of that body.

I go to Jordans the week end preceding London Yearly Meeting, to attend a meeting of the Young Friends Sub. Committee. While our problems in America are different, thus calling for different methods, yet there is that sweet fellowship which exists when Friend meets Friend, because the spirit of Christ is within.

We have a mistaken idea of Woodbrooke in America. It is not a school, but a Settlement for theological and social study and research. "Woodbrooke teaches us to have freedom and an enlarged heart in Christ; to put first things first," to spend much time at the feet of Jesus, learning from Him who is the source of all knowledge and truth and blessing. Living here surrounded by the beauties of nature, and in the wholesome atmosphere of Christian love and fellowship, we go away saying from the depths of our hearts, "Surely God was in that place," and that "it was good to have been there."

How can I ever thank the dear Friends who have made all this possible? There is only one way, and that is by giving to Him my best. I am joining with others in prayer for our Winona Conference. I hope to meet many at Winona July 23-30. With best wishes and greetings from over the sea,

LILLIAN E. HAYES.

Woodbrooke, Sully Oak, Birmingham, England.

"An Ambulance Down in the Valley"

'Twas a dangerous cliff, as they freely confessed,
Though to walk near its crest was so pleasant;
But over its terrible edge there had slipped

A duke and full many a peasant.

So the people said something would have to be done,
But their projects did not at all tally.

Some, "Put a fence around the edge of the cliff,"
Some, "An ambulance down in the valley."

But the cry for the ambulance carried the day,
And it spread through the neighboring city;

A fence may be useful or not, it is true,

But each heart became brimful of pity

For those who slipped over that dangerous cliff.

And the dwellers in highway and alley

Gave pounds or gave pence, not to put up a fence,

But an ambulance down in the valley.

Then an old sage remarked: "It's a marvel to me,

That people give far more attention

To repairing results than to stopping the cause,

When they'd better aim at prevention.

Let us stop at its source all this mischief," cried he,

"Come, neighbors and friends, let us rally;

If the cliff we will fence, we might almost dispense

With the ambulance down in the valley."

"Oh, he's a fanatic," the other rejoined;

"Dispense with the ambulance? Never!

He'd dispense with all charities, too; if he could.

No, no, we'll support them forever!

Aren't we picking up folks just as fast as they fall?

And shall this man dictate to us? Shall he?

Why should people of sense stop to put up a fence,

While the ambulance works in the valley?"

—Joseph Malins in Kansas City Star.

The sick need one to make them whole, the wanderer one to guide them, the blind one to lead them, the thirsty the living fountain whereof they that partake shall thirst no more; the dead are in need of life, the sheep of the shepherd, and the children of the teacher; but all mankind needs Jesus.—Clement of Alexandria.

The Spiritual Life

"Seek the things that are above, where Christ is."—R. V. Col. 3: 1.

A contemporary defines spirituality as "a quick and vital sense of God." Yet how few there are among the masses who really make their relationship to the Father the foremost experience in their lives! With many persons, their apprehension of God is somewhat dim and uncertain and their sense of religious responsibility is correspondingly indistinct. Their vision is mainly of the material world, business, pleasure, the social realm, with corresponding forgetfulness of the things of the spirit.

The truly spiritual life is not incompatible with the highest ideal of a practical life. Christ was a normal man no less than perfect God, who manifested His obedience to the Father by ministering to the temporal as well as the spiritual needs of humanity about Him. He who is able to hold perfect communion with Jehovah is best equipped to serve his day and generation, is best able to touch the springs of human influence most effectively.

But always the vision of God must fill the soul as the inspiration for earth's best endeavor. Dependence upon the divine must be constantly realized as the well spring of human achievement. The Holy Spirit must be not only a Comforter, but a Guide that marks the path of duty through the intricacies of daily life.

Everything depends upon where the emphasis of life is laid; whether on things material or things spiritual. yet it is one of the seeming paradoxes of human experience that he who is most spiritual in the highest sense, he who lives nearest to the heart of God, is best able to do the world's work, is most capable of using the material so as to better humanity and glorify the Creator. But the emphasis can never change. The aspirations must all be Godward, as they will be when the purpose is fixed to "seek the things that are above." "But seek ye first his kingdom, and his righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."

If only men could realize that Jesus is at their side ready to help when temptation is presented or when affliction threatens, there would be far fewer to yield to surrounding circumstances.

A Great Modern Problem—No. 3

It may well be questioned whether we have not reached a lawless age. The tendency of a multitude apparently is to disregard the binding force of any statute that interferes with their selfish inclinations. Chief among these are the elements in our body politic that embody the grosser systems of evil, which cry as did the man of unclean spirit, "let us alone."

Possibly the tendency to disregard the majesty of the law is in part a reflex of the Puritanism of the early days; possibly in part the abnormal outgrowth of our democracy wherein every man is a sovereign. In greater degree, however, it is apparently the direct effect of our political mechanism, which all too often is willing to pander to the selfishness of human nature if not its criminality, in return for the votes which it can command.

In how many of our municipalities is there either the strict enforcement or the strict observance of the statutes designed to protect both the moral and the material interests of the public? Many a city administration owes its election to its promise to allow "a wide-open town." The worst thing about such systems as the liquor traffic, the social evil and gambling, is not that they refuse to be bound by any law or ordinance, but that a public sentiment exists which insures the election of officials pledged to grant them this liberty. All too often the average "good citizen" knows too little about the connection between the city hall and the red light district, or the gambling rooms or the rum dens of the city.

But beyond all this, the plea of the depraved for "personal liberty" has its counterpart in many smaller infractions of the law. The speeding of automobiles, the violation of Sabbath ordinances, the failure to keep premises clean, the non-observance of the rules of health, laxness in the rental of property and other like delinquencies, all give encouragement for the grosser infractions that endanger public morals.

Lawlessness is a national evil which the church of Christ must face and correct by the development of a moral conscience, that will demand obedience to constituted authority, which must ever exercise a guardianship over both the moral and material welfare of the people.

The Strength and Weakness of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting

BY ISAAC SHARPLESS

(Copied from The Westonian.)

[Under the above heading, The Westonian publishes a paper prepared by Isaac Sharpless, President of Haverford College, and read by him at the anniversary of Twelfth Street Meeting House in Philadelphia. While dealing primarily with a Yearly Meeting that as yet is not a member of the Five Years Meeting, it contains so much of value to the whole church, both of history and modern suggestion, that we feel it should have a wider circulation. Hence its publication in part in THE AMERICAN FRIEND. It should be read by every Friend in America, and whether its conclusions are wholly accepted or not, it cannot fail to have a broadening and quickening influence upon the entire denomination.—THE EDITOR.]

It is a function of a true church to touch life at every point.

If this tends to a church democracy within ourselves it is well. If it tends to aught of an aristocratic feeling towards any within or without the fold it is fundamentally opposed to one of the choicest heirlooms of the Society. The hat, the singular pronoun, the equal address and manner before high and low, the feeling of brotherhood among all men, were the deepest convictions, sealed with martyrdom of the first Friends. In so far as we have departed, not from the symbols necessarily, but from the spirit behind them we are false to our best estate.

If there is any provincial feeling in any meeting which makes it forget its duty to throw itself into the general work of the Society, or which makes it approach the problems of crime and poverty and misfortune around in a paternal rather than a fraternal spirit, it is a sign of degeneracy and misconception. The class sentiment is easily nurtured, almost unconsciously to its possessors. It is not incompatible with great goodness, high intellectuality and gracious manners. It is often visible to others when unknown by its associates, but it stands in the way of really first-rate philanthropic work. It is not incompatible with effective membership on the boards of charity organizations and commissions to investigate slums and tenderloins. But even here its usefulness is limited by its incapacity to feel the conditions of those for whom it works. It is essentially unsympathetic with the objects of its solicitude. "Our meeting houses are open at the regular times; the people may come if they wish to," said a good Friend, when the needs of the poor for spiritual and material sympathy were mentioned. But if one is to do such work as the Lighthouse in Kensington is doing, it means something more than offering aid at a distance, whether that distance is without or within the heart of the giver.

Our Yearly Meeting has been somewhat slow to take up this personally effective work. For a time there was the honest fear that man-directed work would hurt the higher ideals, which preserved our meetings for worship, and now that this is somewhat modified, the love of personal comfort unblushingly comes to the front as a sufficient excuse. The demands of modern business necessarily so acute require a day of rest once a week. The family duties crowded out by the strenuous life allow no time for unselfish work. And so many reasons, oftentimes legitimate, take the place of the pleas of the Hebrews that they have married a wife or bought a yoke of oxen. When we have made our fortune, when our time is more largely at our command, we will atone for past neglect. But by that time our habits are set and other engagements are usually at hand.

The advice given to our young people a generation ago from the gallery was two-fold, to attend meetings regularly and to heed faithfully the monitions of the inward voice,—most excellent and effective counsels. For certain temperaments this was sufficient to produce a saintly consecrated life. We all have a certain amount of this mystical capacity, mixed in varied degrees with the practical element. The prophetic ministry, the emphasis on introversion of spirit, and a conscientious heed to the smaller manifestations of duty were just the stimuli needed for those whose tendencies were strongly interior. That they did not fully meet the needs of the other class is manifest by many a worldly life, many a nominal Quaker. A regular attendance at meetings, even when no conscious communion was held, has steadied many a man and definitely influenced character, but the growth has been far below the possibilities of the best development.

The young man just starting in business is the critical problem. He has many healthy tendencies;—many experiences which he does not often unfold to others. But secular duties are pressing, business success hangs in the balance and every atom of energy seems needed to carry him over the times of crisis. He will in time he thinks, take up the serious religious and social duties which he recognizes must complete a wholesome and normal life. The demands of recreation seem imperative and, save an hour at meeting, his life is constituted of business and pleasure. The camp, the canoe trip, golf and the automobile, the social party and the theater, absorb all the available time to be spared from the grind of week-day duty. And so the days when habit and character are formed pass by, the spiritual faculties are atrophied, and too late the man finds that all he can be is an honorable man of business for whom physical comfort and pleasure are necessities of life. By that time he has forgotten the aspirations and intentions of his youth.

Something more than meeting-going is necessary to meet these conditions. Every young man can find an evening a week or an hour or two on First-day to give to work which will place him in direct contact with those who need his personal aid, not money but intellectual and spiritual sympathy and fraternity, for a man always finds time for that in which he is most interested. He will begin to appreciate the real meaning of social service. He will know the ills and diseases of society, and life for him will have a new meaning. He will come to his religious meetings and his Friendly conferences with something to give and something definite to learn. The voice of God seeking him will find a response in his own voice seeking God. The reaction from those whom he has aided in a spirit of kindness will mean more to him than the old meeting held in deadness of spirit. The glow of well directed duty will be the means of wakening his faculties, and directing their growth, God's means adapted to his needs as a practical man of affairs. Our great weakness now is not unsoundness of doctrine, or false ideals of meetings for worship or serious immorality of living, but lives wholly given to business and pleasure and devoid of other worldliness, and this situation cannot be wholly met by appeals to individual faithfulness in the old lines of Friendly duty.

There is a large line of work of recent years for the improvement of social conditions in cities with which Friends have had but little to do. Our leadership in moral reform in matters like war, oaths, slavery, penal reform and so on, has hardly extended to this field. We have given to foreign missionary work of late with considerable earnestness, but the great city of Philadelphia lying around us with all its vices and weaknesses, has not dwelt with us with equal insistence. The modern manifestations of this effort are scientific, reaching conditions as well as individuals, and dealing with prevention as well as cure. We have a number of charities, some endowed, many of them coming down from the past, some of which have hardly felt the impulse which has carried many other bodies into successful and vigorous efforts, under systematic guidance, for really efficient moralizing and educational movements. One small institution which has undertaken this in a modern way has received, perhaps by its own fault, rather scant hospitality and is supported by Friends more meagerly than its demands for workers and money seem to require. And yet in this Quaker city is there anybody which ought to feel more deep responsibility for conditions than the Quakers? And have we nothing to learn from the recent development of study and inquiry into the problems of vice, crime, poverty and irreligion? (Is not this appeal applicable in greater or less degree in scores of other cities and towns where Friends have a share of responsibility for the moral and spiritual welfare of the people? — THE EDITOR.)

Another matter which has favored rather narrow interpretation of our duties and responsibilities is our isolation in the family of Yearly Meetings. Certainly no one wishes to go over the contests of a century or a half century ago, and make or demand apologies for any actions then committed. But the movements which in whole or in part have modified the Society of Friends in England and the West, for better or for worse, have been largely without our guidance or influence. There was a large meeting recently in Indianapolis, which took up a list of problems in which we are interested. The conclusions were nearly all in directions which would have been approved by Philadelphia Friends. But Philadelphia Friends had less influence in producing these results than other meetings, smaller in numbers and perhaps in other sources of influence. "Hang thyself, brave Crillon," said Henry of Navarre to a favorite general, "for we fought at Arques and thou wast not there." It may be that the policy that once led to our isolation was wise in its day. I would not dispute it now. But is it not time to touch the life of other bodies in other ways than by example? It is not necessary to include recognition, only sympathetic aid when it would be welcomed, in the solution of serious problems.

Have we at heart an interest in fundamental Quakerism so deep that we are willing to risk it from under a bushel? Our attitude is reacting on ourselves. It is creating an insular feeling which cuts us off from the larger life of the denomination, and helps to give us a tinge of exclusiveness and Yearly Meeting selfishness which is probably not wholesome.

Unique Northfield

In these days when so many believe that the Church is losing its power, and falter when they see the corruption and evil of the cities, it is a pleasure and an inspiration to visit Northfield and to realize that pessimism is not the key-note of present day religion. The atmosphere and natural setting would make Northfield a favorite rendezvous were these its only charms, but when many speakers of world-wide fame are added, it is no wonder that the number of visitors increases yearly. Special Bible studies and lectures began May 6th at Mount Hermon School, where they will be given almost continuously until June 20th, when students from over one hundred men's institutions gather at Northfield. Conference after conference follows in quick succession through the summer until the first two weeks of August, when the large Auditorium is filled with Christian workers from all parts of the country. Between August 18th and October 1st, Post Conference addresses will be given by eminent Bible teachers. This year the list of speakers includes a large number of favorites, some of whom have not been at Northfield for several years.

The dates for the different Conferences to be held this summer are announced as follows:

Summer Bible School and Special Lectures at the Northfield Schools, May 6 to September 30.

Northfield Seminary Commencement, June 7-10.

Student Conference, June 20-29.

Young Women's Conference, July 2-9.

Summer School for Women's Foreign Missionary Societies, July 10-17.

Home Missionary Conference, July 18-24.

Summer School for Sunday School Workers, July 19-26.

General Conference of Christian Workers, August 1-17.

Troublesome Times in Old Mexico

Last week we referred briefly to the deplorable conditions which Friends Missions in Mexico are facing, due to the war-like situation in that country. We publish herewith the letters written by Raymond S. Holding to General Secretary Charles E. Tebbetts, giving the details of the situation at Cedral and Matehuala. The reader will notice the awful change in conditions which took place inside of two days, between the writing of the first and second letters.

Recent Letters From Matehuala

Dear Mr. Tebbetts:

APRIL 25, 1913.

I am glad to report some satisfactory meetings this week. We have had with us the General Secretary of the United Christian Endeavor societies for three days, and have had some very encouraging meetings. He too was to have been with us in our Annual Meeting, but was unable to get here until now. Travel is difficult and dangerous. One of the results of the meetings was that we received twelve people into church membership. That was one part of the program that we had reserved for our Annual Meeting, but since we did not get to carry it out, we made it one of the special features of the meetings that closed last night. There are more members of the candidates class that will soon be ready to be received.

The schools have never done as well as they are doing at present. Almost two hundred in the school here. La Paz is getting almost double the tuition that was paid in last year. Cedral likewise is waking up.

We hear bad rumors all the time of increasing bands that are gathering about our city. But as that is the normal condition, we are getting inured to it. We hear that the railroad will be open through to the North very soon.

Very sincerely,

RAYMOND S. HOLDING.

Dear Chas. E. Tebbetts:

APRIL 30, 1913.

It will be rather a difficult task to describe the scenes that have terrorized the people of Matehuala during the last three days, but I will endeavor to give thee a few of the particulars in order that you may know the facts.

Sunday morning I went to Cedral, arriving there at seven o'clock and intending to spend the day there and return on Monday. Our train was stopped just before arriving by a band of rebel soldiers. I jumped off the back end of the train before it stopped as the street was full of soldiers, and found my way down town through some of the side streets, not knowing exactly what movement was on foot. The rebels, about three hundred, went down to the main part of town, most of them mounted on good horses, where they immediately secured the surrender of the town. They at once made a demand for $20,000.00 of the principal citizens, threatening to exterminate all the people of means if their requests were not complied with. Armed men went all over the town, and brought anyone that was supposed to have money, and they were held until the money was produced. No one refused, and by noon they had nearly $15,000.00.

There were two Americans besides myself in Cedral. Each of them had to give about six or seven hundred dollars. One employee of one of the wealthy men was unable to satisfy their demands, and he was taken outside the town and beaten senseless and left. The police were all disarmed and the arms were taken by the Rebels. No resistance was offered at all, and they went on their way headed for Matehuala. They took as prisoners with them, the City Mayor and another citizen whom they ordered to go ahead of them to Matehuala and ask for the surrender of the city in their name. The authorities here arrested the two messengers, and imprisoned them, refusing to surrender and prepared to make a defense.

The Rebels arrived at about five o'clock in the afternoon and began firing on some of the central buildings, where some Federal soldiers were stationed. As there were only about twenty regular soldiers and as many more city police, some of the citizens began to prepare for the attack. Perhaps in all there were about one hundred. The Rebels kept up the firing until nine o'clock and then ceased for a short time, then renewed the bombarding until about three o'clock in the morning and stopped again until five.

Mrs. Holding and the children went over to the College and joined Miss Lindley who was almost alone. As it was Sunday, all the teachers had gone to their homes, and could not return. Throughout the night the bullets buzzed over and through the house. I have examined one window and found twenty holes in it. Some of the Federal soldiers climbed onto our house, and the church from which they were firing at the Rebels. This no doubt enraged the Rebels. I was in Cedral, but could hear the faint roar of the cannon of the Rebels. But it will take Miss Lindley and Mrs. Holding to tell you what they passed through that Sunday night. If I, at fifteen miles range, was in terrible suspense, what must they have suffered? Little Helen was frightened most to death.

Monday morning the firing was vigorous on both sides, and lasted until 10 o'clock when the city surrendered. All the strategic positions had already been taken by the Rebels, and some of the leading citizens killed, and some taken prisoners. They ended up the attack by taking the jail and by setting the prisoners free. Then the most horrible part of the affair began. That was the looting and burning. Hundreds of miners had come down from La Paz, one of the neighboring villages, ready for the occasion. A large portion of the twenty thousand inhabitants of Matehuala were in readiness. Usually the buildings were not set on fire until emptied of most of their contents. The mix-up was indescribable. Men, women and children carrying such loads as they perhaps never carried before; some even with their burros loaded; others carrying great bags of beans, corn or sugar gave way under the burden and would have to drop it and have to call for help. Intoxicants were as free as water. Many drank so much that they were unable to get home with the coveted prize. Beds, furniture, sewing machines and large mirrors were carried off in great profusion. Some of the most ridiculous sights were to be seen. One poor old woman who perhaps had never had for a bed more than a straw mat was trudging off with a piece of a fine brass bedstead, though she perhaps had not enough to complete a bed, the bright and attractive design appealed to her. Others, after having carried to their homes a reasonable supply would peddle some of the more necessary articles around over town and sell them at a very low price. After a store had been emptied of all the contents, they set it on fire. The owners were oftentimes hidden away among the refuse or on the roof of the building where they either perished, or as some of them did, made an almost miraculous escape. One poor Spaniard fought from the top of the building near his house, but was killed. The Rebels threw him from the top of the building where he was trampled to pieces by the mounted soldiers, and later on fire was applied to make the revenge as cruel as possible. There seemed to be special revenge manifested against the Spaniards in more than one case. About all the stores in one block were owned by Spaniards and not one escaped. Some of the prisoners were stood up in line and shot, or a few shot in order that the rest would be more submissive to their plans. The few Federal soldiers fought heroically, but not one was left. It is calculated that fifty persons perished and the loss in merchandise and cash will amount to $500,000.00 besides the destruction of more than a score of the best buildings. About $125,000.00 in cash was carried off. They worked on the safe in the bank nearly two days before they were able to open it.

Monday morning, while the firing was still on, some of the Americans came in from the American Smelter and took Mrs. Holding and the children out of town. They were held up three times and at the point of the musket roughly questioned as to who they were and as to where they were going. Two Englishmen walked at the side of the buggy and acted as escort. They were relieved of their extra cash in the meantime. They arrived, however, safely at the Smelter which is situated at the edge of the city, where most all the foreigners were gathered, and remained until Wednesday morning.

I arrived from Cedral Wednesday morning, entirely ignorant of the whereabouts of Mrs. Holding and the children, but soon learned where they were. There was some doubt as to the advisability of going down town, but we were anxious to get home. The street cars were not running, so we walked. There were not, nor are there as yet, any authorities; not a single policeman, soldier or city official. Those that escaped are most all in hiding at present. So we were at the mercy of the mob that still thronged the streets, no doubt in hopes that some of the stores would be opened up and another chance would be given them to carry off the things that they "had the right to." The walls were still falling where in the meantime people were digging in the ruins pulling out such articles as might be found.

We found our home, the church and college practically unharmed, excepting a few broken window lights and a generous lot of bullet holes. The church and the Mission home were quite advantageous positions for the Federals and they thus employed them. Miss Lindley told them that it would endanger life and property, but the only answer was that the cause was about lost and that a desperate effort had to be made. Mrs. Holding and the children as well as Miss Lindley were completely exhausted, for they had eaten very little, and scarcely slept for three nights. The first thing we did upon arriving was to prepare something to eat, though there was not much to be had. The meat that had been shut up in the market all that time was not very tempting and all the stores that were worthy of the name had been destroyed except one and it was locked up. No milk to be had in town, but we had some rice and dry bread and that was not so bad.

We were unable to have meeting last night. When the Rebels left town they left chaos, desolation and anarchy behind them. We have no authorities, nor is there anyone that wants the responsibility. Most of the law-abiding citizens are getting out of town. The jail and all the offices were burned. The Jefe Politico (mayor) was killed, as was one of the other leading officials.

While I write, one of the American boys comes in and says that the Smelter people have just received word by telegram to get all the women and children out of the country. Miss Lindley and Mrs. Holding and the children will have to join the expedition. Several of them have narrowly escaped death already and some think that the worst has not yet come. I will try and shape things at once so as to follow later. Hardly know how to shape things.

Sincerely thine,

RAYMOND S. HOLDING.

Everett E. Morgan III

Word has been received that Everett E. Morgan of the Matamoras (Mexico) Mission, who went to Battle Creek, Michigan, a few weeks ago, seeking to regain his health, has suffered an apoplectic stroke at the Sanitarium there. His condition is thought to be critical.

How shall we help the life of the future? Simply by putting wisdom and love into our own life and into human affairs. All genuine virtue is vital and vitalizing: it carries in it the power of God to conquer evil and establish righteousness. It is a living seed, holding in itself interminable harvest of its own kind. Planted in human society, it will bear fruits of welfare through the centuries.—Charles G. Ames.

BY MARY DOAN HOLE

Concerning the Quaker Message on Peace

A Distinctive Message

It is generally accepted that we have a distinctive message. Yesterday an article written by a Friend on the subject of peace came to my notice. It was entitled, "War from the Christian Standpoint," and was supposed by the one who handed it to me to be "from the Christian, not the peculiarly Quaker" viewpoint. As I write this I recall the introductory remarks of a great American historian who a few years ago read to a small company an article on peace. This article was about to be forwarded to the Forum, the publishers of which had asked him to write it for that magazine. Now this scholar prefaced his reading of the learned disquisition by saying that lest some one there might misconstrue his meaning, he would explain that he had no reference to the "peace at any cost" of the Friends; that his was not the Quaker view of peace.

Recently a college student who had been reared in a Quaker home showed me his essay on "The Prince of Peace," saying that in it he had declared that America must secure and maintain peace if she has to fight for it! It is not my purpose to endeavor to discuss the topics suggested in the above sentences further than to quote them as introductory to some thoughts on the duties belonging peculiarly to Friends in spreading the gospel of peace.

Negative

"Thou shalt not kill," the divine law given to the Hebrews, was understood by them in that early day to mean: Thou shalt not commit murder—one man shall not take the life of another man; not, one body of men shall not be drawn up in front of another body of men and shoot with bow or wield the spear.

It is an interesting study to observe how the nations of the civilized world have come gradually to say, "Thou shalt not commit murder," meaning one man shall not kill another man in personal conflict or in dueling; not, one body of men shall not draw up in conflict against another body of men. "Nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more," has been enjoyed by the world of culture as a prophecy of a far-off Utopia in a time when the situation is entirely different from ours; not as a suggestion covering present-day possibilities. To the Friend, "Thou shalt not kill," has meant, singly or in gathered companies men must not strive to take the life of others. To the Friend the law of the state,

"Thou shalt not murder," is inadequate unless it means personal quarreling and dueling and the contending of men in companies of soldiers; all shall not be lawful. The words, "Nation shall not lift up sword against nation," is to the Friend not only Hebrew prophecy, to him it is a divine command handed on by the Hebrew prophet.

Positive

"Thou shalt love thy neighbor," to a Friend means the other man and the other nation. "Love your enemies," means to the Friend personal enemies and just as truly the unco-operative nations also. "He hath made of one blood all the nations of the earth," to the Friend is a fundamental truth; it is the strongest kind of command, covering the attitude which ought to hold among nations. Any one who feels it profitable or of interest, has only to turn to the uniform Discipline to find the list of texts upon which the consistent Friend founds his peace doctrine. Enforcing all these texts, there is to the Friend the voice within which assures him that war of any and every sort is incompatible with the Christian life. The Spirit of Christ and the spirit of war cannot rule in the same heart.

The Return to Primitive Christianity

It happened in their following of the light within that Friends found themselves practicing the same simplicity and strictness in daily living that history shows us was practiced by the early Christians. In this "return to primitive Christianity" the convictions of a certain group of men in the seventeenth century were found to be very much like the convictions of the early followers of Christ on the subject of war. It would not be difficult to multiply quotations from these early Christians who questioned over and over, "How will a Christian man war without the sword which the Lord has taken away?" Their frequent saying, "I am a Christian and cannot fight," voiced their actual attitude. It is not strange that with this universal putting up of the sword by the followers of Christ during the first two hundred years, some of them should have concluded that the day was very near when the nations should learn war no more. Recent events in Australia lead us to believe that the faith of the early Christians and the faith of those who in the seventeenth century took to themselves the name of Friends is manifesting itself in a remarkable testimony against war and for peace in that land which is now in its testing time on these questions.

Friends' Views on Increase of Armaments

"Though we have put on the garments of peace and honor, have been softened by Christianity, and have striven nearer to altruism in thought and act, the great fundamental underlying passions and springs of action in men are the same today as they were when Cain slew Abel. Human nature in the mass has changed little or none since the days of the Pharaohs."

This was the declaration in his speech at the Navy League convention in Washington, April 10, 1913, by the captain of the dreadnought which was the pennant ship of the fleet in the great naval parade on the Hudson last October.

This introduction to a plea for a rapid increase of our present navy does not appeal to the Friend. The Friend knows the power of the transformed life to bring harmony out of quarrel. The Friend knows that the "issues of life" are "out of the heart," and that nations have been able to put on "the garments of peace and honor," and "have been softened by Christianity" in so far as the springs of action have been begotten by the Prince of Peace. That is why Friends can be hopeful in spite of such statements as the one quoted above.

"When we seek the establishment of lasting and universal peace, we meet an element more elusive, more incalculable, more difficult of conquest than time or space or air, a condition more unchanged, unchanging, and unchangeable than any other in recorded history—human nature."

While Senator Lodge uses these words as argument for our "going slowly on arbitration and fast on battleships," the Friend might well use them as a preface to his plea that only the spirit of Jesus of Nazareth can bring about the establishment of lasting and universal peace; it is stronger to settle disputes than the strongest navy of the world.

A Present-day Call to Peace Advocates

The eighty-fifth annual report of the American Peace Society, read at St. Louis on May 3d, reviews in one of its subdivisions the general aspect of international affairs as related to the peace movement. Certain of its sentences I shall take the liberty of placing in italics, because they ought to be accepted as a special message to those peace workers whose ancestry in the Society of Friends has prepared them for an understanding of the peace question in its higher aspects. One section of the report is as follows:

The events of the past year have not all been encouraging to the friends of peace. The disorder in Mexico has continued, and part of the time in the most savage and cruel form. It looked at one time as if intervention by the United States for the protection of American lives and property was inevitable, but because of the patience, self-restraint, and wisdom of our Government this was avoided, and it seems at the present writing as if order and peace would soon be restored. The revolution which was taking place in China at the time of our Annual Meeting last year proved to be almost a bloodless one, and the new republic has finally been formally inaugurated and is being recognized by other governments. This transformation in China gives promise of settled order and peace at an early date, and also, we may well hope, of the avoidance of further encroachments of several European powers on Chinese territory. The unfortunate war between Italy and Turkey in Tripoli has also finally come to an end, leaving behind its lesson of the inevitable injustice and legacy of hatred always bequeathed by war. The war between the Balkan Allies and Turkey, which broke out suddenly last autumn, and proved itself to be one of the most deadly and destructive campaigns of arms ever engaged in, has also practically spent itself. It has again demonstrated in a most conspicuous way the inherent savagery, inhumanity, and destructiveness of war, as well as its inevitableness where injustice, persecution, and cruelty are practiced during long periods of time. This desolating conflict has again taught the friends of peace the necessity of a wide-reaching popular campaign in favor of justice, mutual respect, trust, and brotherliness among nations and races as well as among individuals.

The recent fresh outbreak of militarism in Europe has been the most distressing and discouraging event of the year. The proposed increase of the armies and navies of Germany, France, Great Britain, and Russia, leads one to feel that militarism, with its fears, its scares, its panics, its increasing burdens, and exactions, has finally driven Europe insane, and one cannot help wondering how much longer this irrational and exhausting system can go on without resulting in a catastrophe such as civilization has not experienced in modern days. It is the clear duty of the peace party of the world to continue to insist not only upon the arbitration of all controversies between nations, but also to demand of the governments such a limitation and reduction of the overgrown military and naval establishments as will remove the constant peril which they are causing, and relieve the overburdened peoples of the crushing loads which the rivalry of armaments imposes upon them. In season and out of season, the campaign for these great ends must be carried on among all ranks and classes of society.

Shall Friends ever present anything less than the highest reason for peace?

That they must never fail to emphasize their own peculiar viewpoint goes without saying, but are Friends excused if they fail to include in their message any phases of the truth which may help unawakened men and women to a comprehension of the awful facts of war, or which may give fresh vigor to those already awake to the issues of peace?

(1) That the intolerable financial burden of war is one topic which is of popular interest, pro or con, no one questions; that through a discussion of this phase many may be led seriously to consider this great world sin, we cannot doubt. For instance, many who would not read our Friendly words on peace in the Discipline, can first be reached through a recital of what the money wasted on war might do for the world if turned into channels for the amelioration of the needs of mankind. The burden of wars, past and future, makes nations unable to educate "the masses" and to bring art galleries and great parks, and inspiring lecture courses and music to the "middle classes." It makes us unable to spend money according to any true standard of values.

(2) "War's financial burden is heavy," said the editor of the Toronto Globe in the address given in memory of W. T. Stead on the Sunday after the sinking of the Titanic, "but war's biological reaction is damage beyond repair. War wastes the hard-earned money of the people, but its waste of blood, its waste of human protoplasm, is waste not only of brave men who die, but the incalculable waste of whole generations of possible heroes who ought to have been, but are not,—that waste is wild and prodigal and never can be gathered up again."

These two topics just mentioned illustrate subjects on which the Friend must spend much time and thought if he is to interest the uninterested in the cause of peace.

Peace Association of Friends in America

Plans for the Future

At a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Peace Association held in Richmond on April 23, plans for future work were discussed, but the committee found itself unable to decide as to just what action should be taken on certain propositions because of the lack of information in regard to the desires and needs of the different communities that the Association is endeavoring to serve. Two definite lines of work were considered which may possibly yield large returns in increased interest in the peace reform if there is really a desire among those responsible for the work locally to take up such activities; namely, (1) the use of stereopticon slides for illustrating peace addresses, and (2) the circulation of books on the subject of peace.

Questions to be Answered

In view of the fact that the committee has no assurance that stereopticon slides or books would be called for and used if they were secured and offered, the president of the Association was authorized to ask readers of the AMERICAN FRIEND to send answers to the following questions:

1. Would you arrange to use sets of stereopticon slides in your neighborhood to illustrate peace addresses if they could be obtained for the cost of transportation charges only? Please give name of neighborhood and number of points at which the views could be used.

2. Would you like to receive as a loan copies of books on peace subjects if a complete, up-to-date circulating library were secured? What book would you like to receive first? When would you be ready to begin to use it?

The Executive Committee will consider it a favor if every one who reads these questions will send answer. Even if the answer is in the negative, it will be helpful to know the judgment of a large number of those interested in the work.

Ways of Working for Peace

1. The peace committee of Fairmount Quarterly Meeting of Friends, Fairmount, Indiana, prepared and submitted to the Quarterly Meeting a resolution protesting against legislation tending to increase the power of the Military department of the government. This resolution was endorsed by the Quarterly Meeting and forwarded to the Senators from Indiana, and the representative from the Congressional District in which Fairmount is located. Replies in sympathy with the views expressed in the resolution have been received from the representative and from one senator.

2. William C. Allen, of San Jose, California, is Secretary of the Interdenominational Peace Committee of the Pacific Coast Churches, an organization which is attempting to secure action by every Christian congregation on the Pacific Coast, urging our nation to open negotiations looking toward treaties of arbitration with all European and Oriental nations. He has also been busy with his pen, contributing recent articles to periodicals as follows: "The Church and War" in the California Christian Advocate for April 3; "Christianity and Militarism" in the January number of the British Columbia Magazine; and "War" in a recent number of the Church Review.

Annual Meeting of Friends in Japan

Although our Annual Meeting cannot properly be called a Yearly Meeting since we have as yet no regularly organized Monthly and Quarterly Meetings, it is a time of drawing close together in Christian fellowship, a time of deepening spiritual experiences, and a time of widening the vision of opportunities for service.

The eighteenth annual gathering was in Ishioka, from the 17th to the 21st of April. The reports covered a broad field of activity—evangelistic work; publications, which include "The Japanese Friend" and various Friends' biographies; First-day schools; Christian Endeavor; various local fellowship societies; a brotherhood; meetings for new Christians and inquirers; temperance, including Men's Societies, W. C. T. U., Y. W. C. T. U., and L. T. L.; peace and anti-tuberculosis work; women's aid societies, etc., and the Friends' Girls' High School.

The social part of the meeting centered in the house that Ishioka Friends had prepared for the entertainment of Friends from other meetings. Here we all stayed, and our comfort was looked after by the younger members of the local meeting. They served our meals (the cooks being hired); looked after our baggage, and the expense for each of us was only twenty cents a day! Here many came and went and found fellowship.

An evening lecture was given by Dr. Inazo Nitobe, the theme being the vanity of worldly estimates of the value of things. One hundred and fifty of the leading non-Christians of the town had been personally invited to be present, and many of them came. So conservative has been the spirit of the community, that the fifteen years of labor given by Friends there has seemed to make little impress. It was the subject of frequent prayer during the annual meeting that this meeting might have a powerful influence in breaking down the wall of opposition. Dr. Nitobe was also present and spoke acceptably in the meeting for worship on First-day.

The early morning prayer meetings held at six o'clock in a quiet wooded park were times of drawing near to God. Forgetful of self and the ordinary things of life, hearts were opened, spirits lifted to God, and blessings received.

One session stands out pre-eminent—the session devoted to consideration of the subject, "How to promote the growth of the church." Those who spoke were none of them ministers nor evangelists, nor those giving their whole time to Christian work. A sugar merchant, an oil merchant, a tailor, a student, a railroad man, a farmer, an elderly man, a man who has a home for feeble-minded boys, and two young business men all took part in the discussion. The first speaker struck the keynote when he said, "The Holy Spirit must be the power." Other thoughts brought out were the necessity of getting not only individuals but whole families to be Christians, so that there may be Christian homes; the importance of family visiting; individual responsibility of Christians in winning others; Christian education for children; carrying one's religion into business; faithful attendance at meetings; importance of humility, patience, purity, and prayer; personal work necessary; tent meetings at heathen festivals good opportunities for seed sowing; a Christian summer camp at the seaside was suggested; Christians must be filled with love, and love to be known as Christians; must be broad enough in our sympathies and social service to include non-Christians; great care in teaching children and the adolescent; importance of Bible study and spiritual worship. Over and over again the power of prayer was mentioned.

Progress Among the Indians

Editor of the American Friend:

DEAR FRIEND—The Associated Executive Committee on Indian Affairs has just been in session yesterday and today for its forty-fourth annual meeting. As has frequently been the case, in past years, the occasion has been inspiring and helpful. In the mission field we have had a very active year with much earnest effort, which, while showing varying results, has in the aggregate produced progress, improvement and grateful encouragement.

Quoting from a report of our Superintendent we find "A steady advance has been apparent among many of the Indians as we have passed from station to station during the year." The scale of general intelligence has perceptibly improved, as well as morals and religious interest and sentiment.

In a recent visit to the Osages and to all our northern missions, in which exists the more real Indian life as compared with any other section of our work, we were very much impressed with the quiet, orderly lives the Indians are living, and the improved sanitary conditions about their homes.

We note that tribes with limited financial resources are progressing more rapidly in agricultural pursuits than others who do not feel the need of self-supporting effort. Drunkenness and gambling have largely disappeared from most of the tribes where our missionaries are laboring, great care being taken by all our workers to instill temperance and moral sentiments among all classes with whom we come in contact.

The previously affirmed policy covering a purpose to gradually reduce supports and to retire from some of our older stations where the Indian population has been much reduced, has been kept in mind, and had our official care, though practical difficulties in execution have constantly presented and made deliberation in action appear the proper course. It may also be stated that abrupt pursuit of the policy would undoubtedly destroy much which only many years have built up, nevertheless we are hoping now to make a satisfactory disposition of the Hillside Mission, and to close any further financial support there.

Modoc and Ottawa Missions and meetings we are planning to combine in such a way as to much lessen the already limited supports appropriated to these two stations.

This movement has not been and is not now, with a view to closing our Indian Mission work, but in order to take up fresh pioneer Indian posts and to strengthen our missions already established amongst full-blood and more or less pagan natives.

The cordial relations maintained with a number of other organizations with interests closely, or in part, allied to our own, aids to a broadening view and influence not simply amongst Friends, but within a much wider horizon. In this we have in mind amongst others, the U. S. Indian Bureau, the Indian Rights Association, the Home Missions Council, the Mohonk Indian Conference, and the Y. M. C. A. and Y. W. C. A. of America in their extension of work amongst children of some Government Indian Schools.

All this work is not to go on forever, but today the pressing need (whatever some with partial information may judge to be the reverse) for earnest, efficient missionary work has nowise abated.

Our machinery is not costly, and yet, we are well organized and firmly established in the several active missions in Oklahoma in support of which all contributed funds are expended. As heretofore, our annual report, about to be published, will be put for distribution in the hands of all our delegates from the ten yearly meetings which are associated in our Executive Committee, and to any interested Friend requesting it a report will cheerfully be mailed.

We earnestly request that a continued or increased support and prayerful interest be maintained, that the responsible duty to which we have set our hand may not languish or diminish.

It has been arranged that our Friend, as co-worker and fellow member, George N. Hartley, shall seek an opportunity to present freshly the responsibilities and claims of our Committee at the approaching Yearly Meetings of Ohio, Indiana, Western and Iowa, and at each of these our request is for a reasonable and thoughtful hearing and for all meetings having official connection with us that the assumed responsibilities, financial and others, be kept in mind.

The harvest remains open to us and the history of prayers and tears, sacrifice and effort of the past, gives further incentive to faithfulness.

In loving appeal Thy friend, E. M. WISTAR, Chairman The Associated Indian Committee.
Philadelphia, Fifth Month 14th, 1913.

To know the Father is the one thing needful to every child of the Father, the one thing to fill the divine gulf of his necessity.—George MacDonald.

Current Items of Interest to Friends

Canada Yearly Meeting

After two very helpful meetings at Pickering, our Friends, Arthur and Eliza Dann, passed on to Bloomfield and Wellington. Friends had been much in prayer and had widely advertised the meetings, so that it was only what we expected when good results accrued. Starting on Sabbath, the 11th, at Wellington, there was a splendid gathering, and a very deep spirit of worship and praise characterized the meeting. Afternoon and evening meetings were held at Bloomfield. Three sections of Friends sat together in perfect accord and in sweetness of spirit under the beneficent ruling of the Head of the Church. Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, meetings were held in Wellington, and in addition to evening gatherings, two Bible readings were given in the homes of Friends who were unable to get out. On Thursday, the Monthly Meeting at Bloomfield claimed attention, and the closing meeting was a blessed time. Altogether our Friends addressed ten different meetings in the five days, and many testimonies were given of blessing received during the visit. They have come and gone, but the memory of their visit will linger in our minds in the days which are to come.

Indiana Yearly Meeting

Dayton Friends are planning for Quaker Day, to be held Sunday, June 8. This was planned for April 6, but was not possible on account of the terrible flood.

Regular Sabbath-school services will be held at 9:30. President Kelly, of Earlham College, will give the address at 10:30, and remarks will be made by the pastor, James B. Unthank. Ira C. Johnson, Evangelistic Superintendent of Indiana Yearly Meeting, will have charge of the services at 7:00 P. M.

By this special effort we hope that all Dayton Friends will get together on that day. We extend a hearty welcome to all who are now Friends, as well as those who have been, whose families have been, or who in any way are connected with Friends or who are interested in them.

Kansas Yearly Meeting

The Friends near White City will dedicate their new meeting house on June 8th. L. Clarkson Hinshaw, Yearly Meeting Superintendent, will have charge of the services. The Friends here need help, and it will be appreciated and used judiciously. The monthly meeting was set up one year ago and bids fair to make a strong meeting. Any Friend desiring to locate near a live Friends' meeting in a good farming country, might do well to investigate White City. Address the pastor, J. D. Carter, White City, Kansas.

Six Monday evening meetings are being held at the Kansas City (Mo.) Friends' Church on the Essentials of the Christian Life, under the direction of the Church Extension Society. They include the topics: "What Does God Mean to me?"; "Christian Gracefulness"; "Christian Contentment"; "Discipleship and Self Denial"; "My Motive in Following the Christian Life"; and "God the Source of all Goodness." Each subject is treated by a different leader, and a general discussion follows. The series will close June 16th.

The representatives from Stafford, Kansas, that attended the quarterly meeting at Hopewell and the Sabbath-school convention at Wichita, report good and interesting occasions. Our Sabbath-school at Stafford is growing in numbers and interest. We have organized five classes. The AMERICAN FRIEND is a welcome visitor to our home. We like the paper better than ever and feel that every Friend's family ought to take it.

Mount Ayr Quarterly Meeting was held at the Chalk Mound Friends Church in Rooks County, Kansas, May 16-18. The weather being fine, the different sessions were well attended. Much spiritual life was manifested throughout the meeting. We were much favored in having present Charles D. Hunt, pastor of Walnut Creek Meeting, Kansas. He brought a message of love on both days.

Stella Academy, Oklahoma, had a lecture on May 13th by Mary Sibbett on "White Slavery." A number of the students spoke at the silver medal contest at the W. C. T. U. county convention at Ingersoll, May 15th. Professor Absalom Knight has been secured as principal of the Academy the coming year, with Mrs. Knight and Winifred Riggs as assistants. The commencement exercises were to be held on May 29th, with Charles Lescault giving the address.

Stella Quarterly Meeting will be held at Antioch in Custer county, Oklahoma, June 6-8.

New York Yearly Meeting

The Yearly Meeting is in session in New York City, having begun yesterday, and will continue throughout the week.

Butternuts Quarterly Meeting was held at West Branch, Oneida County, New York, May 16-18. Richard R. Newby, Yearly Meeting Superintendent, was present and was much blessed in the ministry of the Word. On Sunday afternoon a conference was held, the subject of discussion being, "The Country Church." J. William Peckham gave the leading address. At the closing session on Sunday night, a number bowed at the altar of prayer, and professed to find pardon.

Western Yearly Meeting

Bloomington Quarterly Meeting was held at Bloomington, Indiana, May 16-18, with a good degree of interest manifested in the various departments of work. At the missionary conference on the morning of the 17th, the program was in charge of Elizabeth Murphy, pastor of Coloma meeting. Several children participated in interesting exercises, and Miss Murphy made an earnest plea for greater zeal in our work on the mission field. In the meeting for worship, Absalom Knight, of Vermilion Quarterly Meeting gave an instructive address. In the evening at the Academy Association, E. O. Ellis, of Fairmount, gave an illustrated talk on "The Holy Land," which reviewed scenery viewed by the lecturer in company with S. C. Cowgill some years ago. On Sabbath morning at the Bible School conference, Mr. Ellis discussed "The Organized Class," giving many helpful suggestions. In the meeting for worship, Martilla Cox brought a helpful message, taking as her theme, "The Lost Christ."

A series of meetings, conducted by the pastor, Enos Harvey, have been in progress for a week in the meeting at Bloomington. Leora Bogue, of Fairmount, is giving assistance with her gift in sacred song. The choruses under her leadership, and her own solos added to the interest in the recent sessions of the quarterly meeting.

Arthur Hammond, pastor at Carmel, is in the midst of a series of sermons on "Social Service," having delivered the fourth one. The series is being greatly appreciated.

Mothers' Day was observed at the Friends' Church, Carmel, Indiana, on May 11th, a large audience filling both rooms of the building. The music was in charge of the Sunbeam choir composed of the children, with Mrs. Fred Hawkins at the piano. Candace N. Johnson gave the "Bible Mothers"; Arvilla Small, the "Church Mothers"; and Mary C. Kemp, the "Reform Mothers." Helen King and Mrs. Thudris each sang a beautiful solo. The prayer service was in charge of the young men of the church. The scripture lesson, read by the pastor, was selected by Lydia Perisho, who was unable to be present. Arthur Hammond, the pastor, preached a short sermon, paying tribute to the Christian mothers and to womanhood. The room was beautifully decorated, and across the pulpit was hung in white letters, "In Honor of Mother." A committee at the door presented each one with a carnation.

Biblical Work and Training

The committee appointed to prepare a course of Biblical work and training, in addition to work already done at Earlham College, met at that place May 13th and very carefully considered the questions entrusted to it for solution.

The committee consisted of four members of the Earlham faculty, two from each of the Evangelistic Committees of Indiana and Western Yearly Meetings, and one from each of the three Academies giving biblical instruction. Nine members were present.

It was unanimously agreed that extensive work should be given in:

1. Homiletics, including pastoral and evangelistic work, sermonizing and general church work.
2. Teacher training, including Bible School management, building and training teachers and general methods of Bible School work.
3. Social Service, including in particular the country church problem.
4. Missions, including history, social progress and contemporary situation.
5. Prophecy, including the "call" to any line of religious work, insight into and conceptions of truth.
6. Personal Evangelism, or soul winning.

It was the judgment of the committee that the above work would require a larger teaching force on the Earlham faculty, and as there are no funds for the same, it cannot be introduced next year. It was also agreed that in order to make the course of study and training effective, local communities should provide funds for educating needy young people coming forward in the ministry.

British Columbia Quarterly Meeting

British Columbia Quarterly Meeting met the 26th and 27th of April, in Vancouver, British Columbia. This meeting is perhaps unique on the American continent as being mainly comprised of Friends who were, at one time, members of either London or Dublin Yearly Meetings. The sessions were interesting and contained encouraging features. Special consideration was given to the subject of the "Attitude of the Christian Churches toward the Asiatics in our midst, and especially the Hindus." A disconcerting feature is the revealed apathy of most Christian people on this great and difficult matter.

The inequalities and injustice of the Canadian immigration laws were dwelt upon, and a memorial to the government at Ottawa was drawn up by the Meeting and ordered to go forward, urging reform.

The Vancouver Meeting shows growth and the report from Victoria indicated that considerable progress had been made there in the Peace movement, Friends being largely instrumental in establishing the Peace Society of Western Canada there, the first Peace organization to be set up in the Dominion west of Toronto.

The Meeting rejoiced with Victoria Friends in the prospect of the early opening of their new meeting house, the first in British Columbia. Friends in Washington State on Puget Sound, being our near neighbors, it is probable a conference of the two bodies will be held for mutual benefit and friendly intercourse about the first of August, in Seattle.

At Long Beach, California

Arthur B. and Edna Hill Chilson, who returned some months ago in poor health from British East Africa, after five years spent in the Friends' Africa Industrial Mission, have been spending the winter in Long Beach, California, recuperating. Because of the condition of their health, they have been able to do but little public speaking until the Sunday of May 4, when they had charge of the morning service at the First Friends' Church in Long Beach.

Edna Chilson gave an interesting talk on the country, the people, and related experiences with her sewing class and school, picturing it all so vividly that our imaginations were given greater scope. She closed her remarks by singing, "I Surely Will Be With Thee," in her beautiful effective manner, touching many hearts in the audience.

Arthur Chilson followed with a stirring address, giving incidents telling of the great need, not only where the work is started, but in the country farther north, and closed by making a strong appeal to the church to "treat Jesus Christ right," by being faithful in sending the Gospel to those who sit in darkness. Much interest was shown and a liberal response was made to the call for financial help.

Andrew Mitchel, the pastor, spoke very kindly, expressing his appreciation of the presence of Arthur and Edna Chilson during their sojourn and associations with the Church at this place.

Arthur Chilson will soon begin deputization work among the Yearly Meetings of America. Edna Chilson and little daughters, Esther and Rachel, will remain with her parents in Long Beach, until more improved in health.

It is the irony of fate that the first serious problem of a totally Democratic administration involves the age-worn question of states rights, in which the President and Secretary of State are asking California not to endanger international peace by the passage of the Anti-alien land bill.

One of the innovations in the Chicago schools is the appointment of "deans of girls," whose special care shall be to guard the girls of these schools and direct their social life.

Woman suffrage was defeated in the April election in Michigan by approximately 25,000 votes.

There is in connection with Yale Divinity School a library devoted to the literature of missions which is surpassed in size and completeness by but one other. It has its own building, handsome and substantial, which was dedicated March 31. It contains 25,000 volumes and is the fruit of the interest and liberality of George E. Day, D.D., at one time a professor in the Divinity School. He not only collected the books, provided for the building, but also left funds which will make generous additions continuously.

"LIKE MAGIC"

New Food Makes Wonderful Changes

When a man has suffered from dyspepsia so many years that he can't remember when he had a natural appetite, and then hits on a way out of trouble he may be excused for saying, "it acts like magic."

When it is a simple, wholesome food instead of any one of a large number of so-called remedies in the form of drugs, he is more than ever likely to feel as though a sort of miracle has been performed.

A Chicago man, in the delight of restored digestion, puts it in this way:

"Like magic, fittingly describes the manner in which Grape-Nuts relieved me of poor digestion, coated tongue and loss of appetite, of many years standing.

"I tried about every medicine that was recommended to me, without relief. Then I tried Grape-Nuts on the suggestion of a friend. By the time I had finished the fourth package, my stomach was all right, and for the past two months, I have been eating with a relish, anything set before me. That is something I had been unable to do previously for years.

"I am stronger than ever and I consider the effects of Grape-Nuts on a weak stomach as something really wonderful. It builds up the entire body as well as the brain and nerves." Name given by the Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

BIBLE SCHOOL LESSON

JUNE 8.

SUBJECT—Joseph Forgives His Brethren.

LESSON—Gen. 45: 1-15. Read Gen. 45 and 46. Commit Gen. 45: 4, 5.

GOLDEN TEXT—"Behold, how good and how pleasant it is for brethren to dwell together in unity!"—Ps. 133: 1.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR

JUNE 8.

TOPIC—Seek Peace and Pursue It.—I. Pet. 3: 8-18.

Peace should be sought in three directions:

1. Peace with God.
2. Peace in one's own heart.
3. Peace with all other people.

"The mind of the flesh is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can it be." The lashings of a conscience that is not harmonized with the purposes of God is the source of much of the turmoil and unrest that brings suffering to mankind. It is "the peace of God which passeth all understanding," which should be earnestly sought by every troubled heart.

Rest of soul is the ideal of the Christian's life. A troubled heart cannot minister to others. It is only when one finds peace with God that he realizes the truest peace in his own soul.

Paul's advice to Timothy should be the Christian's rule of conduct: "And the Lord's servant must not strive, but be gentle towards all, apt to teach, forbearing, in meekness correcting them that oppose themselves." Bickerings and suspicions and contentions and rivalry have been the bane of many a church. The whole spirit is wrong, and should be abandoned as any other sin. Christ's blessing was upon the peace-maker, and he who would make peace must first set the example.

"All ye are brethren." How often we fail to recognize the brotherhood of believers! Co-operation, friendly interest, fellowship are the leading terms in the Christian's vocabulary.

As with men, so with nations. The rule is just as binding. War is not only wrong, but inexpedient. "No question is ever settled, until it is settled right." Well may we question with the poet of the Sierras:

The grass is green on Bunker Hill,
The waters sweet in Brandywine;
The sword sleeps in the scabbard still,
The farmer keeps his flock and vine;
Then who would mar the scene today
With vaunt of battle-field or fray?

A PERSONAL WORD

I take it for granted that all Pastors, Sabbath School Superintendents and members of the various Sabbath School Committees, are interested in having the very best literature obtainable in the Friends' Sabbath Schools.

For over twenty-two years I have given my best efforts to this work. It is not necessary to state the sacrifices of time and money spent to build up the Sabbath School publishing and supply business for the Friends' Church in America.

I have reached the age when I must soon "ease up," and am looking toward that time. I have made offers to the Publication Board for taking over this work; but for the present their time and thought is to get the AMERICAN FRIEND thoroughly established. It may be two or three years before they can consider this work, and it may be that way will not open for it before the next Five Years Meeting.

In the meantime, I shall continue to do my best, although feeling that younger men ought to have the burden of the work. I want to get all the supply business for the Sabbath Schools concentrated, so that when the time comes to turn it over to the church, it will be Something Worth While.

TO THE POINT.

Now, to the point; it so happens that some of the Friends' Sabbath Schools prefer other lesson helps and papers to ours, (although we are supplying fully 80 percent. of all helps to Friends' Sabbath Schools). There is nothing improper in this. All schools have a right to their own personal preference, and to use what they really believe to be for the best interest of the School.

If these Schools only knew how much they could help us by ordering their supplies through us, they would surely do so. I am agent for all the Sabbath School supply houses, and am constantly ordering from other houses for Friends' Schools.

GRADED HELPS.

Three years ago I was appointed agent among Friends for the Syndicate publishing the Graded system of lessons and began at once a systematic campaign advertising these Helps. The results, as seen by the reports of the Bible School Commission of the Five Years Meeting, is that 93 Friends' Sabbath Schools are using, to some extent, these Helps. This work is largely the result of my advertising, as agent for the Syndicate, and I am in a position to give correct information on the Graded Helps. I can also send prospectus, prices and order blanks.

AN APPEAL.

My appeal to all Friends' Sabbath Schools is to use as many of our Quarterlies, Youth's Friends, and Child's Lesson Leaf, as possible, and give us their orders for all other supplies. We can supply you with any Publications or Lesson Helps published by any publishing house in the world. These will not cost any more than to order direct from the publishers. We can supply you with Bibles, Maps, Record books, Class books, Reward cards, Blackboards, Cradle Rolls, and in fact, everything for the Sabbath School. Send for our complete catalogue.

The Children's Offertory

WE BRING now our gifts to the Master,
Although they are small they'll be blest;
He knows we are tiny disciples
But loves us as well as the rest.
Like that little lad who gave Jesus
His two little fishes and bread,
Which fed all the people who gathered,
When Jesus the blessing had said.

"So we bring our offerings to Jesus
And cheerfully give them to-day,
When placed in His hand for a blessing
They'll comfort some child far away.
Though our gifts be not mentioned in story
Like that little boy's by the sea,
Our Father in heaven will notice,
Remember, and love you and me."

EDITORIAL COMMENT ON CURRENT EVENTS

The Federal Council of Churches, in determining to locate an office of the Federation in Washington City, recognized the strategic value of having American Christianity focalized at the seat of legislation and executive power. The Catholics were more swift to take advantage of this opportunity, and for years have had a national office in our capital city, with an expert diplomat in charge, who has spoken for Catholicism in its entirety whenever occasion required. The Federation of Churches has done wisely in taking a similar step. No one can measure the far-reaching effects that will come from the authoritative representations of a secretary in charge, who will be entitled to voice the sentiments of the federated Churches of America upon any question of government wherein is involved the moral welfare of the Nation.

* * *

One of the gratifying latter-day tendencies in Christian activity, is the response which so many business and professional men of standing are making to the calls for definite Christian service. In many of the denominations, busy business men are assuming responsibilities in mission appointments, country Sunday-schools, out-of-the-way evangelistic meetings, which commonly have devolved solely upon the pastor or minister. It is a sign which bodes well for the future of the Church in America.

* * *

Probably the most significant recent event that has stirred the heart of Christendom with rejoicing is the evident acceptance of Christianity in the Chinese empire. It may almost be regarded as the state religion. Confucianism, however, is not willing to relinquish its hold without a protest. Last autumn the 2,463d birthday of Confucius was celebrated by the numerous Unions which have recently arisen in the country, largely for the purpose of keeping the teaching of Confucianism in the Chinese schools. Strenuous appeals were made to maintain the supremacy of the old system as the religion of China. But the Celestial Empire has seen a great light, and will probably not retire willingly to the darkness of heathenism again.

* * *

Leaders in missionary activities are convinced that the door to the Turkish Mohammedans and the residents of the Balkan states is now open to the Christian missionaries wider than ever before. All this comes as the result of the national upheavals, consequent upon the recent Turko-Balkan conflict. The Mohammedans are turning to the Christians as evangelists of a higher civilization, who will be able to help them in their extremity, while the Balkan inhabitants, including the Albanians, will naturally turn Christianward, now that the power of the Turk is broken.

* * *

The federative idea is bearing fruit already among the churches. The Joint Commission of the Methodist Protestant and United Brethren denominations has unanimously agreed upon a plan of union, forming a new body to be known as the United Protestant Church. The report has yet to be passed upon by the General Conferences of the two bodies. If ratified, the new denomination will have a membership of about 500,000. It is said that other denominations have signified their intention of joining, which will increase the membership to 1,000,000. During the middle of May the annual Assemblies of the Presbyterian Church, U. S. A., the Southern Presbyterian Church and the United Presbyterian Church met in separate gatherings at Atlanta, Georgia. It is reported that the federative spirit was strong, but action upon the subject was postponed until next year.

Among Our Contemporaries

The Church is in danger of forgetting the real reason for its existence and for its activities, but it must not forget. With all its equipments, splendid though they be, there must not be one moment's satisfaction or interest in them apart from their usefulness in helping to keep before the world the simple story of the Gospel of the grace of God.—Herald and Presbyter.

As rational men, we are forced to form a theory of the facts, but we fall into hopeless confusion if we suppose the theory is important as compared with the facts. The test of a man's Christian faith is not whether he holds to a certain theory but whether he holds to the facts unshaken. It is a favorite device of unthinking men to declare that you must hold a certain theory or you are compelled to give up the facts. It is simply not true. Theories may be adequate or inadequate according as one looks at them. But facts continue to be what they are.

Herein is true Christian liberty. There is a solid nucleus of facts of history and personal experience. There is room around them for a wide ranging of thought. The Presbyterian Church may well glory in its breadth. It has no theory or explanation which it demands that men accept. It asks only that they be true and loyal to the facts as recorded in the Scripture, and the facts of personal experience. This is its true liberty. For this liberty it must always stand.—The Continent (Presbyterian).

One of the perpetual wonders to those who are unacquainted with the secret of the Lord is the personal bond between the believer and Christ wherever Christian discipleship is exhibited in normal manifestation. Men and women today, separated by nearly two millenniums from that morning when Christ asked Peter at the seaside, "Lovest thou me?" still hear that question as plainly as the fisherman-disciple did, and their answer is as true and hearty as his: "Lord, thou knowest that I love thee." The bond that is set up is wholly unlike that which binds us to human leaders, even the wisest and best. It must always be a mystery to those who have not learned by personal experience that Christ himself is the sum of Christianity, that apart from him it is nothing but another of the world's moral codes with incidental implications of a world-philosophy, and that to be Christian is, primarily, to be simply a disciple of Christ, not merely in the sense of trying to obey his commands, but in the sense of knowing him as our Divine Lover and Friend who laid down his life for our sakes.—The Lutheran Observer.

A Great Modern Problem—No. 4

In a recent book, entitled "Germany and the Next War," written by General Von Bernhardi, the author says: "War is a good thing in itself. All advance is founded upon struggle." This is a doctrine which harmonizes with a sentiment exploited in certain quarters in our country that war is needed to develop the sterner qualities of our young manhood and render it efficient in meeting the realities of life.

Both these teachings are antiquated and illogical. Co-operation and not combat is the law of modern life. Human progress may be marked by the law of the "survival of the fittest," but the struggle is the struggle of peace and not of bloody strife. In the evolution of the race, combat has played its part, but "peace hath her victories no less renowned than war."

The old order changeth. "This is not a day of triumph; it is a day of dedication," was President Wilson's inaugural tribute to the higher law by which National life is to be governed. The law of struggle is still to be applied against wrong, against evil, against oppression, but the struggle is mental, intellectual, spiritual. Questions of right, either in the abstract or concrete, are never determined by the exercise of physical force, and never depend upon the biggest navy or the best equipped army. Such themes are debated in the realm of conscience and are determined at the tribunals of reason, morals and religion, and only there.

"The parliament of man" is not the battlefield, but the forum of fraternal international discussion, wherein "brotherhood" looms large above the rostrum, and wherein all differences are appealed to the judgment of international law and the arbitrament of a Hague tribunal.

The manly strife of competition in the race of life, the struggle to overcome the weaknesses of human nature and the evil environments which threaten upon every hand, the conflict with moral wrong and wicked oppression to be waged peacefully by the use of instruments which civil government affords, all these build brain and fibre and heart power and moral strength and spiritual endowment, with which the struggles of mere physical endurance are not to be compared.

The question of universal peace may ultimately be established largely by the law of expediency, but no less surely should the followers of the Prince of Peace become a positive force for its final attainment, by their appeal to the law of universal right.

It is too late in the march of the centuries to turn back the dial of progress by any appeal to the philosophy of the ancients that "might makes right." Rather are we facing a new age of right and opportunity, described by President Wilson in the words, "The feeling with which we face this new age of right and opportunity sweep across our heart strings like some air out of God's own presence, where justice and mercy are reconciled and the judge and the brother are one." It is the philosophy of Cowper rather than that of our German soldier author to which the world is appealing today, as expressed in the couplet:

"Religion should extinguish strife,
And make a calm of human life."

Power Through Suffering

"If so be that we suffer with Him."—Rom. 8: 17.

He has not learned the height and depth and breadth of human ministration, who has not tasted suffering for some righteous cause. If it be that men have suffered together because of their testimony for holiness and purity, they are forever bound together as true yoke fellows in witnessing to the truth of God.

Sacrifice fits men and women to sympathize with the direst needs of humanity about them. All Christians are martyrs, if not at the stake, at least at the cross of crucified self, that henceforth they may live in newness of life with Christ. Many shrink from the harder tasks with the plea that others are better equipped for the service, but in so doing they lose something of vital power that comes to those who toil even through suffering for the uplift of the race.

A religious experience is worth little in its power to make the world see the priceless wealth of God's eternal love that has not had its Gethsemane of wrestling with the powers of darkness and been able at the end to get a vision of the glory that awaits the tried ones of earth, both now and hereafter. He who has been made to feel the sacrifice of worldly ambition and selfish purpose and who in so doing has felt the sympathetic touch of the Son of God, will henceforth turn not back from any toil, but in the light of His continual Presence, will delight to do the will of the Lord.

"If so be that we suffer with Him, that we may be also glorified with Him."

The Interior Life

BY RUFUS M. JONES

We all came back from the Five Years Meeting—those of us who were there—feeling convinced that an important event had occurred and uplifted with the expectation of great things to follow. More than half a year has now passed since that stirring time. Nature has had her winter sleep and has awakened again and shown us anew the re-birth of the world, as though some invisible power were at work behind the scenes. But the corresponding re-awakening and the thrust of new life and power among us still lags behind and some of us have been saying, “why so slow and late to come?”

It should, however, take but little reflection to make us realize that the kind of widespread movement we are looking and longing for could hardly be expected to come as a direct result of a gathering like the Five Years Meeting. It is extremely difficult to carry back to the membership at large what the few experienced there. The new vision and the enthusiasm of the occasion do not bulk much in the printed minutes, and articles written about the Meeting leave us very much as we were before. It is an excellent idea to have frequent reports and proposals from the different Boards, but here again we must not expect that these compositions will stir the diaphragm of our membership very mightily.

The secret of how to stir the deeper life of men and how to reach the quick in their spirits is hard to discover, but it may be taken as a fixed rule that the stirring and quickening are not accomplished in these more or less abstract and second-hand ways. The kindling must come through personal contact and by the intimate touch of someone who is himself a living and burning torch. The main value of Five Years Meetings will always be as occasions of inspiration for the delegates and attenders, and the way of transmitting the power will always be through the channels of the heightened life of those who were privileged to attend. As soon as we have the General Secretary, who will be the living personal connection between the Five Years Meeting and the membership at large, and who will carry in person the projects of the Meeting to the membership and will study the needs of the membership and bring them in turn before the Meeting and its Boards, we may look for marked advance in our working power.

But I, for one, have long felt that the destiny of our Society lies in the local meetings and not in some elaborate organization more remote and higher up. Our real power-houses are these scattered meeting-places which dot the country, not some central office, however important that may ultimately prove to be. For this increase of power in these local centres two things are essentially necessary: (1) a deepening of the inner life of the members, and (2) more efficient organization for the aggressive neighborhood work or social service work, of the meetings. These two things are of course, bound up together and interact upon each other. Neither one can be adequately attained without the other. But for the moment I am going to speak of the first matter, and at a later time I hope to say something on the second topic, which is very near my heart.

The first thing that impresses any one who studies early Quakerism is the wonderful depth of the interior life of those who formed the membership. They were very simple people, only slightly educated, hard-working folk, with somewhat narrow horizons; but they did not lack in inward dimension. Their religion opened up a new world within, and supplied them with an interior richness and fertility. They talked about the bubbling of the streams of life within, and of the healing which flowed into their souls, as simply and naturally as we talk about the weather. They enjoyed meditating on God and cultivating the sense of His presence as much as we enjoy spring sunshine. And when they put themselves into activity against some entrenched evil or for the promotion of some good cause, they were like an army under banners. There is no substitute for that inward depth of life. St. Paul said it all in a single sentence, long ago, and it is just as true now: “This is the mystery, Christ in you.” Superficial religion can do some things, but it can work no miracles; it can cast out no devils and it can make no wilderness blossom like the rose. I have just been reading the words of a dear friend of mine, written in memory of that great modern Quaker, Thomas Hodgkin, whose death has removed from the world one of the most beautiful characters I have ever known. He says of him: “It was the inward life of his soul which flowed onwards as a deep, broad, calm river, which gave him his width of range and simplicity of character * * * his dynamic.” That is absolutely true, and there is no other way to become spiritually dynamic. What we need most is to return inward from talking about religious things to the experience of religion itself.

I have sometimes seemed to slight theology and to belittle doctrine. I believe that I do not in reality do so. I want only to put first things first, and I am profoundly impressed with the feeling that the first thing to occupy us is the wider spreading among our members of an experience which shall flood our entire life with the power of religion and supply us with interior depth. How is this to happen? The first step is to see that we need it, to arouse a desire for it, to cultivate an expectation for it. These deeper things in religion come only to those who are seeking and expecting. Once a man found a kingdom when he was seeking his father's asses. But the kingdom of the spirit does not come in that way. It is found alone by those who intensely long for it, pray for it and seek after it—not by those who drift along leisurely. If we could have a great wave of earnest desire for this priceless thing, a religion of inward depth, it would take us far.

But desire alone is never enough. The religion of great dimensions—what Paul calls “breadth and length and height and depth”—comes to those in whose heart Christ dwells, to those who are strengthened with might by His spirit in the inner man, and that wonderful experience involves more than theories about Christ; it involves a personal acquaintance with Christ. To get this experience we must spare no pains to get back to the historical Christ and see Him as He is. It is extremely easy to stop with theories and conceptions and words, to use old phrases which were full of meaning once, but which now let us slide along without any real inward experience. So long as we do that, we remain stationary and unprogressive. We hold on, but we do not grow and increase inwardly.

What I am pleading for is a return to Christ himself—the Christ with the storm and the wind on His face, the Christ of infinite love and tenderness, the Christ who is the way home to God. It means a patient re-reading of the Gospels, a use of the best helps to discover His life and His message, and a willingness to cut loose from everything that hinders us from following His will when we see it. “We needs must love the highest when we see it.” But alas, how many of us do not see that central Figure of the world! We live on lower substitutes and do not get face to face with Him. This is why we lack interior depth and power.

Our ministers and those who are called to be spiritual feeders of the flock will do well to think of these things seriously and to do all that lies in their power to assist the membership of our local meetings to have a “revelation in the knowledge of Him, having the eyes of their heart enlightened,” and so they will promote the movement to increase the interior life and expand the spiritual dimensions.

Unlimited Democracy in a Friends' Meeting

BY ARTHUR JONES

Following a recent article in the AMERICAN FRIEND, entitled “The Commission Plan in a Friends' Meeting,” which is being experimented with in a “populous New England city,” it would seem apropos to have a word concerning a plan which is being operated in a certain western village, namely, Kansas City, Missouri. I have been asked to give a brief description of this organization and its methods.

A suggestion was first brought before the pastoral committee that there be meetings held to consider methods of advancing the interests of the church in the community. The fundamental idea was that opportunity be made for those who might desire the advancement of the church, yet had not seen their way to unite with it in membership, to come on the same basis as those who were members. The pastoral committee thought well of the suggestion, and sent it to the monthly meeting, where a committee was appointed to inaugurate the meetings. The notice was given out that on a certain evening a meeting would be held to develop plans for church extension, and that “all those who are interested in the extension of the kingdom of Christ through the activities of this church will be welcome.”

When the meeting convened a permanent chairman was elected who is a member of the church. A vice-chairman and a secretary were elected who are not members of Friends. They are members of other denominations, but on account of location find it more convenient to work in the Friends' church. The proportion of those not members who attend the meetings has generally been about one-third or one-half the whole number present.

It was decided to hold the meetings each Monday evening. At the time of writing there have been fourteen meetings held without interruption. The meeting adopted the name of Church Extension Meeting. There is no constitution, and no membership roll. Each person present has full rights in voting and discussion.

The decision was made to take up some one line of church work at each meeting, as Sunday-school, Christian Endeavor, missions, the church choir, etc., but this has not been strictly adhered to, on account of the full time of the meeting being taken with some special subjects which required immediate attention.

Some of the things which have been done under the direction of these church extension meetings are the following:

(1) The making of a house to house canvass of the community within about three blocks of the church, and systematically arranging data concerning the religious preferences of the people. In this way nearly five hundred families have been visited.

(2) About four hundred calendars for the year were secured. These were prepared with a list of the regular church services, and special activities, and were distributed to members of the church, to the families connected with the Sunday-school, and to those who manifested a desire to have them.

(3) A mailing list of about two hundred addresses was prepared. It is planned to send literature to these at least once a month, and thus keep them in touch with the life of the church. An envelope containing three separate leaflets was sent out the first of May.

During the past three or four months there has been a noticeable increase in attendance at the Sabbath meetings, morning and evening. The Sunday-school has grown, and the church finances appear to be in a more healthful condition. Of course, it is impossible to discern just how much of this the church extension meetings may be credited with, just as one cannot tell from which article of food he receives most strength. There was an increase in Sunday-school and church attendance during the months preceding the organization of these meetings. But it is only reasonable to suppose that they have contributed their share to the church life.

The Call of the "New Vision"

BY DR. S. EDGAR BOND

This appeal comes from a young Friend whose Quaker ancestry dates back to the earliest history of Friends. Considering the deprivations of these heroes of early "Quaker" times, and their burning zeal to carry the message of Quakerism into new fields, we have been wondering in the light of present inactivity, whether the mission of the church is ended, or have the present-day older members been "dreaming dreams" of our ancient past too long, and have our younger members failed to see the "visions" of George Fox and his followers of the seventeenth century? Animated with the same zeal as they were, we would be today one of the leading churches in numbers, instead of the smallest.

A new spirit seems to have arisen among Friends, as evidenced by the recent Five Years Meeting and the organized work there attempted. It is in this same spirit we wish to appeal to Friends for greater attention to the youth and energy of the Church. We would appeal to the young of the church to gird up their armour for an effort to extend our borders, and take our place in the front rank of those who seek to save the lost, and bring about a Christian civilization.

The general lack of use made of the youth of the Church has to us for a long time seemed a vital mistake. The work of a few leaders and committees will avail nothing in the reconstruction work of the Church, if the body at large is not more receptive than many of the congregations of our acquaintance. These churches are the conservative, slow-growing centres, dominated by still more conservative members. We seem to forget the wielder of the sickle of today may require readjustment for the binder of tomorrow. Each sun is potential for a new era. How often have we seen a new life and growth spring into these churches a generation later, when the children of those who had bowed in the Quaker spirit of deference to the desires of the elders, came forward unhampered by the conservative wall.

Today is the day of progressive business, progressive politics, and it should be just as much a day of progressive religious methods. George Fox and his vigorous followers were so far in advance of the times that they were persecuted for pernicious disturbance of the existing religious order. They were the leaders of reform in religion. Today Friends are not leaders, but rather followers, struggling with ancient internal hindrances, far in the rear. Had we claimed our birth-right, our place would have been at the head of the column and our banner would have carried the inspiring slogan, "Onward Christian Soldiers, forward as to War." We have been content, especially since the early days of pioneer deprivations, to travel the beaten paths of our fathers. We have been taught to wait in silence upon the Lord for his blessings, but instead of letting these serve as an inspiration for fresh charges into the ranks of the enemy, they have so often degenerated into selfishness and ease in Zion.

Our contention is, first, the Church has outgrown many of its ancient contentions, and should replace them with a new vision of Social Service with a personal Christ as the centre of the social, business, political and educational world. We have arrived at a crisis of our usefulness, evidence of which lies in the attempts at reorganization so heartily endorsed by our leaders. Second, real progress in the work of reconstruction will amount to little unless the young people of the Church lend their energy to meet modern religious demands with modern business methods. Of what use will be the missionary department if our young people fail to respond as missionaries, or leave for broader fields under the Y. W. and Y. M. C. A., or go to other churches? In most of our Friends' colleges today, these two organizations through their Student Volunteer Movements, exert greater influence on the missionary ambitions of the young and strong than does the Church.

The demand for pastors is greater than there are volunteers among the young. But few young people are interested or connected with the business of the Church. This gulf must be bridged or the Church can do nothing aggressive. Friends have been essentially a meeting of the elders. Our plea is that it must cease. Marked as a "peculiar people" as a result of early persecution, we have become so set in the customs of the ancient past, that we have pointed to the long row of elders on the top seat with more pride than to the youth in the rear. The innovations of youth even yet are too often the works of the devil.

For years the problems facing the Quaker Church have to us seemed greater than our most intimate older Friends would admit. Content to meet at the weekly or semi-weekly gathering to worship in silence or listen to teaching from one whose very words breathed communion at the feet of the Master, they could not see the strength of the Church drifting away to other fields where their energy was valued. So content have we been in so many places that we have seemingly forgotten Christ's command to "go and preach," and attend to the practical work of caring for the "fatherless and widows," and have not made His Church aggressive. We have condemned secret societies which, in large part is organized charity and brotherly love, and have failed to plan systematically for the relief of aged ministers in comfort.

Do Friends longer have a Mission? It cannot be denied that Friends and Friends' principles have in the history of the new world exerted a profound influence upon its character.

We have boasted of our democratic form of government and business methods, capable of biblical interpretation. These were the instruments of simple surroundings before the machinery of the modern complex civilization was put into operation. What have we to offer to the modern youth, the energetic business man in his prime to make him become interested in our Church? I am fearful that he will view us today as a "peculiar people," with machinery inadequate for the times, living in a glorious past, and not seeing keenly the vision of possibilities now open to us.

George Fox based his hopes of correction of the world's faults solely on religion reforms. He was neither a diplomat nor a statesman, or he would also have looked after a change of social and political conditions in their respective channels using Christian principles to bring it about. Again, in his time the political and religious conditions were so entwined as to entail somewhat the same problems. In the new world with its separate church and state, and emphasis upon religious and political liberty, conditions have been ripe for a multiplicity of church organizations arising for the most part from individuals' opinions on non-essentials.

In the meantime, the fighting and quibbling among ourselves on non-essentials has permitted the political world and material interests to go on undisturbed and without God, until the structure they have built has not even the essential consideration of the good of humanity in its make-up, much less of Christianity.

In trying to keep ourselves "unspotted from the world," we have permitted staggering abuses to creep in and make the material struggle so hard that the spiritual instincts of the people have been crowded out.

To solve them correctly, they must be faced by a united church. The signs of the times point to a confederation of efforts among churches, if not wholly a material union into one band. In these efforts at a union of denominations, Friends have found they were so far behind other churches that they have not had even a united body, but have had to work in the same fields through different yearly meetings, to their mutual disadvantage, and with a duplication of machinery. Our recent Five Years Meeting has made the greatest step, to encourage the young and strong to come to our help, that has yet been taken, and many luke-warm members in the Church are again looking forward to new life and the accomplishment of greater things in store. We feel this is but the beginning of a greater advance along organized lines, and consequent growth.

(TO BE CONCLUDED)

The Strength and Weakness of Philadelphia Yearly Meeting

BY ISAAC SHARPLESS

(CONCLUDED)

* * * One finds that more Friendly money is going into benevolent objects than ever before. We may not be as rich as our forefathers, relatively to the population at large, but we are more liberal. Friends are, it seems to me, very generous with their resources. The amount which has gone to our schools within a score of years, is unprecedented. The negro institutions with which we are associated have had much Quaker money. The revival of interest in Foreign Missions has been backed by yearly subscriptions amounting to about $4.00 for each member of the Yearly Meeting. Many other philanthropies are liberally supported. It needs but little more knowledge of the spirit of modern social work in the cities to turn a stream of benevolences in this direction, with which of all others, we have the least kept ourselves in touch.

We have faced other problems of modern thought more successfully. We seem to be able to adjust ourselves to the new views of biblical criticism and Christian theology without serious loss to our spirituality and fundamental orthodoxy. Our general acceptance of the attitude of Fox and Barclay as to the basic principle of the guidance of the Holy Spirit, both in our theoretical judgment and the serious problems of living, has made it easy, indeed almost necessary, that we should accept comfortably the best and sanest tendencies of modern Christian thinking; for they are in the main what we could imagine these early Friendly authorities would sympathize with and lead into, were they alive today, with their intense spiritual earnestness and profound theological study.

I know that there are some Friends now who are still afraid of these tendencies without and within the Society. The idea is perhaps most often expressed by the charge of Unitarianism. Of course, much depends on the definition placed upon this word whether there is a basis for it or not. When the whole matter is seriously analyzed, it often amounts to a re-statement of old truths in words to which some Friends are somewhat unused. The so-called Orthodox view of the atonement has greatly varied with the ages. At one time it meant that Christ was sacrificed to propitiate the Devil, at another that the offering was to appease an angry God, and so on. It is not well to define these questions too narrowly, but so far as I know there is no such modification of the views of any considerable number of Friends as to lay us open to the suspicion that we have lost our fundamental orthodoxy. Indeed, if I can read the signs, there is a reaction among our most thoughtful Friends which is carrying us into definite opposition to any movement which would minimize the offices and authority of Jesus Christ. When we remember the heart-burnings and heresy trials which have existed and still exist in other denominations, is it premature to express the hope that we have safely turned the corner, and in the main have a faith which will stand the tests of modern developments present and to come?

We have been referring heretofore to the rank and file of our membership, and really this includes us all, for we are all laymen and all actively or potentially, ministers. Is it audacious to attempt to deal in the same frank ways with the question of preaching?

The demand for a ministry, perfectly spontaneous, perfectly inspired (and oftentimes the demand has been that the inspiration should be verbal), has produced effects which are not wholly good. We have narrowed the possibilities of God's working to a single line of holy activity. We have, from the fact that the ultimate authority in the recognition of ministers has been and is often an ultra-conservative body, practically insisted that the experience and modes which they themselves have passed through, shall be made the test of all real experience. We have reproduced a type excellent in itself but which does not in full meet the needs of the times. Men and women with qualifications not quite of the ancestral mold, have been denied recognition or been kept waiting till some of the bloom was lost. We can not guard too carefully the entrance into our meetings of simply intellectual addresses from which the element of divine unction is lacking, but all evidences of original thinking, all references to current literature and thought, all appropriateness of rhetoric and logic and delivery are not inconsistent with the prompting from above. This prompting is usually a prompting of ideas not of words and the minister naturally clothes them with such language and such illustrations as are his habitual modes of expression. There is no proof of inspiration in illogical thought, in poverty of apt illustration, in an unnatural and ineffective tone or gesture or lack of gesture. Indeed the delivery of some ministers has been so constrained, that those unused to it, have been more impressed by the manner than by the message, and have not been reached by the living word which dwelt behind him. The Quaker gallery is no place for studied or elaborate, artificial ornamentation, but for simple, natural statements of inspired truth.

It is hard to say what one wishes in this way, without a seeming harshness of criticism which is very far from what one desires. If there is any class to which we should feel profoundly thankful it is the ministers, who without any hope of earthly profit and oftentimes at great sacrifice of inclination stand up to a disagreeable duty because it is a duty and give us, for no reason but a concern for the growth of life among us, of their best. It is that we may have more and better ministry on the same spiritual basis, that all of us whose call lies in this direction may be more faithful, however weak we may feel ourselves to be, that would induce anyone to refer to present conditions which we cannot but feel are improving among us.

We need not criticise our Western Friends for their pastoral system on the ground that pastors have no place, but rather on the ground that their pastors sometimes invade the divinely appointed silence and speaking of the meeting for worship by human arrangement. It is not so much what they do, as what they leave out, the old-fashioned meeting which we treasure, that we may object to. The freer meeting for serious addresses and discussions, with business-like prearrangement and program, not unguided from above, but not feeling the necessity to wait for this guidance consciously, is possible as much a part of a real Christian plan for using all the gifts of members as the waiting meeting which has come to us from our fathers, and which must be retained.

We recognize the station of what Paul calls the prophet. All of our ministry is ostensibly prophetic. Have we given the same recognition to the evangelist, the pastor, the teacher, and made place for them by meetings adapted to their ministry? If we make no compromise with the methods which would sacrifice our free meetings for worship, we must make a place by other gatherings for the work of those who with equal validity feel that they should respond to calls to act as teachers and pastors of the flock.

And we must not lose the old Quaker type of character, quiet, serious, sturdy, with a conscience which was really operative, with a humility which never sounded its own praise, with a faith that never allowed the calls of opportunism or compromise to tempt it aside—the gentlemen with convictions, with charity, with unselfishness, with perfect integrity. No finer product of spiritual nurture has been realized by anybody than the best products of the conservative Quakerism of the past. Such men are still among us, with all the solidity and integrity of their ancestors. It is a type which noisy revivalism will never develop, which pure intellectualism can not understand, which creaturely activity by itself will often destroy. It only comes by the gradual unfolding of the moral and spiritual faculties, begotten and evolved by the Spirit of God working in willing and obedient natures, destroying personal ambition, and practicing the presence of God in daily life.

Such men were often conservative and slow to convince, and unresponsive to the demands of the age, but their personal virtues would easily make one forget most serious faults. Whatever we develop we must strive to retain these virtues and the discipline which produces them.

With the solid basis of strong character and high moral ideals of living which prevents our Yearly Meetings from easily following strange gods, and with the new life which is opening avenues of work and is impelling our young Friends to enter them there is every reason to hope for the early development of an earnest, substantial Christianity, not illiberal, among us.

The Moody Institute

The Moody Bible Institute, of Chicago, offers some specially strong attractions this coming fall. It announces Rev. G. Campbell Morgan, D. D., the great Bible expositor, of London; Sir William Ramsay, the distinguished Archæologist, who is at present at Antioch in Pisidia, and who will lecture on the value of his work to New Testament problems; and Mr. Dan Crawford, the most famous missionary to Africa of modern times, the David Livingstone of the twentieth century. These lectures, like all the other work of the Institute, are absolutely free to students, both men and women. Catalogs and other information are freely sent on application to any part of the world.

"Pansies Grow in My Garden"

BY HARRIET F. BROOKS

The subject for this paper was seen recently written upon a child's blackboard and suggested the following thoughts to me:

In the spring we set out in our gardens, pansies, which we have either purchased from the florist or which have sprung up from the little brown seeds which we planted some time before.

We like pansies, not because of their fragrance, for they are not as sweet smelling as some other flowers, but we enjoy them because their little faces smile at us through sunshine or summer showers. There are several colors in these little flowers of Thought. There are brown, yellow, blue, purple, black and white pansies.

There seems to be just as many kinds of individuals in the world as there are colors in pansies. Why? People who represent the brown pansies, are those who think, thinking wise, noble and useful thoughts, and they give to the world the benefit of their thinking; the civilized world is flooded today with papers and books upon all subjects which have been thought about and worked out by great men of great minds. The Bible is the gift of learned men, who thought about the ancient Egyptian hieroglyphics. God guided these men to understand and helped them to translate these strange looking characters into letters and words; into the languages of all nations, thus giving each individual the opportunity of reading God's Word and receiving His personal message from the Book of Books.
